We cannot reconcile ourselves to the fact, V.V. Shcherbitskiy continued, that party and soviet organs recently have slackened their attention to the general education and vocational school reform. In fact, it is impossible today to name an oblast where all the tasks of the reform have been accomplished comprehensively, fully, and according to set schedules.

The leaders of the Ivano-Frankovsk, Kirovgrad, Crimean, Lvov, Rovno, and some other oblispolkoms still make little effort to organize the reconstruction and completion of the schools for admission of children at the age of 6 years. Voroshilovgrad, Donetsk, Zaporozhye, and Ternopol Oblasts are not fulfilling the plans for the construction of interschool production training combines and for setting up training workshops and sectors in production operations.

The fact that the Ukrainian SSR Ministry of Motor Transport, Ministry of Power and Electrification, Ministry of Local Industry, Ministry of the Coal Industry, and Ministry of Consumer Services have only fulfilled by 50 percent their tasks for providing work placed for school children can only be explained by insufficient interest on the part of leaders of these ministries. And yet, the fact is that the organization of productive work represents the key task of the reform.

Under the measures that have been worked out, it is planned to eliminate the shortcomings and omissions in the implementation of the school reform within a short time. The Council of Ministers

(Comrades M.A. Orlik and N.F. Nikolayev), leaders of the Ministry of Education, the State Committee for Vocational and Technical Education, and other ministries and departments, and party committees and soviet ispolkoms must concern themselves with these urgent problems constantly and, most importantly, more effectively.

THe need for preschool institutions must be fully met in the current 5-year plan period, and the local soviet ispolkoms in Kiev, Donetsk, and Zhitomir Oblasts must especially concern themselves with this task.

It is also necessary to tackle the task of improving health services and of strengthening the supply basis of these services. The fact is that quite a few hospitals still lack water supply, sewerage, and central heating systems. And in this situation, many oblasts systematically fail to absorb the capital investment allotted for these purposes. For instance, a large hospital in Krivoy Rog has been under construction for 10 years now; a hospital in Voroshilovgrad has been under construction since 1977; and the hospitals in Donetsk and Dnepropetrovsk have been under constructions since 1979. The Council of Ministers and the obkoms and oblispolkoms must correct this situation in the shortest possible time.

Special attention must be devoted to mother and child care. Despite the fact that in recent years the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Ukraine has more than once addressed itself to this question of paramount importance, the Ministry of Health and Minister A.Ye. Romanenko personally as well as many oblispolkoms have failed to make proper conclusions. Thus, in December last year the Central Committee Secretariat discussed the state of affairs in this sector and noted serious omissions in the work of maternity institutions and the medical care for newborns. Immediate measures were determined to eliminate these omissions. And now it must be noted again that no essential progress has been made. It seems that the Ministry of Health has reconciled itself to this situation. The Science and Education Institutions Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Ukraine and the local party committees have failed to demonstrate the proper principled attitude and exactingness in this connection.

The implementation of the measures on improving medical services must be placed under the strictest everyday control; because what is involved is society's main productive force — the human factor, the health of future generations, and the demographic situation in the 21st century.

And one more thing. Health care undoubtedly is in need of assistance, the speaker continued. But we also expect more from the people directly working in this field. Unfortunately, the standard of medical services still gives rise to much unfavorable criticism. It is primarily the Communists and Komsomol members as well as all honest and conscientious medical workers — and they are in majority — who must adopt a more active attitude in this respect.

The construction sites of many cultural and sports projects, especially in villages and new urban rayons, must become shock tasks in the 12th 5-Year Plan period. We relate the activation of the mass cultural and sports work to asserting a healthy way of life and overcoming drunkenness and alcoholism.

At the same time inspections have shown that party committees and soviet and economic organs in Storozhinetskiy Rayon of Chernovtsy Oblast, Shpolyanskiy Rayon of Cherkassy Oblast, Starokonstantinovskiy Rayon of Khmelnitskiy Oblast, Sinelnikovskiy Rayon of Dnepropetrovsk Oblast, and Skolevskiy Rayon of Lvov Oblast have not really concerned themselves with the struggle against this until now, that they are not thoroughly acquainted with the state of affairs, and that they frequently magnify what has been accomplished.

The following facts show how far the irresponsibility of officials can go. Z.A. Isakov, deputy director of the Kremenchug Railway Car Building Production Association, spent 2 days "celebrating" his jubilee: 1 day "in the open air" and another day in a restaurant. General Director Yu.M. Kryukov and nearly 50 leading workers of the plant participated in this event. By decision of the Kremenchug Gorkom, Isakov was expelled from the CPSU and he was issued a strict reprimand with entry in the registration card.

A scandalous incident took place in Volovetskiy Rayon of Transcarpathian Oblast where workers of the raykom apparatus, together with the secretary of the party organization and the workshop chief of the local plant, organized a collective drinking binge which ended in a traffic accident in which one person was killed. And the law-determined result was that those guilty were expelled from the party and and the raykom first secretary was dismissed from his position.

The lovers of alcohol must understand once and for all that there will be no liberalism in relation to these questions. In this connection it is mandatory that decisions on punishment or on dismissals from positions be made public.

III. Ensuring a Qualitative Restructuring of Party Work in Conformity With New Tasks

As is known, the party is the leading and guiding force of our society. However, this does not imply by any means that it must assume all functions of administration. The party is called upon to implement the correct policy through cadres, through party committees, and through the system of social organizations. The more sanguine and substantive the internal party life is and the more persistently the statutory provisions and the Leninist principles of democratic centralism are observed in the activity of the party organization, the stronger and more effective the party's influence will be in all sectors of work.

Life has shown that party organizations achieve good results wherever the Communists are engaged in concrete tasks and not in empty talk and wherever they resolutely uncover shortcomings and actively work to eliminate them. Therefore, the main weight of our work must now be shifted precisely to the lower party links. It must be made a rule that every responsible party worker — and not only party worker — must spend at least half of his working time among people, in primary party organizations and in labor collectives, and give them practical assistance.

It is also necessary to systematically study and spread the valuable experience of such primary party organizations as the party organizations of the Sumy M.V. Frunze Machine Building Scientific-Production Association, the Dnepropetrovsk K.Ye. Voroshilov Combine Plant, the Odessa Kislorodmash Scientific-Production Association, the A.F. Zasadko coal mine, the All-Union Scientific Research and Planning and Designing Institute of Technology of Power Machine Building, the Kievlyanka knitted fabric factory, the Kirov kolkhoz in Belozerskiy Rayon of Kherson Oblast, the Rossiya kolkhoz in Krasnogvardeyskiy Rayon of Crimean Oblast, and others.

At the same time, V.V. Shcherbitskiy noted, many party and soviet organs are making only slow progress in restructuring their work style. The devotion to old forms and methods is tenacious. Thus, the work in the party organization of the Kerchmetallurgstroy trust, comprising 600 Communists, has been limping for a long time. The secretary of the party organization elected 2 years ago actively plunged into work and he needed real and concrete help; but instead of that he was constantly detracted from his work by inspections. Last year alone the accountability reports by leaders of the trust and its subdivisions were discussed 9 times by the Kerch Gorkom and Ispolkom and the Leninsky Raykom and 22 times by the city and rayon people's control committees. The trade union organs are also constantly studying and verifying something or other. And here is the result: It appears as though they are all concerning themselves with the trust, and yet the trust nevertheless failed to fulfill both the 1985 program and the 5-year plan as a whole. This style of work cannot be called anything but harmful.

Such examples were also cited in the report: Last year 143 inspections and inquiries were carried out in the Kiev Khimvolokno Production Association. In the first 1 and 1/2 months this year the Ivano-Frankovsk Oblast consumer assocation was inspected by 13 commissions.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy emphasized that if we fail to resolutely rid ourselves of these methods and of the leaders attached to them, we will achieve no restructuring in practice.

Quite a great deal has already been said about reducing the number of various conferences and sessions and of documents adopted. But the results are little more than modest. Many tasks are simply drowned in the avalanche of words and papers. The efforts of the most highly skilled workers and party, soviet, and trade union organs are wasted precisely in this way.

Thus, during the past 5-year plan period Kharkov Obkom and Oblispolkom adopted 11 resolutions on increasing the production and procurement of corn grain. But the harvest yield of corn crops continued to be one of the lowest in the republic. This, then, is the entire "effectiveness" of work.

It is obvious that the party committees and their first secretaries and bureaus still understand the need for and the essence of restructuring in various ways. For instance, last year Odessa Obkom adopted 267 resolutions and issued requests for a total of 1,200 field reports; the corresponding figures for Nikolayev Obkom were 259 resolutions and 1,020 requests for reports. At the same time, Lvov, Khmelnitskiy, and Kiev Obkoms managed with tenfold fewer reports. And this had only beneficial results. A real war must be declared against excessive paperwork, and workers must be required to concern themselves with real tasks and not with papers.

Asserting the businesslike work style in all links and at all levels depends to a decisive extent on cadres. The overwhelming majority of the republic's leading cadres are devoted to the party and prize the trust shown to them, thoroughly know their task, and keep abreast of times. But at the same time, the possibilities for improving the qualitative state of cadres are clearly insufficiently utilized. The work with cadres is poor and is conducted without any long-term planning in Transcarpathian, Volyn, Vinnitsa, Zaporozhye, and Kherson Oblasts. The obkoms of these and some other oblasts are poorly acquainted with people and do not make real efforts to seek workers who are capable of thinking and acting in the new way. And the secretaries and departments of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Ukraine also do not exercise enough influence on improving cadre work.

The situation urgently dictates the necessity to take into account new demands and, on this basis, to carefully analyze the personal composition of cadres and to see whether a given worker is capable of practically accomplishing the new tasks in the sector entrusted to him. It is necessary to recognize those who, while talking about restructuring, in practice avoid solving the problems that cannot be put off and are not restructuring but are only engaged in a put-up job. It is necessary to resolutely get rid of them, and the sooner the better.

The main attention must be devoted to the first persons, that is, the leaders whom the party and the state charged with leading collectives and elective organs. The results of activities of entire collectives depend to a decisive extent on the quality of their work.

It must become a law that, if the situation in a given sector does not improve over a certain period of time, the worker heading the sector must cede his place to someone else. This is the honest and principled party position. V.I. Lenin considered it obligatory to "replace the Communists who are not seriously learning their management tasks...."

The Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Ukraine consistently follows this line. During the last accountability and election campaign 24 obkom, gorkom, and raykom secretaries and 29 chairmen of urban rayispolkoms were dismissed for having failed to meet the requirements of the sectors entrusted to them. Several important sectors of the republic ministries and departments were also strengthened.

It is necessary to further continue to raise exactingness toward leaders. The tasks that have been set cannot be accomplished if the leading cadres do not learn to work in the new way and if irresponsibility in all its forms, liberalism, and indulgence are not eleiminated.

And all this is still encountered, and encountered quite often, the speaker noted. Comrade B.I. Turbayevskiy has held the position of first secretary of Bratskiy Raykom in Nikolayev Oblast for 18 years. And the rayon had been going downhill for two successive 5-year plan periods: The harvest yields of grain crops have declined by 4.7 quintals per hectare, and the milk yield per cow have declined by 83 kg although these yields had been below the average oblast level. At the same time, the activities of the raykom and its first secretary continued to be positively appraised during these years. Comrade Turbayevskiy was even elected as delegate to the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Ukraine.

Barskiy Raykom in Vinnitsa Oblast, headed for more than 15 years by its first secretary, Comrade A.I. Kinshchak, has noticeably lowered the standard of its work.

We ask, comrade oblast leaders, where is the exacting and principled approach here?

Analysis has shown that in other oblasts, too, there are rayons where the political and organizational work has been poorly set up and where the results of economic operations have declined. The obkoms must carefully and thoroughly study the cause of this situation and determine whether the individuals heading the party and soviet organs are able to accomplish the tasks set for them.

It is necessary to more boldly advance to leadership positions the individuals from the ranks of workers, kolhoz members, and young specialist and scientists, that is, the individual workers who have passed through a good school and have earned the right to head collectives with their work, their skills, and their knowledge. It is very important to have everywhere militant, literate, and principled secretaries of primary party organizations who must be, as we say, the conscience of their labor collectives.

A long-term approach must definitely be ensured in cadre work. However, account is not being taken of this everywhere. In Crimean Oblast, for instance, the average age of the first secretaries of gorkoms and raykoms is about 50. There is a similar position in Chernovtsy, Lvov, Ivano-Frankovsk, and Zakarpatskaya Oblasts.

Of course, we are against cadre "shake-ups," and against "rejuvenating" them artificially at any price. But there should be a line or prospects in this matter both in party organs and in soviet and economic organs.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy then dwelt on such an effective means of educating cadres as criticism and self-criticism. He said that the task is now one of making this an organic feature of the way of life and activity of every party committee and of all soviet and economic organs and social organizations. Can it be right that over the last 2 years not one of the 125 speeches at plenums of Dnepropetrovsk Obkom and at aktiv meetings has contained any criticism aimed at the obkom bureaus and secretaries? A considerable number of compliments were addressed to the obkom first secretary, though.

Party organizations of many ministries and departments exercise their right to check up on the work of the apparatus of the party organizations in a timid and circumspect manner. The party committee of the republican Ministry of Motor Transport, for example, heard the accountability reports of five Communists last year. But these all occupy posts no higher than deputy chief of an administration.

It is necessary to proceed from the fact that there can be no organizations or leaders in the party which are beyond control or protected against criticism or party responsibility.

Many soviets of peoples deputies, trade unions, people's control organs, and Komsomol committees are slow to overcome the force of inrertia, and are frequently cut off from people's concrete needs and concerns.

The greatest and, unfortunately, most widespread evil here is bureaucratism and formalism, red tape, and lack of responsibility. One sometimes wonders how far staleness and soullessness can go. In March last year a high flood carried away a small bridge across the Ingulets River between two villages in Snigirevskiy Rayon of Nikolayev Oblast. It was only 6 months later and after repeated complaints that the oblast Executive Committee decided to restore the bridge. This decision, however, remained unfulfilled. For 1 year now, the inhabitants of Novotimofeyevka have had to travel not 2 km, as before, but 50 km — and via Kherson Oblast, at that — in order to get to their village soviet in Aleksandrovka. What do Comrades L.G. Sharayev and V.I. Ilin have to say about that?

A considerable number of cases of an inattentive attitude to people can also be cited with regard to the trade unions. The Central Committee of the republican Komsomol also needs to "de-bureaucracize" the apparatus of Komsomol organs and to breathe new life into the work of the Komsomol organizations. There is work to be done everywhere and at all levels to improve and simplify the structure of the apparatus.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy emphasized that we must use the prism of the tasks set by the congress to make an attentive analysis of the level of ideological work and to gain an understanding of what concrete things need to be done in order to increase its effectiveness and its good results. It is necessary to make educational work take a sharp turn toward life and its vital needs, and also to eradicate any manifestations of formalism.

The practical and creative upsurge which our people have received from the 27th party congress should be preserved and developed in every way possible.

Guided by the party's instructions, it is necessary to implement practical steps to improve the work of the mass information and propaganda media. Matters must be organized in order to make every article and television and radio broadcast literally pulsate with life and its achievements and contradictions, profoundlyu analyse both the strong and the work aspects of work, and conduct that practical and strictly regulated discussion which creates an atmosphere of intolerance toward shortcomings, an atmosphere of concerted and creative work. However, not all newspapers, including our leading republican newspapers RADYANSKA UKRAINA and PRAVDA UKRAINY, meet these demands. It is necessary to intensify the role of television and radio as intruments of publicity and social control and as rostrums for people's social experience.

It is important to continue to improve the training and retraining of journalist cadres and to increase their responsibility for the correctness and authenticity of published material. The Union of Journalists of the Ukraine (Comrade V.A. Serobaba) must exert greater influence over increasing the effectiveness of the press.

The 27th CPSU Congress opened up new potential for the expansion of problem study and for in-depth research into problems of the development of Soviet society. Social scientists will have to carry out a thorough elaboration of the problems of accelerating socioeconomic development with application to the republic, branches of its national economy, its regions, and its labor collectives. The Presidium of the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR, and primarily Comrade I.I. Lukinov, as well as the Ministry of Higher and Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR and Comrades V.D. Parkhomenko and L.A. Kanishchenko, should involve leading scientists in research into these problems and should render them the necessary assistance.

It is also necessary to substantially strengthen the material-technical basis of ideological-educational work. No less than 40 rayon houses of culture and 541 village clubs are to be built in the present 5-year plan period. This is many more than in the last 5-year plan period.

The base of the printing industry requires serious strengthening. The State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants, and the Book Trade of the Ukrainian SSR is seriously lagging in terms of capital funds. More than half of the printing works under republican control are situated in cramped premises, many of which were constructed many years ago. Gosplan and the Council of Ministers must pay greater attention to this branch, and the State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants, and the Book Trade must show persistence in solving pressing tasks.

Many sectors of ideological work thus have their own problems which must be solved without any postponement. It must not be forgotten that educational work is being conducted in an atmosphere of acute ideological conflict. The ideological diversions of the class enemy are intensifying rather than weakening. For this reason it is necessary to further perfect counterpropaganda, to improve the patriotic and international education of our people, and to strengthen friendship between the peoples of the USSR.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy noted that it possible to say without exaggeration that there is a great amount of intense work to be done in all sectors. A considerable number of difficulties have to be overcome, also. The complexity, scale, and newness of the tasks call for decisive, purposeful actions and for an ability to organize matters in a practical manner and in accordance with contemporary demands.

Many of the issues being discussed today were touched on to a greater or lesser extent at the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Ukraine. A total of 58 delegates spoke at the congress and they voiced 215 proposals and critical remarks, that is, 1.6 times more than at the previous congress. Considerably more critical remarks and proposals were made about questions of improving planning, of managing and perfecting the economic mechanism, of the technical reequipment and reconstruction of enterprises and the agro-industrial complex, of social development, and of the style and methods of party work.

Many requests and proposals concerned the more precise definition of tasks for the 12th 5-Year Plan period and are being taken into account in the compilation of the 5-year plan. Individual proposals were designed for the long term and need to be studied. The critical remarks, proposals, and requests addressed to the union organs have been sent to the USSR Council of Ministers, while those addressed to the republican organs have been sent to the Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR.

The Central Committee Politburo of the Communist Party of the Ukraine considers the remarks and proposals of the delegates to be of great political and practical significance. The departments of the republican Communist Party Central Committee have been charged with establishing control over the examination of these remarks and proposals and with ensuring that an active role is taken by the party organizations of ministries and departments, associations, and enterprises in the implementation of the decisions which were adopted.

In conclusion, V.V. Shcherbitskiy said:

The basic task in organizing the fulfillment of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Ukraine is one of concentrating forces in the decisive sector and of not drowning in petty affairs. The attention of all party, soviet, and economic organs and social organizations must be concentrated on implementing practical measures in the concrete conditions of each branch, each oblast, rayon, town or village, and labor collective. It is extremely important to precisely define what must be done in each sector of work, how it must be done, and who is personally responsible for the solution of one question or another. The Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee has outlined the paramount measures in the organization of fulfillment of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. Organizational and political measures prepared by the Politburo are being submitted for examination by the Central Committee plenum. We have striven to make this document maximally concrete, and to make it embrace all basic issues connected with the organization of fulfillment of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Ukraine.

Success will be ensured if every Communist and every Soviet person is involved in the practical work to implement the plans outlined by the party.

Today we must work better than yesterday, and tomorrow we must work better than today. We must firmly and consistently implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, ensure the necessary acceleration of the development of the republic's production forces, and augment its contribution to strengthening the might of our beloved motherland.

V.V. Shcherbitskiy spoke in conclusion at the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee plenum. As we should have expected, he said, all of the comrades who spoke expressed the opinion of the republic's Communists in unanimously approving the congress decisions and fully supporting the party's strategic course in the sphere of domestic and foreign policy. Work has begun everywhere to implement the tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress. But it is not being conducted everywhere with the proper intensity or the necessary rhythm.

Today's discussion also showed that everyone understands first of all that the most important condition for the implementation of the set tasks is reorganization of the forms and methods of work; second, that the main direction for achieving the set goals is scientific-technological progress; third, that it is necessary to draw principled and practical conclusions from the shortcomings of past years; and finally, that there is a general understanding that the most difficult and responsible work lies ahead.

We are obliged to do everything possible in order to ensure the stable working of the national economy and to reach the highest level of indices envisaged in the Basic Guidelines by the end of the 12th 5-Year Plan period. It is important that everyone engage in concrete, live practical work without waiting for new forms of management and a new economic mechanism to fully appear.

A recent visit to the "Bolshevik" Production Association, a meeting with bureau members of Shevchenkovskiy Raykom in Kiev, and conversations with workers, specialists, and party workers convince me that people understand what needs to be done and they are doing it quite well, without wasting time. In agriculture, according to the information at the disposal of the Central Committee, many kolkhoz and sovkhoz leaders are still vacillating. Serious attention must be paid to this.

An example of a responsible and creative attitude to work — an example of selflessness, if you like — must be set first by our elective party aktiv, which numbers 857,000 people, and by the delegates of the 27th CPSU Congress and the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Ukraine.

We must organize work so that everyone can fulfill his obligations at his post in a conscientious and creative manner, with a knowledge of the work, and to the fullest extent. In order to successfully solve the tasks facing us, it is necessary first to eliminate the serious shortcomings in the organization and verification of fulfillment. It is necessary to renounce formalism and bureaucratism and to be more energetic in introducing those forms of work which are of benefit and which bring real returns.

In general, a great amount of intensive work must be done. There are complex tasks, very complex tasks. It is important to gain an understanding of each of them, to find reliable ways of solving them, and to mobilize people to overcome difficulties, and to do all this in good time. A prominent position is being taken today by the ability to make a deep study of the problems which arise, and by the ability to solve problems effectively and professionally — not to delegate them, as frequently happens. After a decision is made, it is important to be able to organize matters so that the necessary end results can be obtained.

It is necessary to emphasize repeatedly that party committees must implement policy through cadres, through the primary party and social organizations, and not replace soviet and economic organs. It is necessary to be guided strictly by the CPSU Statutes approved by the 27th party congress.

Briefly, everyone must reorient himself in a serious fashion. The more quickly we do this, the better all the tasks will be solved.

RSFSR Council of Ministers Presidium Meets

PM141315 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 9 Apr 86 First Edition p 3

[Unattributed report: "At the RSFSR Council of Ministers"]

[Text] Questions of the development of the material and technical base of TV broadcasting in the RSFSR and the improvement of the services provided to the population by radio and TV were examined at the latest RSFSR Council of Ministers Presidium. It was noted that in recent years a number of important projects have been implemented that make it possible for 97 percent of the republic's population to receive TV broadcasts. However, now that the 27th CPSU Congress has set the task of further developing TV broadcasting, these successes are no longer satisfactory.

The RSFSR Council of Ministers gave soviet ispolkoms, ministries, and departments specific instructions to successfully fulfill the task set by the party congress. It is also planned to ensure that TV programs can be received everywhere by the end of the 12th 5-Year Plan. The republic Council of Ministers Presidium discussed the state of work to certify output and step up state monitoring of its quality at industrial enterprises of RSFSR ministries and departments. An important role in this activity must be played by the RSFSR State Committee for Standards Administration and by quality checks. The RSFSR Government outlined specific measures to ensure the successful resolution of the task of improving output quality. The session heard a report from Nizhniy Tagil Gorispolkom on the participation of base enterprises and educational establishments in the labor education, training, and vocational orientation of students. Local ispolkoms were instructed to step up attention to involving students in socially useful and productive labor on the basis of the experience of people in the Urals. The RSFSR Council of Ministers Presidium also examined other questions of the republic's life.

CSA Official Describes Jan-Mar Industrial Results

LD211553 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Talk by Vladimir Ivanovich Tolkushin, chief of the Industrial Statistics Administration of the USSR Central Statistical Administration — live]

[Excerpt] The plan for basic food products was fulfilled and output of these increased. The scale of technical reequipment and reconstruction of industrial enterprises increased; capital investments for these purposes increased 30 percent over the same period last year. More than 1,500 automatic, rotor, rotor-conveyor, and mechanized flow lines have been installed; 290 new types of output have been assimilated and put into production, including construction materials and efficient equipment for the fuel industry, machine building, and agriculture.

Industrial associations and enterprises operating under the new economic conditions achieved higher results. Individual industries and a number of associations and enterprises have been slow to restructure their operations in the light of the new requirements; and in the quarter which has elapsed they operated at a level below their existing potential. While the plan for marketing of output was exceeded, the plan as a whole, when contractural and delivery obligations are taken into account, was underfulfilled by R2.1 billion. The greatest delay in deliveries occurred in associations and enterprises of the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry, the Ministry of the Timber, Pulp, and Paper and Wood-Processing Industry, and the Ministry of Light Industry. The tasks of the plan for the development of science and technology were not fulfilled in full measure.

In realizing the tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress, the labor collectives of associations and enterprises in industry are mobilizing the existing reserves for the successful fulfillment of the 1986 plan.

Ryabov Attends Steel Industry Collegium Session

PM161533 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 13 Apr 86 p 3

[Report by O. Buzuluk: "Collegium Session"]

[Text] Moscow — Developing the successes achieved during the precongress shock vigil, ferrous metallurgy enterprise collectives have coped with the first quarter plan in all indicators and produced many hundreds of thousands of metric tons of cast iron, steel, rolled metal, and other products in excess of the plan. The entire increase in output was due to improved labor productivity.

What internal reserves must be brought into play in order to improve the sector's work in the light of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions? This was discussed at a session of the USSR Ministry of Ferrous Metallurgy enlarged Collegium and the sector trade union Central Committee Presidium. USSR Minister of Ferrous Metallurgy S. Kolpakov delivered a report.

He and the other speakers expressed concern at the fact that 100-percent fulfillment of the national economy's orders has not been achieved everywhere, especially in the case of economical and scarce metal products; equipment is still standing idle; introduction of progressive techniques and technology is slow; and modernization and revamping of production is proceeding at an unsatisfactory rate.

The enlarged Collegium session was attended by Ya. Ryabov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; I. Yastrebov, chief of the CPSU Central Committee Heavy Industry and Power Engineering Department; and senior officials from ministries and departments.

[TASS-SELSKAYA ZHIZN report: "At the CPSU Central Committee"]

[Text] A conference was held at the CPSU Central Committee on 5 April for secretaries of union republic Communist Party central committees and party kraykoms and obkoms; chairmen of union and autonomous republic state agro-industrial committees and kray and oblast agro-industrial committees; chairmen of republic, kray, and oblast consumer society boards; secretaries of party raykoms; chairmen of rayon agro-industrial associations; leaders of ministries and departments; scientists; and leaders and specialists of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and other agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations.

The following took part in the conference's work: V.I. Vorotnikov, L.N. Zaykov, and Ye.K. Ligachev, members of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo; N.V. Talyzin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo; A.P. Biryukova and V.P. Nikonov, secretaries of the CPSU Central Committee; and senior officials of the CPSU Central Committee, USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and the USSR Council of Ministers.

The conference examined the tasks of party, soviet, and economic organs in fulfilling the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution "On Further Improving the Economic Management Mechanism in the Country's Agro-Industrial Complex."

The conference was opened by Ye.K. Ligachev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo. He said: It is only 1 month since the 27th party congress. It was a congress where strategic decisions were taken. The program documents adopted by it and the spirit of creative criticism prevailing at the congress are having a profound impact on the development of Soviet society. There can be no doubt that as the tasks set by the congress are carried out, the influence of its ideas and directives in all spheres of social life will increase.

The party has launched organizational and political work to implement the outlined plans both centrally and at local level. A political and labor upsurge by the masses is perceptible everywhere. The movement of labor collectives to meet the national economic targets for the first year of the 12th 5-Year Plan ahead of schedule and meet the targets for the first 2 years of the 5-year plan by the 70th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution is expanding.

The Central Committee has defined immediate and long-term measures to fulfill the congress resolution and the ideas and directives contained in the Central Committee Political Report. A list of questions for examination in the Central Committee Politburo and Secretariat has been outlined.

In accordance with the congress' instruction, the CPSU Central Committee Politburo has adopted decisions on such important questions as the management of the country's fuel and energy complex, the switching of capital construction over to normative schedules, and the intensification of the struggle against unearned income.

The 27th party congress set a task of special importance: the task of ensuring very rapidly that the country is fully provided with food.

Guided by the 27th party congress' decisions, the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have adopted a resolution on the economic management mechanism in the country's agro-industrial complex. This fundamentally important policy document was drafted on the initiative and with the direct involvement of Comrade M.S. Gorbachev.

I should like to particularly stress that the improvement of the economic management mechanism in the agrarian sector is wholly planned to strengthen and develop relations of financial autonomy — financial autonomy that is real and complete, not sham or partial — with all links of the agro-industrial complex, and above all kolkhozes and sovkhozes, being switched over to paying their own way and self-financing. Financial autonomy is the chief means of developing the agro-industrial complex. It must be firmly grasped that the economic mechanism cannot really function or be efficient without effective financial autonomy. The economic measures set out in the adopted party and government document must also be directed to that end.

As you can see, management conditions are undergoing substantial changes. The organizational and economic reorganization of agro-industrial management requires all party, soviet, and managerial organs to approach the leadership of agriculture differently and demands change in their work style and methods.

Cadre policy must be the focus of party committees' activity. Developing enterprises, creative boldness, competence, and profound economic thinking are the party organizations' main concern. Therein lies the very essence of what is now occurring in our society, which is undergoing reorganization. Therein, too, lies all its complexity. No economic measures will yield the required return, Ye.K. Ligachev stressed, if agricultural enterprises do not have a stable body of competent specialists and leaders. This fully applies to cadre in mass trades.

Speaking about party leadership of agro-industrial production and science, Ye.K. Ligachev stressed the local party committees' responsibility for agro-industrial management organs' activities. He said that now, when integrated agro-industrial management organs are taking their first steps, it is particularly appropriate to remind them about exercising their rights, discharging their duties, and fulfilling their specific responsibility at every level of management. The organizational restructuring may founder if the different levels of management organs duplicate or confuse their tasks and functions. This must be prevented. Particular care must be shown toward agro-industrial management organs' primary party organizations.

If you ask what is most characteristic of the party and government document on questions of the agro-industrial complex's management mechanism, the following, highly concise answer may be given. Namely, that it involves not only an expansion of managerial rights and an increase in economic interest but also increased responsibility on the part of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, associated enterprises, and territorial management organs and leaders for improving the supply of food products to the local population.

A procedure is now being introduced whereby everything remaining after products have been supplied to central stocks goes to local supply.

The Central Committee is increasing its demands on oblasts and republics to improve the supply of food products to the population by exploiting local potential. This was the aim of the reports by the Novosibirsk and Voroshilovgrad Obkoms heard at the Central Committee. The demands on local organs in this regard will increase.

The most important thing, Ye.K. Ligachev concluded, is to obtain a high return from the organizational and economic reorganization of the country's agrarian management and the resources allocated for the economic and social development of the country's agro-industrial complex, to substantially boost the volume of agricultural products, and to reduce relative expenditure on its production.

A report was delivered by V.S. Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee.

The decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress plan a considerable increase in the growth rates of agricultural production. An entire range of scientific, technical, management organization, and economic measures making it possible to steadily increase the production potential of agro-industrial complex sectors must be carried out and existing capacities used more intensively if this is to be achieved. The improvement of the economic management mechanism outlined in the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution is such a measure. It envisages a switch to a more progressive, normative method of planning, a new procedure of economic production incentives, a stronger link between labor remuneration and labor results, the development of labor collectives' economic initiative, and the introduction of economic methods in the management of the agro-industrial complex.

The decision on a stable plan for state procurements of grain at the level of the 1986 plan, V.S. Murakhovskiy said, is of fundamental importance. At the same time, the state has adopted additional measures to increase the sale of grain to the state. What will this yield in reality?

Let us take Altay Kray. In the last 5-year plan kolkhozes and sovkhozes there earned R271 million on average per year from grain sales. Experts calculate that in carrying out the current year's plan, the farms will earn R570 million, including R170 million from price increases. The profit level on grain production will increase by 10 percent. In the country as a whole, kolkhozes and sovkhzoes that fulfill the grain sales plan will earn an extra more than R1.3 billion (annually).

Farms that overfulfill the grain sales plan will, as an incentive, be provided with trucks, tractors, construction materials, and other resources in short supply without payment.

Measures are envisaged that will not only provide incentives for grain production but also will increase acountability for the rational use of grain. This is very important. The point is that a number of places are not meeting their targets for feed production and procurement, and their shortfall is being made up by increased consumption of grain as feed. In Yaroslav Oblast, in the last 15 years the proportion of hay within the structure of feed for dairy stock has more than halved and the proportion of pasture feed has fallen by one-third. On the other hand, the proportion of concentrates has doubled, and cows' milk yield has declined by 500 kg. The consumption of concentrates per quintal is high in Kemerovo, Sverdlovsk, and Irkutsk Oblasts and in the Uzbek and Azerbaijan SSR's.

Complete responsibility for ensuring that livestock is provided with protein-balanced feed and that it is used rationally now rests with the agro-industrial committees. Beginning in 1987, the program for production of mixed feed and protein and vitamin additives and for their range will be determined by the republics themselves on the basis of the extensive use of local resources for its manufacture. Nutrients, meat-and-bone meal, and other high-protein additives produced in excess of the plan by enterprises on the territory of an oblast, kray, or republic will remain entirely at their disposal.

New norms are being introduced that will allow farms that cultivate sugar beets, sunflowers, and soybeans to barter their produce for mixed feed and molasses; the distribution of cake is also being resumed.

Work to boost the production of vegetable protein must be stepped up. In the current 5-year plan the gross harvest of pulse crops must be doubled, the harvested area of alfalfa and clover expanded, and the yield and production of sunflowers and soybeans increased.

Rape cultivation constitutes a large reserve. Many farms in Lipetsk, Ivano-Frankovsk, Minsk, Moscow, and Omsk Oblasts obtain 20 or more quintals of rape seed per hectare. In addition to the oil, 10-12 quintals of oil-seed meal are obtained. Farms in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Belorussia and the RSFSR non-Chernozem Zone, however, pay scant attention to this crop.

The resolution envisages considerably increasing the interest and responsibility of local organs for boosting production of foodstuffs and improving their supply to the population. Union republics, autonomous republics, krays, and oblasts will not be set targets for state purchases of livestock, poultry, milk, eggs, potatoes, fruit, or vegetables. They will be set volumes of these kinds of products for supply to all-union and republic funds or subsidies from them. The level of supply here will be firmly estalished for each year. All output after supplies to the funds have been met is to be retained locally.

The problem of supplying the population with meat and meat products remains most acute. The main way to resolve it is by intensifying stockraising on kolkhozes and sovkhozes and considerably increasing livestock and poultry productivity.

At the same time far better use must be made of the potential of subsidiary plots belonging to enterprises and organizations.

Substantially more meat and other produce for local consumption can and must be obtained from the population's personal subsidiary plots.

Unfortunately, that is not being taken into account everywhere. In Ryazan, Gorkiy, Ulyanovsk, Kherson, Mogilev, and some other oblasts and republics, meat and milk production on personal subsidiary plots actually declined the past 10 years.

To more closely combine the interests of public-sector farms and personal plots, it is deemed expedient to provide for their needs in kolkhoz and sovkhoz production and finance plans. The meat produced on these farms and sold to the consumer cooperative will be included in kolkhoz and sovkhoz sales plans. Each kolkhoz and sovkhoz must help them by supplying feed; selling them more young pigs, poultry, and calves; and improving the organization of the reception and shipment of produce.

It is possible in practice for every oblast, kray, and republic to produce a sufficient quantity of potatoes and other vegetables. But in a number of places people have lost interest in growing this produce for themselves and instead rely on shipments from elsewhere. It is intolerable that farms in Kursk Oblast harvest only 52 quintals of potatoes per hectare, while farms in Ivanovo Oblast produce 67 quintals per hectare, those in Orel Oblast grow 70 quintals per hectare, Ryazan Oblast's farms achieve 78 quintals per hectare, and in Kaluga Oblast the figure is 81 quintals per hectare. In the past 5-year plan Ivanovo and Vladimir Oblasts imported cabbage, while Yaroslavl and Gorkiy Oblasts imported onions. This year oblasts in the Ukraine have requested supplies of onions, peppers, garlic, and dried fruits.

It is important to firmly uphold the right granted to farms to sell above-plan produce to consumer cooperatives and in markets. Taking guidance from the resolution and without waiting for additional instructions, the Tsentrosoyuz and consumer cooperative organizations at the republic and local level must immediately organize long-term contracts for the purchase of produce form kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and the population and ensure that the procurement and trade network is developed and strengthened. Consumer cooperatives must occupy a firm position in kolkhoz markets and actively influence prices.

A major part of the report was devoted to the intensification of labor activeness and ensuring an interested attitude on the part of each worker, kolkhoz member, specialist, and leader to his allotted task. True financial autonomy and the dependence of enterprises' incomes on end results must be the norm for all elements of the agro-industrial complex, primarily kolkhozes and sovkhozes.

In recent years certain work has been done to introduce autonomous financing and the collective contract on kolkhozes and sovkhozes. Now one-third of kolkhozes and one-fourth of sovkhozes achieve a profit of over 25 percent and one-tenth of farms achieve a profit of over 40 percent. There are no loss-making farms now in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania and Moscow, Leningrad, Lipetsk, Chernovitsy, Grodno, Brest, and some other oblasts.

However, as the results of zonal conferences have shown, during the introduction of autonomous financing and the collective contract, many kolkhozes and sovkhozes permit much formalism, are poor at accounting, and are lax at linking labor remuneration and end results.

Production costs are increasing. They rose considerably per R100 of gross agricultural output in the 11th 5-Year Plan. Last year direct production costs on the country's kolkhozes and sovkhozes were several billion rubles above the plan targets.

Things cannot go on like that. The rise in costs must be halted and a 5-7 percent reduction in output prime costs must be achieved during the 5-year plan. A mechanism has been provided for influencing these processes. Approximately 70 percent of the amount of direct costs saved will be paid out to collectives, and overexpenditure will be recouped from resources provided for collectives' labor remuneration and bonuses.

In this connection it is very important to correctly fix production volumes and cost limits for each financially autonomoous subunit and to apply well-founded normatives; otherwise large overpayments of undeserved penalties may be inflicted on labor collectives. Rayon agro-industrial associations and agro-industrial committees must ensure that the new conditions governing bonuses for thrift and responsibility for overexpenditure are an important means of struggle against mismangement and wastefulness.

The skillful distribution of increasing incomes is an important question. In a number of places, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan, for example, consumption funds have grown faster than production expansion funds. Often those sums obtained as additions to purchase prices are spent on secondary needs rather than on the further development of production as envisaged by the relevant decision. There are still cases where labor remuneration on unprofitable farms is even higher than on profitable ones.

Analysis shows that the prime cost of crop and livestock produce generally increases on those kolkhozes and sovkhozes where autonomous financing has not been assimilated, where intrafarm specialization has not been carried out, and where the shop system of management has not been introduced.

The bank credit procedure is being changed. Farms' responsibility for the prompt repayment of loans is being increased. As they become ready, sovkhozes and other enterprises will switch to finance from oblast and kray budgets.

Under these conditions agro-industrial committees and associations must show increased attention to questions of financial support for production.

Rayon agro-industrial associations and agro-industrial committees must determine which farms are to work right now on the basis of self-financing and which will temporarily be allocated budget appropriations and resources from the centralized fund. For the latter, however, subsidy normatives must be established which exclude dependence.

To develop the economy of weak farms, wider use must be made of the experience of advanced kolkhozes and sovkhozes, which have achieved high economic indicators on the basis of autonomous financing and the collective contract. For example, the Kalinin kolkhoz in Zaporozhye Oblast, the "Stepnoy" sovkhoz in Kalmyk ASSR, and "Nazarovskiy" sovkhoz in Krasnoyarsk Kray have different natural and climatic conditions but achieve high profitability year after year. Exemplary farms of this kind are to be found in all republics, krays, oblasts, and in many rayons. As a rule those farms have introduced the shop system of management, a rational production structure, efficient intrafarm planning, and good accounting and economic analysis, and have a system of labor remuneration closely linked to end results. Their experience must be introduced energetically and consistently.

The resolution outlines fundamental changes in the material incentive system for kolkhoz members, workers, farm leaders and specialists, rayon agro-industrial associations, and agro-industrial committees. The new economic mechanism provides conditions under which efficient farms will be able to pay their workers more; build housing and social, cultural, and consumer facilities; and resolve other social questions more successfully.

Agro-industrial committees, rayon agro-industrial associations, and kolkhoz and sovkhoz leaders must ensure that the collective contract becomes the predominant form of labor organization and remuneration within 2 years. The country already has a few good examples of the skillful use of contractual principles. They must be extended and deepened. This form is the most effective at cutting costs and closely links material incentives with the level of labor productivity and the saving of material resources.

Here are just two examples. During the first year of operation of the cost-cutting form of labor remuneration at the "Za Mir" kolkhoz in Lithuania, production increased by 11 percent, prime costs decreased by 4 percent, and the consumption of fuels and lubricants decreased by 14 percent and that of spares by 34 percent. The "Kazminskiy" kolkhoz in Stavropol Kray has been basing labor remuneration on gross income for 10 years now and in the 11th 5-Year Plan increased the production of gross output by 70 percent, labor productivity by 50 percent, and gross income by 100 percent in comparison with the 10th 5-Year Plan. Labor remuneration increased by 40 percent.

The introduction of progressive forms of labor organization and remuneration can only produce a high effect when organizational and economic work are intensified. No effect is achieved where this work is lax and where economic questions are not tackled daily.

There are examples to illustrate that. The number of contract collectives would appear to be large in some oblasts; but crop yield and livestock productivity are increasing slowly, farms' economies remain weak, and production is essentially not developing. Why is that? This is what happens when the principles of the contract are not observed, contract terms are breached, and team and link leaders are limited in their power to tackle day-to-day economic questions. A number of farms set incorrect production norms and rates per unit of output. Serious omissions have occurred in labor remuneration: on some farms it has remained based on the amount of work completed, that is, on the amount "clocked up," while in other "wage leveling" has flourished.

Autonomous financing and new progressive forms of labor organization and remuneration are most effective where costs are well monitored. Experience shows that the checkbook form [chekovaya forma] of reciprocal financial transactions is the best method of monitoring costs. It must be introduced everywhere.

The measures envisaged in the resolution on improving the economic mechanism require the strengthening of the economic services and the improvement of planning and economic work at all levels of management.

The resolution stresses that the most important tasks in the capital construction sphere are to further increase the effectiveness of capital investments, ensure that projects are built in strict accordance with the prescribed timetable, and accelerate the social reorganization of the countryside as a most important factor for creating stable labor collectives.

The rights of the leaders of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and agro-industrial enterprises and organs in the use of capital investments are being considerably expanded. Beginning next year, all plan indicators in capital construction will be determined by sovkhozes and other enterprises within the limits of the capital investments allocated to them. They have been granted the right to independently formulate plans and estimates for the retooling and modernization of simple production facilities and also to draw up model plans for farm buildings, feed shops, and other buildings and premises.

Measures have been determined to encourage the development of the method of construction using one's own resources. It is deemed expedient to provide the construction materials and other resources for that method.

The rights and independence granted in the construction sphere place great responsibility on the leaders of kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and agro-industrial complex enterprises and organizations. As a rule, farms must now carry out construction work from their own resources.

The creation of integrated construction organizations and their subordination to rayon agro-industrial associations and oblast, kray, and republic agro-industrial committees offers extensive opportunities for considerably increasing the effectiveness of construction and expanding the scale of work to create a powerful agro-industrial complex infrastructure, particularly in the storage and processing sphere and the development of the countryside.

New opportunities are opening up for increasing production efficiency and stepping up the integration of agriculture and the processing sectors. However, those opportunities are by no means efficiently utilized everywhere. The departmental isolation of enterprises in the meat, dairy, and food industries and construction organizations persists in a number of oblasts. Central newspapers carry quite a lot of criticism about sluggishness in completing reconstruction. Meat, dairy, and food industry associations, construction associations, and so forth have virtually all been retained in Saratov Oblast. Thus old-style departmental interests are making their presence felt in the new formations of the agro-industrial complex.

Diffidence and indeciveness in management restructuring are characteristic of a number of oblasts in the RSFSR, the Ukraine, Uzbekistan, and some other republics. This leads to the preservation of departmental separation at oblast, kray, and ASSR level. In view of this situation, the real and effective integration of agriculture and related industrial sectors cannot be secured. And yet therein lies the main point of the entire organizational restructuring and the tremendous advantages which it is meant to provide. Shortcomings should be eliminated immediately; restructuring must be really completed; and the planning, financing, and management of the entire agro-industrial complex as an integrated whole must be ensured in practice.

The creation of a new management system will produce the necessary effect only if there is a clear definition of the rights, duties, and specific responsibilities of each tier of management. Attention must be drawn particularly to the practical work of rayon agro-industrial associations. They are closest of all to production and it is primarily their purposeful activity which determines success. All rayon-level enterprises must be transferred to rayon agro-industrial associations.

At the oblast and republic level, wider use should be made of the method of creating science-and-production and production associations and systems centered on advanced farms and scientific institutions. These base enterprises with high indicators in, for example, the production of sugar beet and corn, must pass on advance experience to their zone's sovkhozes and kolkhozes on a mutually advantageous basis.

The focal point of all organizational work must now be shifted to farms, enterprises, crop and livestock units, and shops so as to ensure the most efficient use of land, production capital, equipment, raw materials, and financial and labor resources.

The major tasks facing the agro-industrial complex in light of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions require a fundamental improvement of cadre training and retraining. An integrated system must be established for training cadres in the mass trades: machine operators, stock raisers, operators, and foremen. They must be helped to master progressive techniques and the latest working methods. This training must be organized everywhere and conducted systematically. The retraining of specialists and leaders must be organized and help must be given to them in assimilating advanced experience and economic management methods. Furthermore, training must be based on the advanced experience available within each kray, oblast, and republic.

This spring is the agro-industrrial complex' first major test. To complete the overwintering of livestock in a well-organized manner and carry out the spring sowing carefully and to a high agrotechnical standard are tasks of paramount significance. The main efforts must be channeled into strengthening discipline, order, and organization to ensure that, as the party demands, this year constitutes a breakthrough in drastically increasing agricultural production and improving the population's supply of foodstuffs.

The conference participants unanimously approved the resolution formulated by the party and government to improve the economic mechanism of management in the agro-industrial complex. Speeches stressed the need to make full use of the new, favorable management conditions for accelerating the pace of production, improving output quality, and considerably increasing the return on the potential that has been created.

Many elements of the new economic mechanism are already being worked out in practice in the system of the RSFSR agro-industrial complex, as L.B. Yermin, chairman of the RSFSR State Agro-Industrial Committee [Gosagroprom], reported. In particular, the republic has experience in using the normative method of production planning, labor remuneration based on gross income, and the improvement of economic relations between agriculture and the processing and service sectors in conditions of their close integration. Beginning this year an experiment will be conducted on the basis of Stavropol Kray and six rayons in other oblasts to transfer farms to self-financing and full financial autonomy. Using the example set by the "Kuba" rayon agro-industrial association in Krasnodar Kray, it is planned to organize highly integrated agro-industrial production units on the basis of rayons in the Moscow region. The RSFSR Gosagroprom has begun work to analyze in depth the economic activity of kolkhozes and sovkhozes aimed at the extensive assimilation of the resource-normative method of planning [resursno-normativnyy metod planirovaniya]. To accelerate that, the USSR Gosplan and Gosagroprom must speed up the formulation of union-wide normatives and pass them on to the republics, in the speaker's opinion.

That request was supported in the speech by I.A. Mozgovoy, secretary of the Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee. As the basis for transferring to the new principles of economic management he cited the universal dissemination of the collective contract and, in particular, the integral process [skvoznoy] contract, which links all the production subunits of a farm by relations based on autonomous financing. This progressive form of contract has already been introduced with regard to kolkhozes and sovkhozes in the Ukraine. At the same time the family and individual contracts are still being poorly assimilated in the republic.

In the initial stage of the restructuring of the economic mechanism, the scientific and psychological preparedness of cadres is of paramount importance. A plan has been devised in the republic to provide economic training for leading workers of oblast agro-industrial committees and rayon agro-industrial associations and farm leaders and specialists.

In ensuring successful implementation of measures to improve the rural economy, the speaker stressed the importance of strictly monitoring the comparability of prices of products of exchange between industry and agriculture.

N.I. Dementey, secretary of the Belorussian Communist Party Central Committee, said that by the end of the current 5-year plan the republic plans to switch all kolkhozes and sovkhozes to the principles of self-financing and financial autonomy. To achieve that, it is planned to develop the production of the basic types of produce at the preferential rate prescribed by the 5-year plan. Work to renew economic methods of management will be carried out at the same time. The resource-normative approach is already being partially used in Belorussia in the planning of output purchases and summarizing farm competition results. On that basis agro-industrial committees and associations are now specifying the scale of the resources necessary for farms and their potential to fulfill and even exceed the plan targets. In order to provide all kolkhozes and sovkhozes with identical economic conditions, the republic's Gosagroprom is drawing up lists of farms in receipt of supplements to produce purchase prices and is looking into the validity of the scale of those supplements. Preparation is also under way to ensure from next year the introduction of a new procedure for awarding bonuses for the profitability of production.

E.Kh. Gukasov, chairman of the Kazakh SSR Gosagroprom, noted in his speech that the new procedure of additional payments for the above-plan sale of grain and produce deliveries to the union funds will undoubtedly be a powerful incentive for the further development of the Kazakh agro-industrial complex' economy. The extension of kolkhoz and sovkhoz rights in the capital construction sphere, the rights granted to agro-industrial committees to dispose of material and financial resources, and the procedure which has been introduced for awarding bonuses for reducing production costs are of great significance. After describing what they intend to do in the republic to exercise those rights and fulfill that potential, the speaker submitted a proposal to allow above-plan deliveries of livestock produce to be credited to the following year's plan in order to prevent artificial restraints on its procurement. Consideration should also be given to material incentive measures for the leaders and specialists of those farms which have already reached a high level of development of production and cannot achieve a high average annual increase in production.

The republic's party organizations are directing agro-industrial organs toward the speediest improvement of the economic mechanism in light of local conditions, V.A. Antonov, secretary of the Uzbekistan Communist Party Central Committee, said in his speech. The existing style and methods of cadres' work requires thorough restructuring. It must be acknowledged that by no means everyone has yet mastered the autonomous financing methods of management. For that reason the the prime task is to provide economic training for all — from team leaders to agro-industrial committee leaders. At the same time the transfer of farm subunits to autonomous financing and the collective contract is being speeded up.

Leaders of republic agro-industrial complexes are instructed to make maximum use of the favorable potential contained in the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution. This also applies to such questions as the alteration of purchase prices for certain types of produce and to supplying the local population with foodstuffs, particularly livestock products. The tried and tested method of accepting cotton according to its fiber content and of offering incentives to cotton growers for achieving high quality output is being improved.

The "Pridonskoy" sovkhoz in Rostov Oblast is a progressive farm. Its working people also worked profitably in the past. An asute capital investment policy with emphasis on the active part of capital investments and the workers' improved housing and cultural-domestic conditions helped. Now things will go even better. Ye.A. Golovchanskiy, director of the sovkhoz, spoke confidently of this. The farm will be able to make an additional profit of R200,000 thanks to the new procedure for product purchases alone. Bartering [otovarivaniye] commodity sunflowers for oilseed meal will make it possible to improve livestock rations, appreciably reduce feed expenditure per unit of livestock product, and produce additional tens of metric tons of meat and milk. The new principles for selling potatoes and vegetables will help to improve relations with the sponsor enterprises.

The speaker criticized the existing system of accounting and accountability, which is frequently overloaded with unnecessary, secondary indicators. The country's Central Statistical Administration must organize matters so that the farms' economic service is rid of an excessive flood of paper.

The significance of well-founded planning is increasing, A.A. Kuleshov, chairman of Altay Kray Agro-Industrial Committee, pointed out in his speech. This is why comprehensive estimation of the conditions of every farm's activity, an in-depth analysis of the results of its activity, and the revelation of reserves for enhancing the production efficiency of all sectors are now actively taking place in the kray. There has recently been a considerable increase in the number of subdivisions which have assimilated financial autonomy, the collective contract, and the check form of monitoring expenditure. But the level reached in disseminating progressive methods of labor organization and encouragement is clearly insufficient. A considerable number of specialists have not mastered the economic instrument of leadership. This shortcoming must be eliminated quickly.

And another problem. With the resolution's publication great opportunities are opened up for commercial activity by kolkhozes and sovkhozes, and their ties with consumer cooperatives and the kolkhoz market are expanded. This is important work; but in many respects, it is also unusual and requires special cadres and high competence. It becomes expedient to organize a sales service, without, of course, inflating the existing staffs.

M.M. Lomach, general director of Krasnodar Kray's experimental "Kuban" combine, spoke about its work experience. The combine incorporates all the kolkhozes and sovkhozes, the meat combine, the dairy plant, the canning plants, the bread-baking enterprises, and the construction and trade organizations located on the territory of Krasnodar Kray's Timashevskiy Rayon. A unified production-economic complex has been created. It organically unites on the basis of modern equipment and technology large-scale agricultural production, the procurement and profound waste-free processing of all arable and livestock products, and their storage, transportation, and sales.

The activity of all components of this complex is subordinate to obtaining the maximum end result and is carried out on the basis of full financial autonomy and self-financing. All the main and servicing enterprises there work on the principles of the collective contract. As a result, "Kuban" is consistently increasing deliveries of high-quality products and building up its production and economic potential. There has been a substantial reduction in losses of products, and their prime costs have fallen.

There are no loss-making kolkhozes and sovkhozes in our rayon, said I.P. Takunov, secretary of Bryansk Oblast's Novozybkovskiy CPSU Raykom; and all the plans of the last 5-year plan were fulfilled. The overall profitability level reached 29 percent. Labor productivity increased 22 percent. But even here people associate a very great deal with the new economic situation. A long-awaited document obtained for the first time — this was how Ivan Petrovich described the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution. But this important document not only gives a great deal; it also makes enterprising, creative, responsible work obligatory. It is precisely this that the party raykom directs the rayon agro-industrial association apparatus and kolkhoz and sovkhoz specialists and leaders toward. This is the principle: not goading on or tutelage, but support for independence, good enterprise, and questing.

V.P. Nikonov, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, addressed the conference. He emphasized that the time has now come to turn the energy of the plans which the party brought to its 27th congress into the energy and essence of specific measures, while preserving in everyday life the atmosphere of the congress and its refreshing force.

The CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution provides for a departure from the old principles of planning. Emphasis has been placed on developing initiative locally and making full use of local agricultural and raw material resources. Of course, the chief thing is the good-quality, skilled execution of everything outlined; and the first thing to be done is to ensure that all our cadres — party, soviet, and economic — carefully study and digest all the points in the resolution, all its subtleties and details, and that every worker act professionally and energetically in his assigned sector, making full use of all rights, and not being afraid to take on responsibility, particularly when the way to something new has to be paved.

However, as one of the factors determining the broad development of initiative and enterprise, the psychological reorganization is taking place inadmissibly slowly. Many leaders of the agro-industrial complex at various levels welcome and approve all the benefits proceeding from the center. At the same time, they give a very enthusiastic verbal welcome — but an extremely grudging welcome in practice — to the demands for the fullest utilization of every farm's production and economic potential, for the resolute eradication of formalism in the introduction of financial autonomy and the collective contract, for the introduction of intensive techniques in arable farming and livestock raising, for the creation of the material base of feed production to be completed, and for the full preservation and profound qualitative processing of products.

Many workers of rayon, oblast, and republic agro-industrial associations still get carried away with creating all kinds of paperwork and elaborating extensive measures simulating businesslike activity, substitute an unnecessary passion for holding meetings for specific organizational work in labor collectives, and avoid solving the production problems which arise.

It is necessary to adhere strictly to scientifically substantiated arable farming systems and not allow a reduction in the areas they envisage for the cultivation of grain, oil-yielding, protein-containing, and other crops.

V.P. Nikonov pointed to the important role of party committees in the practical introduction of the new economic mechanism of management and drew attention to the need to radically improve the selection, training, and education of cadres of the agro-industrial complex. The situation in this important sector gives rise to alarm. In a number of republics, krays, and oblasts there are many instances of the very frequent and unjustified replacement of kolkhoz chairmen and sovkhoz directors. However, an analysis shows that the fields' highest yield and the highest livestock productivity are achieved on precisely those farms where recognized leaders have worked for many years.

Now that questions of accelerating scientific and technical progress in all sectors of the agro-industrial complex, assimilating intensive techniques in the fullest way, and making efficient use of machinery are arising so acutely, the demands on the qualifications of machine operator cadres are increasing sharply. However, there are serious shortcomings in the system of training and retraining these cadres. In a number of rayons, the network of rural vocational and technical schools is small and they have weak links with farms. As a result, less than half the machine operators there have secondary education. And yet it is precisely machine operators who must directly fulfill the complex package of agrotechnical work on modern machines.

Middle-echelon cadres also merit serious attention. The state spends huge amounts each year on training young people in VUZes and technical colleges. However, even now approximately just one-third of production sectors are headed by specialists.

The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee and its local organs must more boldly and actively undertake to solve practical questions, resolutely get away from bureaucratic administration and commanding, and rely chiefly on economic methods of management in order to resolve as quickly as possible the task of fully providing the country with food.

Speaking in conclusion, Ye.K. Ligachev noted the businesslike, constructive nature of the conference, which was held in the spirit of the demands of the 27th CPSU Congress, and voiced confidence that the measures elaborated by it will help to successfully resolve the tasks facing the country's agro-industrial complex.

Air Defense Deputy Chief Maltsev Interviewed

PM181310 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 12 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 2

[Interview with Colonel General of Aviation I. Maltsev, chief of the General Staff and first deputy commander in chief of the Air Defense Forces by correspondent N. Sautin: "Motherland's Clear Skies; 13 April Is Air Defense Forces Day" — date, place not given]

[Text] The motherland's air borders stretch for 60,000 km. Igor Mikhaylovich Maltsev is one of those to whom our skies are entrusted. I shall briefly introduce him. After graduating from a military aviation college, he flew as a pilot. He then commanded a flight and a squadron. After training at a military air academy, he commanded a regiment, then a formation. He graduated from the USSR Air Force General Staff Academy. The general has been in his present post since 1984.

[Sautin] The Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress stated: "...It is no secret that scenarios for a nuclear attack against us do exist. We have no right to fail to take them into account." These words should clearly have a special resonance for each air defense serviceman.

[Maltsev] Yes, air defense is now of strategic importance. Washington's militarist course, the siting of the latest means of air attack — nuclear weapon delivery vehicles — in a number of NATO states, the appearance in the Pentagon arsenal of sophisticated modifications to bombers, fighters, and ground-attack aircraft, and other strategic and operational-tactical arms have increased the potential for aggression.

It was stressed at the congress that the USSR's defense might is maintained at a level which makes it possible to reliably defend Soviet people's peaceful labor and lives. The constant combat readiness of the Air Defense Forces is an objective necessity.

[Sautin] As is well known, the antiaircraft missile troops are the main fighting force of the Air Defense Forces. Are they able to ensure the effective defense of the country's important targets?

[Maltsev] In collaboration with fighter aircraft, yes, the antiaircraft missile troops are armed with combat complexes which can hit aircraft, helicopters, drift balloons, and other means of airborne attack with surface-to-air guided missiles.

In order to repulse a surprise air attack some parts of the antiaircraft missile troops, like the other branches of the Air Defense Forces — aviation and electronic troops — are on constant combat standby even in peacetime.

Today the outcome of a battle may be decided in seconds. And in the Air Defense Forces those seconds are won by automating the means of combating the enemy. Automated control systems process information on the situation in the air, determine target coordinates, and transmit the information needed to hit them. The officers achieve the close cooperation between man and machine in companies not only through protracted training but also through in-depth knowledge.

[Sautin] To give the reader an idea of who controls the battle and from where, could we take an imaginary step across the threshold of a command post?

[Maltsev] Certainly. Air Defense Forces' command posts are equipped with modern automation and indication means. The situation in the air is displayed on screens, display panels, and automated direction system consoles.

Modern antiaircraft battles are fast-moving. Whereas in the last war a commander could make amendments and corrections during the firing process, today there is no such possibility. A target flying at supersonic speed only enters the firing zone of a complex for a short time. Moreover, the enemy maneuvers in every possible way and uses jamming...

Here we have approached the commander's role and his ability to rapidly and unfailingly react to a continuously changing situation.

[Sautin] Please say something about air defense aircraft.

[Maltsev] We are armed with supersonic missile-carrying fighters. By using radar sighting (which makes it possible to hit the enemy even without visual contact) and various types of missiles, pilots are able to destroy strategic bombers armed with cruise missiles, helicopters, and automatic drift balloons at all altitudes and velocities. Our aircraft ensure that planes armed with air-to-ground guided missiles can be shot down.

[Sautin] It is possible to intercept a probable enemy's modern means of airborne attack?

[Maltsev] Yes, at all altitudes, in any weather conditions, and at any time. Fighter aircraft units have various types of airborne missile interception complexes. These are based on piloted supersonic jet aircraft armed with air-to-air missiles and modern equipment.

Fighter pilots are real fighters. In groups or in dogfights, they engage and destroy the enemy, carrying out the most important things in the great and complex labor of the many fliers who participate in the battle organization and backup. Fighter pilots are typified by irreproachable piloting skills and the ability to instantly assess everything that influences the conduct of the battle.

In carrying out a stratospheric training flight in a supersonic fighter-interceptor, Colonel I. Zhukov and Captain A. Abalentsev found themselves in a critical position. They were entitled to eject; but Zhukov decided to land the aircraft. He did the seemingly impsosible — the aircraft touched down at the very end of the runway. Col Zhukov was awarded the gold star of a Hero of the Soviet Union.

[Sautin] A great deal is written about the heroic profession of pilots and missile troops. Their action is obvious. But less is known about radio technical troops. Yet without them the air defense aircraft and antiaircraft missile troops would be "blind."

Lieutenant Colonel V. Dobrynin is one of the radio technical troops' front-ranking officers. The unit he commands has been deemed outstanding for 6 consecutive years. Servicemen at the subunit commanded by Lieutenant Colonel V. Tereshchenko are mastering new radar equipment under complex conditions.

[Sautin] I realize from what you have said that the Air Defense Troops are now able to detect and destroy any means of airborne attack. But are they ready to combat future means involving major electronic countermeasures on the part of the enemy?

[Maltsev] Here are a few examples. In accordance with the plans for the expedited buildup of its strategic nuclear potential, the U.S. leadership is modernizing existing bombers and creating new bomber types. Thus, B-52 bombers are being rearmed with long-range — over 2,500 km — cruise missiles. Work is under way to introduce new B-1B strategic bombers into combat use.

Now the foreign press is urgently trumpeting the creation of a new "invisible bomber" with a low radar signature under the "Stealth" program and the possibilty that new-generation hypersonic bombers (up to 6,000-7,000 km per hour) and transatmospheric [vozdushno-kosmicheskiye] craft will be built.

Pride of place in the militarist program is given to air-, ground-, and sea-launched strategic and tactical cruise missiles and high-toxicity weapons systems and means. Increases not only in the range (up to and including intercontinental range) and the velocity of these means are envisaged.

There is an eternal process of struggle in military matters which is often called the "struggle of armor and shells." In other words, each means of attack constantly gives rise to new means of defense. If necessary we are prepared to fight battles against the enemy's future means, also. Our weapons make us firmly confident of reliable defense against any aggressor.

Col Gen Bobylev on PVO Training Shortcomings

PM171258 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian
13 Apr 86 Second Edition p 2

[Article by Colonel General S. Bobylev, member of the Defense Council and chief of the Political Directorate of the Air Defense Forces: "Bearing in Mind Modern Demands"]

[Excerpts] In tackling the training year's tasks, commanders, staffs, political organs, and party organizations are persistently improving the style of their work, focusing their efforts on the development of initiative, creativeness, and improved practical organization of their work. The emphasis here is primarily on the translation into practice of the fundamental principle of combat training, that is, teaching the forces everything they need to know in modern combat. During lessons and training sessions and in the course of tactical exercises, privates, sergeants, ensigns, and officers persistently rehearse procedures and methods of detecting, tracking, and destroying means of air attack in a situation where mass-destruction weapons and intensive electronic countermeasures are used by the "enemy." This makes it possible to raise the combat training of missilemen, radar operators, signalmen, and other categories of servicemen to a qualitatively new level.

It must be mentioned, however, that the personnel's combat training has not yet become the pivotal concern in the life and activity of all military collectives. There are cases of a simplified approach to meeting combat training drill requirements, to the personnel's nonattendance at exercises, and lack of proper concern for the quality of combat training. This must not be tolerated. It is important to adopt specific measures to overcome the complacency of certain officers and the habit of concealing shortcomings in one's oragnizational work with references to objective reasons and to bring combat training everywhere in line with the demands of modern combat.

Thanks to the Communist Party's concern, Air Defense Forces are equipped with antiaircraft guns, missile installations, radar complexes, missile-carrying interceptor fighters, automated control systems, and modern communications equipment which meets all the requirements of modern air defense. And all this equipment is serviced by well-educated, experienced specialists. Many of our servicemen have aquired the qualifications of "skilled operator," "fighter pilot," "specialist 1st or 2d class." Another characteristic feature is the fact that sophisticated combat hardware is brought into a state of operational fitness within shorter time limits than prescribed. This convincingly testifies to the vigor of the patriotic movement under the motto "A higher standard of assimilation for new hardware!"

Rigorous compliance with the rules and regulations, efficient organization, and strict military discipline are the basis of all success in study and in service. Responding to the demands of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR defense minister, and the chief of the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate, commanders, political workers, and party and Komsomol organizations have stepped up their work to improve discipline. The task here is abundantly clear — achieving even greater cohesion between military collectives, further strengthening the servicemen's comradeship, and stepping up intolerance of all deviations from the rules and regulations and the norms of communist morality so as to ensure that every serviceman discharges his service sparing no spiritual or physical effort and strictly fulfills the demands of the service regulations.

However, it must be noted that certain officers still strongly tend toward orthodox, inefficient forms of work, taking action only on the instructions of their superiors. Understandably, it is not easy to overcome inertia, to summon up readiness to accept responsibility for enterprisingly and creatively resolving the tasks at hand. But it must be done. Only in this way is it possible to achieve a substantial improvement in the personnel's training and education, bearing in mind the demands of modern combat.

The initiative displayed by the air defense men in training and in service, their selfless military labor, and their conscientious fulfillment of their combat task in protecting our motherland's airspace are a graphic manifestation of their high political awareness and sense of duty. The sentinels of the Soviet skies, brought up in the spirit of patriotism and love for their socialist fatherland, are proving their devotion to the Communist Party cause by means of their daily, persistent military labor. All the party-political work that is carried out in units and subunits is aimed at instilling firm ideological convictions in servicemen. In accordance with the demands of the 27th CPSU Congress, the emphasis here is placed on the quest for more effective forms and methods of ideological and political education. The organization of political training and of all political, educational, and ideological work is being improved. The rich ideological content of the Central Committee Political Report, the new edition of the CPSU Program, and other party congress documents enables leaders to structure the teaching process more effectively and enables students to deepen their knowledge of the revolutionary Marxist-Leninist theory and develop an aptitude for mature political thinking and action. The entire system of servicemen's ideological and political education is being restructured in the spirit of modern demands.

A great deal is being done in this respect, for instance, in the unit where officer G. Belov is serving. In the organization of party-political work, active struggle is being waged there against obsolete approaches and inertia. The link between education by word and education by example has become much closer in the work of political personnel, party organizations, and Komsomol activists. The forms and methods of their work are brought into line with the realities of the life of military collectives. All this effectively promotes the growth of service and sociopolitical activeness among enlisted men and NCO's.

The fostering of an active life stance and a responsible attitude to military duty in the defenders of the Soviet skies is of special significance. The Air Defense Forces are forces of constant combat readiness. Our servicemen are profoundly aware of this as they discharge their standby alert duty at radar station monitors, missile complex consoles, at airfields and command centers. They are deeply aware of their tremendous responsibility to the Communist Party, the Soviet Government, and the people for ensuring the socialist fatherland's security. They are always alert, always in a state of combat readiness which guarantees an immediate rebuff to any aggressor.

U.S. CONDUCTS NUCLEAR TEST IN NEVADA; COMMENTARY

Test 'Undermining' Geneva

LD221548 Moscow TASS in English 1544 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, April 22 TASS -- The United States has conducted another nuclear explosion at the range in Nevada. The explosion's yield is from 20 to 150 kilotons. This is the third nuclear explosion conducted by the United States this year. Disregarding vital interests and aspirations of all peoples, including its own people, Washington took the road of the actual undermining of the Geneva arrangements, resorted to actions that complicate still more the tense situation in the world arena. The nuclear explosions in Nevada dash the unique chance to set a real beginning to the disarmament process.

Administration 'Distorts Facts'

LD221637 Moscow TASS in English 1604 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 22 TASS -- Despite widespread protests by the American and international public the United States conducted a new nuclear weapon test in Nevada. The yield of the blast ranged from 20 to 150 kilotons, it was reported by a spokesman of the United States Department of Energy. This is already the third officially announced nuclear test in the United States this year.

As is known, the Reagan administration has rejected the Soviet proposal to impose a mutual moratorium on all nuclear explosions which could become an important step towards curbing the nuclear arms race. Washington contends that the United States needs the continuation of nuclear tests to overcome its "lag" behind the USSR in this field. But American specialists themselves say tht no such U.S. lag in the field of nuclear tests exists. So the administration openly distorts facts in order to justify the continued buildup of nuclear arsenals in the United States and the creation of even deadlier weapons systems.

U.S. 'Dreaming' of Superiority

LD221744 Moscow TASS in English 1719 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 22 TASS -- TASS military news analyst Vladimir Chernyshev writes:

A new nuclear blast sounded in Nevada today. This was already the third officially announced nuclear test in the United States this year.

While continuing nuclear weapon tests contrary to the demands of peoples the United States Administration invents such illogical justifications for its peace-endangering policy that this amazes even the worldly-wise legislators on Capitol Hill. Take, for instance, the latest "invention" - the letter from the State Department to the members of Congress who are the most vigorous critics of nuclear tests. Made public only recently, it sets forth two really staggering theses.

First of all, a comprehensive nuclear test ban might "encourage" non-nuclear states to develop their own nuclear arms. The international public has always thought the opposite, that a total ban on nuclear tests would be an important step to preventing nuclear proliferation. But it follows from the "discovery" made by the present United States Administration that the more nuclear explosions are conducted in the world the smaller becomes the probability of the development of nuclear arms. This "conclusion" is akin to the White House "postulate", according to which the higher are the mountains of weapons the more there is security.

The second thesis of the Washington administration is just as distant from elementary logic. According to it a total ban on nuclear tests will "compel" countries already possessing nuclear arms to increase their nuclear arsenals. The people in Washington simply refuse to admit that tests are a sort of accelerator of the nuclear arms race. But one does not have to be a specialist in military matters to understand that it is testing that helps develop new types and systems of weapons of mass annihilation and also modernise existing systems. An end to testing would have frozen this process and with time the nuclear arms race would altogether become impossible. The matter is that the United States Administration is dreaming of military superiority and for this reason needs ever new nuclear arms and, consequently, ever new nuclear explosions. The people in Washington have learned to live with nuclear arms and, judging by everything, see no perspective other than continuing the arms race.

Tests Accelerate SDI

[Text] Moscow April 22 TASS -- TASS news analyst Leonid Ponomarev writes:

Another 100 nuclear tests in Nevada? Yes, this is exactly the number of nuclear explosions planned to be made by the United States in the process of developing and perfecting different units and systems planned to be used within the star wars programme, writes the British newspaper GUARDIAN today, referring to the opinion of American specialists. The newspaper points out that despite President Reagan's assurances of "a non-nuclear" character of the star wars programme, considerable sums were allocated to the U.S. Department of Energy for testing the so-called "nuclear armaments of the third generation" in addition to expenditures for tests of such armaments of the first and second generations.

Since the beginning of the current year the United States has conducted two explosions at the atomic test range in Nevada, and today -- the third. Washington intends to hold a total of not less than 15 nuclear explosions this year. These figures speak for themselves, and patently show that the leaders of the U.S. Administration only in word advocate elimination of nuclear armaments. In deed, they are developing at a speedy rate ever new types of weapons of mass destruction. These developments are centered on the star wars programme, called the Strategic Defence Initiative.

Many specialists, including American, turn down the administration's assertions on "a purely defensive character" of the Strategic Defence Initiative and openly admit that the systems being developed within the star wars programme can and will be used above all in offensive purposes. This is the opinion of former assitant to the President for national security affairs Lieutenant General Brent Scowcroft who at Reagan's request headed in 1983 the presidential commission on strategic armaments. Most of the specialists, writes the newspaper BOSTON GLOBE, agree that the SDI will not lead to elimination of nuclear weapons but only to escalation of the nuclear arms race.

Washington, as a matter of fact, is conducting the course of such an escalation. As opposite to the stand of the White House, the Soviet leadership believes that termination of nuclear tests everywhere would signify a realistic step in curbing the nuclear arms race. Termination of tests would suspend perfection of nuclear weapons, its further modernisation. There is every indication that they in Washington are in a hurry to make SDI an irreversible phenomenon: They are pressing upon Congress for considerable allocations for development of weapons of "the third generation", such as X-ray laser, electro-magnetic guns, etc. It is exactly for that purpose that the Pentagon will need to conduct more than 100 nuclear explosions. And these might be followed by another series of blasts to test new weapons of mass destruction.

Test Shows U.S. Aims

LD222138 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Commentary by Political Observer Valentin Zorin from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Hello, comrades. The latest underground nuclear test at the Nevada proving ground is more than just another military-technical measure carried out by the Pentagon. We have here a serious act with both purely military and far-reaching political aims.

As for the military aspect, the continuation of a series of nuclear weapons tests testifies to the fact that Washington is demonstrating, not only by diplomatic notes with nebulous phrasing, but also by unambiguous practical action, that it is not ready to accept the peace-loving initiatives of the Soviet Union, which has set forth a realistic plan to rid mankind of all nuclear arsenals by the year 2000. Washington neither wished nor knew how to take advantage of the unique opportunities offered by the moratorium on nuclear test that the Soviet Union implemented for almost 9 months, and set about accelerating its tests again — in other words, implementing steps to press ahead with the nuclear arms race.

In the feverish haste with which Washington is acting in this direction there is a substantial political aspect. The Soviet moratorium was a powerful catalyst that sharply boosted the antiwar movement throughout the world, including in the United States. The scale of this movement and its growing influence threatened to drive the Washington administration into a corner. A cynical challenge resulted: having embarked upon a new series of nuclear tests, to confront peace-loving forces with a fait accompli and let it be understood that further talk of ending nuclear tests lacks any prospect, thus insuring for themselves freedom of action in further accelerating the arms race — this is evidently the design of that part of the Washington leadership that rejects the very notion of constructive steps in the direction of Soviet-U.S. accords aimed at seeking mutually acceptable political solutions.

One other factor should be borne in mind. At this time, at this very moment, the Reagan administration is striving to obtain record military allocations from Congress. For this a particular political atmosphere is essential. Accelerating nuclear testing and the war hysteria surrounding Libya, and whipping up the anti-Nicaraguan campaign — according to the plans of the Washington agency of the military-industrial complex -- all this creates the political background necessary for this.

All this is so. All this has happened many times before in Washington; there is nothing new about it. What is new is the atmosphere that has arisen in the world as a result of the Soviet Union's political initiatives, as well as a growing level of awareness and a sense of responsibility among the broadest masses. It is for this reason that this time Washington's usual schemes may not work as well as they used to. The latest nuclear blasts on the Nevada proving ground are, in present conditions, certainly not the last word in the political situation that is taking shape in the world.

'Maniacal Stubbornness' Viewed

LD221648 Moscow TASS in English 1617 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 22 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko writes:

It is with a maniacal stubbornness that the United States is speeding up its programme of nuclear tests. A new nuclear explosion was conducted today at the testing range in Nevada.

According to experts, it was intended to measure the impact of the blast wave during the release of nuclear energy. As is known, the use of such impact is a component part of the programme of developing systems of space arms directed against targets both on earth and in outer space.

The new nuclear blast in Nevada, code-named "Jefferson", is already the third this year and the tenth since the Soviet Union's announcement of a unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions with the aim of facilitating the speediest solution of the problem of putting a general and complete ban on nuclear tests throughout the world. In all, according to data of the United States Department of Energy, the United States has already conducted 649 officially announced nuclear explosions since 1951. On the eve of the blast in Nevada the Department of State announced the intention of the United States to further continue the programme of nuclear tests.

U.S. Lacks 'Political Will'

[Text] Moscow April 22 TASS -- TASS political news analyst Valentin Vasilets writes:

The United States has set off a new nuclear blast at the testing range in Nevada. It came as a clear and sinister answer to the expectations of those who were still hoping that Washington at long last would heed the voice of the international public demanding an end to nuclear tests.

Whatever debates were conducted in recent years about the most expedient ways of immediately stopping the arms race almost all specialists agree on one thing: It is hard to imagine a more effective beginning of this process than a termination of nuclear tests. Because the well-known purpose of tests is to develop new, even more dangerous types and systems of weapons of mass annihilation. That is why such far-ranging circles of the public and influential politicians, including numerous members of the United States Congress, have united precisely around the demand to take such a cardinal step -- to stop the explosions. That is exactly why the world was swept by a powerful wave of protests in support of demands for an end to the race towards the nuclear precipice. For the very same reason last summer the Soviet Union announced a unilateral end to all nuclear explosions in an attempt by force of its example to bring the United States to the path of restricting the arms race.

After the introduction of the Soviet moratorium, when the attention of the whole world was again concentrated on the problems connected with this step, it became especially clear that there do not exist any really serious technical difficulties capable of obstructing the conclusion of a test-ban treaty. The groundlessness of the American Administration's standard reference to the impossibility of a reliable verification of compliance with such an agreement was convincingly demonstrated by American specialists themselves. For instance, Glenn Seaborg, a Nobel Prize winner and former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, says that the United States has an absolutely reliable mechanism to verify and monitor explosions. Besides, he adds, the Soviet Union has proposed on-site inspections when necessary.

In short, all that is needed is political will. But it is this that Washington lacks. The so oft-repeated assurances by high-placed members of the Washington administration about their striving for arms control are undisguised hypocrisy. There is absolutely not one fact, not one concrete step that would confirm the existence of such a striving. At the same time one has to shut one's eyes so as not to see the numerous evidence of the Reagan administration's determination to accelerate the arms race, to impart a qualitatively new character to it by switching it to outer space.

The new blast in Nevada is the tenth officially announced U.S. test since the Soviet Union introduced its unilateral moratorium. The calls to reason have proved futile, the calls to Washington to understand that in the nuclear age it is absurd to count on the strengthening of its security by building up armaments and acquiring military superiority. The subsequent constructive steps of the Soviet Government when it extended - and again unilaterally - its moratorium have also failed to evoke a response from Washington. As it was stated by the Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, the explosions in Nevada have "cancelled a unique chance to give the disarmament process a real start". It appears that the philosophy of peace preached by Moscow remains an unknown science in Washington. The people there prefer to deify the military-industrial complex that shudders at the very thought of disarmament.

WEINBERGER BOOSTS ARMS RACE WITH SPENDING PUSH

[Text] Washington April 22 TASS -- The Reagan administration continues to steer a course of whipping up the arms race and boosting military spending. This has been borne out again by U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's statement before the House Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. Speaking there, he demanded legislative approval for the administration's request for nearly 312 billion dollars in funding for military needs in fiscal 1987 and said Congress should demonstrate a commitment to bolstering U.S. military power.

Weinberger said that the administration intended first of all to push along with a program "to modernize and improve all aspects of our strategic forces", whose ultimate goal is to forge a potential for dealing with a first nuclear strike to the USSR. The Pentagon chief said in this connection that the administration was requesting funds to purchase 21 MX ballistic missiles, an additional Trident nuclear submarine and Trident II (D-5) missiles.

Besides, according to his words, the Pentagon will press on with developing the Stealth strategic bomber and two new bomber-delivered missile systems, including an "advanced cruise missile".

Weinberger also made it clear that, defying broad-based U.S. and international public protests, Washington would keep testing nuclear weapons, which, he said, was needed to upgrade U.S. nuclear forces.

Speaking of conventional forces, the defense secretary said his department would continue placing emphasis on increasing their armories. He paid special attention to plans to further reinforce U.S. "special operations forces" which the Pentagon has been using widely for subversion in various parts of the world and as a means of intimidating the governments of countries following independent international policies.

SOVIET GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON ASIA-PACIFIC REGION

LD230930 Moscow TASS in English 0920 GMT 23 Apr 86

["Soviet Government — Statement" -- TASS item identifier]

[Text] Moscow April 23 TASS — The world is passing through an intranquil and crucial phase of development when political will, a new approach, far-sighted decisions and practical actions are required with a view to improving the international situation radically. The time now is such when it is necessary to learn the great art of living together both in the world as a whole and in its individual regions in particular.

Advocating detente, the complete elimination of nuclear weapons before the end of the current century, the establishment of a comprehensive system of international security and the development of cooperation — these proposals found their vivid manifestation in the documents of the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union — the U.S.S.R. takes into consideration in full measures the interests of the countries of the Asian-Pacific region. Important processes are taking place there which cannot but have an impact on the positions of the Soviet Union as one of the largest Asian and Pacific Ocean powers, on those of its friends and allies, and on the interests of international peace and security.

In the existing conditions it is especially necessary to show mutual restraint, refrain from any actions that would worsen the political climate in that region of the world and hold back the consolidation and development of the positive processes there -- the processes that promote the continuation of dialogue and the search for ways for improving the international situation.

Meanwhile, actions of this kind leading to the aggravation of tensions in the region are are being taken by the United States of America and its allies. Judging from everything, certain political circles in the USA and Japan do not picture the future of the Asian-Pacific region in any other way than in the form of confrontation of different countries. On the practical plane, attempts are being made for that purpose to create a structure and mechanism of a so-called "Pacific community" which can be transformed in the future into a closed regional grouping, into another militaristic bloc.

Approaching in the most selective manner the list of potential members of the "Pacific community", its initiators clearly show no concern for making the proposed organization a truly representative forum for the discussion and solution of the long-pressing economic problems of the region, and also for changing the inequitable structure of interstate trade and economic relations that has taken shape there.

The world has witnessed more than once how the screen of economic assistance and economic cooperation, the objective processes of internationalization and integration of the world economy have been used to further and substantiate imperialist plans for the establishment of military groupings, "teaties on joint defense" and so forth.

In the opinion of the Soviet Government, if no check is made to such a course of the development of events in the area where interests of many states of the world converge and become intertwined, it can lead to a serious aggravation of tensions in the Asian-Pacific region.

The foundation for friendly relations, for building up trust and promoting mutual understanding among peoples in that part of the world, just as in other regions for that matter, can and should be the development of equitable cooperation that is open to all, rather than efforts to put some states in opposition to others.

Given such an approach -- and all peoples are interested precisely in it -- there cannot be any room for knocking together blocs and counter-blocs, for establishing all kinds of "axes", "triangles", for forming closed groupings, or cultivating protectionism and discriminatory measures in maintaining mutual trade and economic ties.

The Soviet Government believes that, despite the difference in the political systems, ideologies and world outlooks, the peoples of the Asian-Pacific region are bound together by the community of vital interests. In the conditions of the growing interdependence of states it is much more difficult, or altogether impossible, to solve the existing problems on one's own or in an isolated group; for that purpose it is necessary to pool the constructive efforts of all states of the region irrespective of their socio-political systems.

The elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the current century and prevention of the militarization of outer space, as proposed by the Soviet Union, would rid the peoples the world over and, naturally, in the Asian-Pacific region of the fear of nuclear and chemical threat, radically change the situation, elevate the security of states to a new level and promote the creation of felicitous conditions for the development of mutually advantageous cooperation.

The Soviet Union also proposes to press through bilateral and multilateral consultations for a solution to contentious issues, for better mutual understanding and for the building of confidence and thereby to create prerequisites for the holding of an all-Asian forum for a joint search for constructive solutions. It would be possible appropriately to prepare and hold a separate meeting of the countries of the Pacific Ocean area to consider matters of security, including those of economic ones. Considering the potential of the countries of the Pacific Ocean area in the political and economic fields, the holding of such a meeting -- and one should see to it that it ends with important decisions -- would become a major event for the region and would have a fruitful effect on the situation in the world as a whole.

The implementation of confidence-building measures and a reduction in the activity of navies in the Pacific Ocean would play a stabilizing role.

The Soviet Union would welcome the establishment of nuclear-free zones in the Asian-Pacific region. The decision of the southern Pacific countries to declare the area a nuclear-free zone has met with the most positive response in the Soviet Union.

It stands to reason that all countries of the Pacific Ocean are wishing to take part in the consideration of matters of security in the Pacific Ocean and in the elaboration of decisions should do so. A number of countries have already come forward with various proposals aimed at strengthening security in the area. The proposals deserve serious attention.

While tackling large-scale tasks of accelerating social and economic development, the Soviet Union gives paramount attention to the areas of Siberia and the Far East which are part of the Asian-Pacific region. Stable, mutually beneficial trade-and-economic relations have developed between the Soviet Union and many countries of the region. The growth of industrial and agricultural basis, the completion of the construction of the Baykal-Amur mainline, the development of rich oil-and-gas, coal and other deposits of energy carriers, and the drawing of new raw timber resources of the area into economic uses objectively create additional important material prerequisites for the USSR's more active participation in the process of international division of labour, trade-and-economic, scientific and technical cooperation with countries of Asia and the Pacific Ocean area.

The Soviet Union is proposing to start a wide exchange of views between all interested countries of that part of the world on matters aimed at establishing equitable, mutually beneficial and steady trade-and-economic, technological, scientific and cultural cooperation. The following could become spheres of such cooperation: The development of productive forces, the training of personnel, the use of new sources of energy, including nuclear ones, the upgrading of means of transportation, communication, the revelation of new forms of trade-and-economic, and financial cooperation with due regard for the interests of the developing countries of the region, exchanges of scientific and scientific-and-technical information, the development of measures for the protection of the environment and for rational utilization of biological and mineral resources of seas and oceans, the conduct of peaceful space research for common benefit, joint work in the field of medicine and health care, efforts to combat natural calamities and to eliminate their aftermath, and so on.

It is clear that these complex, diverse and large-scale problems will require collective preparation of big long-term projects and programmes and the participation of all the countries concerned in their implementation. The ideas which are available in this respect could be considered within the framework of the existing U.N. machinery, through the economic and social commission for Asia and the Pacific, in particular.

There is deep conviction in the Soviet Union that the establishment of large-scale cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit between all countries of the Asian-Pacific region irrespective of difference of their social systems meets the basic interests of the countries of that part of the world and will promote a restructuring of international relations on an equitable, democratic basis. Our country is ready to participate most actively in such regional peaceful cooperation and to use for the purposes all economic, scientific and technical potential at its disposal.

The strengthening of good-neighbourliness and friendship between all Asian-Pacific countries and the pooling of their efforts in the common search for constructive solutions to the problems of security in Asia and the Pacific Ocean area would have a favourable effect not only on the situation in the Asian-Pacific region but would also become a contribution to the cause of the preservation and strengthening of universal peace.

DUBININ COMMENTS ON UN FORCE IN LEBANON

LD190958 Moscow TASS in English 0616 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 19 TASS -- The Security Council has unanimously passed a resolution to renew the mandate of the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon, expiring on April 19, for another three months at the request of the Lebanese Government and on recommendations from the U.N. secretary-general.

The permanent representative of the USSR to the United Nations, Yu.V. Dubinin, said the Soviet Union shared the Lebanese Government's opinion about the need in existing conditions to keep the U.N. force in Lebanon. Its presence, he said, constituted a factor hindering the implementation of Israel's aggressive plans in south Lebanon.

The Soviet Union, Dubinin said, had decided to support the Security Council resolution to extend the mandate of the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon and declared its readiness from this time on to share in funding for that force.

NONALIGNED COORDINATING BUREAU MEETS IN INDIA

PRAVDA Previews

PM171328 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 15 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Own special correspondent V. Korovikov dispatch: "Topical Tasks of Nonalignment"]

[Text] Delhi, April — The Nonaligned Movement Coordinating Bureau, convened at foreign minister level, opens a meeting in Delhi on 16 April. The meeting, in which more than 100 delegations will be taking part, is being held on the eve of the eighth conference of the heads of state and government of nonaligned countries, which is scheduled to take place in the Zimbabwean capital of Harare.

At the sessions in Delhi the ministers are to analyze the development of the world situation since the seventh supreme forum of the Nonaligned Movement was held here in March 1983. As people will be aware, at that time the participants in the movement, whose chairman was the late Indira Gandhi, declared their main tasks to be the struggle for peace, disarmament, development, and a new international economic system.

Today those same tasks are even more acute. Assessing the events of recent years on the eve of the session, the Indian press concludes that this is caused by the growing aggressiveness of imperialist forces headed by the United States, which is increasingly resorting to a "big stick" policy on a global scale and is also pursuing a blatantly neocolonialist course regarding the developing countries.

The Coordinating Bureau session's draft declaration issued here says that averting the threat of nuclear war is now the most important problem and that disarmament is a question of mankind's survival. The document expresses support for the program to rid the planet of nuclear weapons by the end of the century proposed by M.S. Gorbachev and criticizes Washington's obstructionist, "pronuclear" stance.

As people know, the U.S. stance has also manifested itself in the insolent way that they have ignored across the Atlantic the Delhi Declaration by the leaders of six countries, which calls for nuclear arsenals to be scrapped and the militarization of outer space to be prevented. This approach by Washington is seen in the dozens of states belonging to the Nonaligned Movement as political irresponsibility. The U.S. refusal to join the Soviet moratorium on nuclear tests and the development of the "star wars" program across the Atlantic have caused indignation in the developing countries. "It is quite clear," the Indian newspaper THE PATRIOT writes, "that the United States is resorting to nuclear blackmail to establish its world domination."

Growing unease is also being caused in Asia, Africa, and Latin America by the fact that in its attempts to restore its lost positions in the developing world American imperialism is using methods of strong-arm diktat with increasing vigor. The occupation of Grenada, the hostile acts against Nicaragua, the direct attacks on Libya, the arming and financing of reactionary bandit groups in Angola and Afghanistan, and the militarist hustle and bustle in the Indian Ocean are all actions, local commentators point out, that are not only contrary to the Nonaligned Movement's interests but are also aimed against many of its participants.

The imperialist powers combine their military and political pressure on the Nonaligned Movement's countries with increasing economic plunder and financial fettering of those countries. It is enough to point out that their total foreign debt already tops $3 trillion. This is how the session's draft declaration assesses the prevailing situation: "Trading conditions for the developing countries have sharply deteriorated; capital inflow is at a standstill; export earnings are falling... Many states are poorer today than they were 10 years ago." This is the result of the neocolonialist policy pursued by imperialism, which is carrying out the most brutal exploitation of the developing countries and is seeking to increase inequality in international economic relations.

The events of recent years have revealed with new force the antipeople nature of imperialism. The inextricable link between the growing financing of imperialist powers' militarist preparations and the increasingly disastrous state of hundreds of millions of people in Asia, Africa, and Latin America has become particularly obvious to the developing countries. That is why there is ever increasing support on those continents for the initiatives and actions of the Soviet Union and the other socialist states aimed at ending the arms race and making constructive use of the world's productive forces and resources. It is becoming increasingly plain that there is an objective need to strengthen solidarity between the Nonaligned Movement and the socialist countries in the struggle for peace, security, and social progress.

The Delhi meeting of the Nonaligned Movement's Coordinating Bureau, as can already be judged from the draft declaration and press articles, will be an important forum, one which is designed to make an important new contribution to the struggle on behalf of the movement's goals and tasks and to promote the success of the upcoming summit conference.

End to Arms Race Sought

LD190410 Moscow TASS in English 2238 GMT 17 Apr 86

[Text] New Delhi April 17 TASS -- By TASS correspondents Vladimir Baydashin and Stanislav Sychev:

Participants in the Non-Aligned Coordinating Bureau's session, currently under way here, have called for an end to the nuclear arms race, return to the policy of detente and rebuff to the Washington administration's policy of "neoglobalism".

The demand was made by the representatives of Cyprus, Algeria, Afghanistan, Zimbabwe, Kuwait and other nations.

Following the Soviet-American meeting in Geneva, which generated great hopes worldwide, said Afghanistan's Foreign Minister Shah Mohammad Dost, the United States had been departing further and further away from the letter and spirit of the Geneva meeting and betraying the expections of all of mankind.

The United States not only failed to respond to the USSR's constructive initiatives related to a number of topical international problems, but was acting contrary to these proposals.

The "star wars" plans and aggressive acts of "neoglobalism" of the Reagan administration were designed to heighten international tension and push the world toward armed confrontation.

Zimbabwe's Foreign Minister Witness Mangwende criticised Washington's doctrine of "neoglobalism." This reckless doctrine was especially dangerous in the nuclear age and should be repulsed, he pointed out. The Non-Aligned Movement should do everything to strengthen world peace and security.

U.S. Policy Criticised

LD201734 Moscow TASS in English 2259 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] New Delhi April 19 TASS — The main objective of the non-aligned countries is to fight for preventing the threat of nuclear war forced by U.S. imperialism, for complete and general disarmament, in the first place nuclear disarmament, for international detente, strengthening peace and security, for a new international economic order. This idea was expressed in the addresses by the delegates of Vietnam, Ethiopia, Zambia, Nepal and Mauritius at the session of the Coordination Bureau of the non-aligned countries at the foreign ministers' level here.

Nguyen Co Thach, SRV foreign minister, condemned in his speech the U.S. policy of state terrorism. The USA has tens of times unleashed aggressions and interventions against many countries in different continents, he said. The latest example of this has been the U.S. aggression against Libya. The Vietnamese minister strongly criticised the U.S. policy of escalation of the arms race on earth and the attempts at spreading it into outer space. Therefore, we support all initiatives directed at ridding mankind of the threat of a nuclear catastrophe, Nguyen Co Thach stressed. In that connection we are expressing satisfaction at the support contained in the draft declaration of the Coordination Bureau for the Soviet Union's large-scale programme aimed at a total elimination of nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons.

Vietnam also supports Mongolia's proposal that a convention should be concluded on mutual non-aggression and non-use of force between the states of Asia and the Pacific. Nguyen Co Thach declared for a settlement in Indochina on the basis of the decisions adopted at the 12th foreign ministers' conference of the SRV, Laos and Kampuchea, directed at ensuring lasting peace and stability in Southeast Asia.

Ethiopia welcomes the Soviet Union's recent proposals on ridding the world of nuclear weapons by the year 2000, said Ethiopia's Foreign Minister Goshu Wolde. Yet, the Reagan administration's stand on that issue leaves little room for optimism. The whole U.S. strategy is aimed at ensuring nuclear supremacy for it. The Reagan administration's militaristic policy jeopardizes peace and international security, the minister said. We should rally our ranks even close to give a rebuff to imperialism.

Declaration Adopted

LD210404 Moscow TASS in English 0957 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Text] New Delhi April 20 — TASS correspondents Vladimir Baydashin and Stanislav Sychev report:

The non-aligned countries' Coordinating Bureau has ended its session at a foreign minister level here. The session brought together about 100 delegations from the non-aligned countries and also from the national liberation movements and international organisations.

The session chaired by India has become the last stage in preparations for the forthcoming eighth conference of the heads of state and government of the non-aligned countries due to open in Harare, capital of Zimbabwe, late in August this year.

The bureau was in session in New Delhi in the days when the United States perpetrated the aggression against Libya, a member of the Non-Aligned Movement. The bureau held an emergency meeting which strongly denounced the U.S. bandit actions against the sovereign state and demanded an immediate end to the aggression against Libya. The non-aligned states declared their full support for the Libyan people's struggle against U.S. imperialism's intrigues.

Issues of war and peace, nuclear disarmament and development were centerpiece to the four-day debates at the bureau's session. The session adopted a political declaration which points out during the period that has elapsed since the previous summit conference of the non-aligned countries the Non-Aligned Movement continued to play a major role in promoting peace and peaceful co-existence, disarmament and development, and in strengthening independence. The document confirms the movement's fundamental principles: the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, apartheid, racism, Zionism and all forms of foreign aggression and interference in domestic affairs. The unity and cohesion of the non-aligned countries and their strict compliance with the principles and objectives of the Non-Aligned Movement are more and more vital at the current complex period in international affairs, the declaration says.

The foreign ministers expressed satisfaction with the resumption of the dialogue between the Soviet Union and the United States, indicating that it should lead to the relaxation of tension in relations between the great powers and, ultimately, in the world, and make a positive contribution towards strengthening international security. The ministers confirmed that there could be no alternative to cooperation and peaceful co-existence of states irrespective of the differences in their political, economic and social systems.

The ministers, says the declaration, welcomed the comprehensive and timely programme for nuclear disarmament advanced by the Soviet Union and emphasized the nuclear weapons posed the most awesome threat to peace. They drew attention to the urgent need for all nuclear powers to conclude a treaty on the total ban on the tests of all types of nuclear weapons. The document expresses regret over the unconstructive stand taken by the United States on the issue of nuclear disarmament.

The participants in the session called for stamping out apartheid in the south of Africa as soon as possible and for granting independence to Namibia. They declared for exercising the inalienable right of the Arab people of Palestine to self-determination and creating an independent state, and demanded an end to the Israeli occupation of the captured Arab lands. The ministers drew attention to the need to resolve all disputed issues by peaceful means. They also declared for strengthening the role of the United Nations and its organisations, among others, UNESCO.

The participants in the session expressed confidence that the holding of the eighth conference of the heads of state and government of the non-aligned countries in Harare would become an event of immense importance in the history of the Non-Aligned Movement.

TASS Analyzes

LD212333 Moscow TASS in English 1706 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 20 TASS -- TASS Political News Analyst Sergey Kulik writes:

The results of the session of the Coordinating Bureau of the non-aligned countries forcefully show anew that the quintessence of the policy of non-alignment remains the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, apartheid, racism, including Zionism, foreign aggressions, occupation, dominance, interference and hegemony. The sole fact that the foreign ministers of almost 100 countries who attended the New Delhi forum sent their mission to Libya so as to express solidarity with that country, which came under the U.S. bandit attack, is enough to understand what political winds prevail in the Non-Aligned Movement.

The decisions of the bureau on questions of war and peace are of clearly anti-imperialist nature. The forum adopted a political declaration which welcomes the comprehensive and timely programme for nuclear disarmament advanced by the Soviet Union. The foreign ministers confirmed that in our day and age there can be no alternative to cooperation and peaceful co-existence of states irrespective of the differences in their political, economic and social systems. The analysis of the mainstream in the activity and priority tasks of the Non-Aligned Movement, formulated in New Delhi, their comparison with the fundamental principles of the foreign policy of the USSR and other socialist countries show the proximity or concurrence of the positions and objectives of the Non-Aligned Movement and the socialist community. At hand is the availability of ample opportunities for their further constructive interaction on cardinal problems of our time with a view to strengthening world peace.

In their attempts to bring down the anti-imperialist pitch of the Non-Aligned Movement, bourgeois politicians were at pains to force on the participants in the New Delhi session a certain doctrine of "intermediate orientation", of "equal remoteness" which has as its main objective not to allow the developing countries' fruitful cooperation with socialist states. In so doing, the enemies of genuine non-alignment try to pretend that "equal remoteness" expresses the striving of the majority of the developing countries for independence.

But can upright people remain at an "equal distance" from warmongers and the fighters for mankind's peaceful future? Is it in the interests of the non-aligned states and their peoples not to see the difference between the two powers, one of which has the friendly attitude to it and the other calls it "immoral"? The force and effectiveness of the USSR's line in its relations with the non-aligned countries lies in the fact that the interests and principles of its foreign policy meet the aspirations of the people of the newly-free states. The Soviet Union welcomes the non-aligned countries' growing role in discussing and solving the pivotal world problems, first and foremost the problems of war and peace.

TASS Cites PRAVDA Comment

[Text] Moscow April 22 TASS -- The lessons of the events in the Mediterranean have left their impact on the whole work of the Coordination Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, PRAVDA's correspondent in New Delhi pointed out in his dispatch today.

He is commenting on the meeting of the Coordination Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, which closed there. The final documents of the meeting call for concrete actions towards international detente, the correspondent pointed out. The Coordination Bureau has condemned the senseless squandering of funds on the arms race, and declared for a total ban on nuclear weapons. The representatives of the Non-Aligned Movement have again demanded that the seats of colonialism and racism in South Africa be eliminated, the Middle East conflict and other crises be peacefully settled. It has also condemned acts of international terrorism, recruiting and employment of mercenaries.

Much attention was devoted at the New Delhi meeting to economic issues, the newspaper PRAVDA said. It has been pointed out in particular that the economic situation in many developing states has been deteriorating from year to year. Their foreign debts are steadily growing and have already topped a trillion dollars. The imperialist powers and their transnational monopolies exercise, as before, undivided sway in the world market. The prices of raw materials have sharply declined recently. Hunger and poverty hits hard hundreds of millions of people.

To put an end to this situation, the Non-Aligned Movement has declared for resolute measures to establish a new international economic order and to ease the burden of debts. A twenty-point programme for action in the field of international economy and trade has been put forward.

The Delhi meeting, as India's Minister of External Affairs Bali Ram Bhagat, pointed out in its closing meeting, has again demonstrated the determination of peoples on various continents to work actively for peace, disarmament, anti-colonialism and development. This active and principled stand of the non-aligned states determines the important and constructive role, which the movement plays in the troubled world today, PRAVDA says in conclusion.

PEREZ DE CUELLAR THANKS SHEVARDNADZE FOR MESSAGE

LD181640 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1532 GMT 18 Apr 86

"I am highly grateful for the support for the activity of the United Nations and my personal role expressed in the message," J. Perez de Cuellar said to a TASS correspondent. Speaking about the situation regarding Libya he declared: "We carefully follow the development of events and are always at the disposal of the sides to find a peaceful solution to the conflict, to prevent the expansion of military actions, and to stop them from being repeated in the future."

USSR TO CONTRIBUTE $10 MILLION TO UN 'SPECIAL ACCOUNT'

LD191149 Moscow TASS in English 1046 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 19 TASS -- The permanent mission of the USSR to the United Nations has informed the U.N. secretary-general that in response to his address to all U.N. member states the Soviet Union has decided to contribute ten million dollars to the U.N. special account in order to help the organization overcome its financial difficulties.

This was reported in a press release issued by the permanent mission of the USSR to the U.N. on Friday.

FURTHER COMMENT ON U.S. ATTACK ON LIBYA

Lomeyko Criticizes Action

LD221223 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1145 GMT 22 Apr 86

["In the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Center: Aggression Condemned" — TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow, 22 Apr (TASS) — Having brought disgrace on itself in connection with its barbaric attack on Libya, the U.S. Administration is making clumsy attempts to justify these crimes by demonstrating all kinds of "evidence," said Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the Press Department of the USSR Foreign Ministry. At a press conference held here, he emphasized that the universally recognized principles of international law could not be replaced by the law of the jungle.

U.S. propaganda assertions that the attack on Libya has allowed the United States to escape with impunity serves [as received] the purposes of showing that all is permitted, said the USSR Foreign Ministry spokesman. Attempts to portray the aggressive operation as a jolly outing are aimed at fanning up chauvinistic intoxication in the United States itself. Washington's main loss has been the resolute condemnation of the U.S. actions throughout the world.

The British Government, having consented to the use of the bases on its territory for the U.S. strike against Libya bears responsibility for the casualties among the peaceful Libyan population, said Lomeyko. No matter what motives the Conservatives refer to, they are quilty of equal participation in the aggression. The leaders of Canada, under the pretext of condemning terrorism, have also embarked on the path of justifying state terrorism by the United States.

This cannot but give rise to bewilderment if one takes into consideration the Canadian leadership's repeated assertions about its devotion to the cause of ensuring universal peace and security.

Distorting the true state of affairs, the U.S. mass information media are currently trying to manipulate public opinion, so as to inflame chauvinistic intoxication in the United States. A groundless campaign of instigation against Libya is under way, noted the USSR Foreign Ministry spokesman. In this context, the fact that the Libyan Government condemned the Berlin explosion forthwith is being passed over in complete silence. The chauvinistic intoxication that is being fanned in the United States is being used by the administration to justify a direct and unprovoked aggression against sovereign Libya.

Reagan on Raid, French View

LD221112 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0943 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, 22 Apr (TASS) — The Washington administration intends to move matters toward a further escalation of military aggression against Libya. President Reagan's interview with a number of press agencies provides full evidence of this.

In answer to questions, he made it clear that if necessary the United States could once again resort to inflicting a military strike against Libya.

Commenting on his statements, the CBS television company reports, citing "informed Pentagon representatives," that the administration has already made the decision "to leave two aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean for an undetermined length of time." This has been done, CBS comments, in case the order is given for a new strike to be inflicted against Libya. According to the television company, "the Pentagon representatives pointed out that any new attack would be on a much wider scale than the strike inflicted last week."

CBS cites here the Pentagon men's cynical admission that in planning a new action, the U.S. Defense Department does not intend to examine the question of how to "avoid casualties amongst the local population." Against this backdrop, President Reagan's expressions of "regret" at the deaths of civilians as a result of the barbaric U.S. raid on Tripoli and Banghazi have an extremely hypocritical ring to them.

U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, who spoke in one of the House of Representatives subcommittees, gave a much more frank description of the administration's policy in this regard. In answer to a question, he refused to admit U.S. responsibility for the deaths of children, women, and old people, alleging that he has seen "no convincing evidence" of this. However, it is enough to acquaint oneself with testimonies of witness s to the criminal U.S. action, which are available even in the United States itself. The NBC television company reported yesterday in a dispatch from Banghazi, for instance, that in the town's hospitals "there is not a single serviceman among the injured," but only civilians. Bodies of children lacerated by wounds, youths wrapped up in bloody bandages, the tormented cry of a baby from behind a hospital door -- such scenes can be seen in reports from Libya.

All these people — the elderly, women, and children -- were victims of the Pentagon's so called "surgical operation," during which barbaric systems of weaponry were used. As CBS reported in this connection, the greatest damage was done by the so-called "cluster bombs" used by the U.S. bombers. "Thousands of fragments of these bombs," the television company said, "are lying about on the shore a few kilometers from Banghazi. U.S. naval serial numbers can be seen on many of them.

Moreover, the use of cluster bombs against the civilian population was a clear violation of international law." One could supplement the television company's statement with the fact that such bombs are banned by international law altogether. As everyone knows, this barbarous weapon was used extensively by the U.S. aggressors during the dirty war in Vietnam. It is also truly monstrous that during its raids on Libya, the United States was, in fact, regarding the territory of that country as a testing ground for the latest U.S. weapons systems. The attack on Libya, the AVIATION WEEK AND SPACE TECHNOLOGY magazine stresses in this regard, "gave the U.S. Air Force its first opportunity to try out much of the technology developed since the end of the Vietnam war."

Meanwhile, the administration continues to increase pressure on its West European allies, striving to create a united front of action against Libya. During yesterday's interview, Reagan severely attacked France, saying that "he cannot find any justification" for the position adopted by that country in not allowing U.S. bombers to traverse its airspace on their way to Libya.

In this connection, he stressed that during the scheduled May meeting of heads of the leading Western countries he intends to devote his main attention to "achieving unity" in the West over this issue. Reading between the lines of his statement, the ABC television company stressed: "regardless of what new steps against Libya might be considered — military, economic, or diplomatic — the President is determined to strive at the Tokyo meeting for tougher action by his allies." Another television company, NBC, said this issue will be "a key one" at the "conference of the 'seven'."

Reagan Attempts to 'Disinform' Public

[By TASS Political News Analyst Yuriy Kornilov -- TASS byline]

[Text] Moscow April 22 TASS -- The higher the waves of anger over the U.S. bandit attack on sovereign Libya are rising as they sweep across the world, including countries which are U.S. allies, the harder Washington is trying, with the help of all manner of propaganda tricks, to camouflage the hegemonist aims and gangster-style methods of its foreign policy.

This has been demonstrated anew by the U.S. President's interview to a number of Western wire services.

Reading it makes you amazed at how far one can go in distorting real developments.

It is known, for instance, that among the European NATO members only Britain has supported Washington's aggression against Libya and acted as a direct accomplice of the aggressor.

To listen to the President, however, it would appear that almost all U.S. allies were ready to join the criminal venture and did not do it only because the raid on Libya was staged so quickly that they simply had no time to make corrections to their policy.

The President claimed this as if in the West European capitals they weren't aware that Washington has not found it necessary to consult with its allies about the planned aggression and as if it weren't publicly known that even before the aggression the EEC countries urged the United States to show restraint.

While including a good many Western European states at one stroke among the backers of the act of banditry against Libya, the U.S. President made one exception for France.

France had not permitted the U.S. air pirates scrambled on the President's personal orders from their bases in Britain to fly over its territory before dropping their deadly bomb loads on a peaceful and independent Arab country.

So the President, giving vent to his frustration, lashed out at the French authorities and, without being fastidious in his choice of expressions, declared that he, Ronald Reagan, saw no excuse for the stand taken by Paris.

One might think he was speaking not of a sovereign European nation entitled to take the political decisions it deems necessary but about, say, California, Texas or some other U.S. state whose governor had done the White House wrong and was being taken to task.

The President also made a perplexing claim to the effect that the position which has been publicly assumed by some West European countries obviously troubled by U.S. aggression against Libya is at odds with remarks made by their representatives in private conversations with U.S. State Department officials touring various countries.

Wasn't it a direct hint at some West European capitals playing a double game? Or was the President telling a lie just as he was when claiming that as good as the whole of Western Europe was applauding the aggressor?

The White House chief had recourse to hopelessly awkward propaganda ploys when speaking of the aftermath of U.S. aggression against Libya and Washington's further plans.

Being apparently aware of the storm of worldwide outrage at the death of innocent people in Libya from U.S. bombs, Reagan claimed, by way of an excuse, that the targets had been carefully selected.

What would he say then about the photographs published all over the world, which show the ruins of apartment buildings and the victims of the bombings -- women, children and old people? These photographs speak by far more accurately and eloquently than the U.S. President about the targets the U.S. air pirates have "carefully selected" for the raid.

In his interview the U.S. President not only endeavored to disinform people and justify aggression but kept up his threats against sovereign Libya.

He made it quite plain that the United States is bent, under the downright false pretext of "fighting terrorism," on continuing to use its strength both against that country and against other independent developing nations whose independent policies do not suit Washington.

This U.S. policy of state-directed terrorism and outrages on the international scene cannot but arouse mounting indignation and concern among the people.

Whitehead Makes 'New Threats'

LD222325 Moscow TASS in English 2240 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 22 TASS -- Deputy U.S. Secretary of State John Whitehead has made new threats to Libya.

At hearings at the House Foreign Affairs Committee he said that "the United States reserves the right" "to defend itself" and undertake in the future punitive actions similar to the recent air raid on Libya.

That barbarous bombing of Libya's territory, according to the highplaced representative of the Department of State, had the aim to demonstrate to Tripoli that "continued pursuit of Libya's policy would not be without direct cost to it".

F-111's Departing UK Under 'Close' Watch

[Text] Washington April 22 TASS -- 100 American F-111 bombers, based in Britain, took off from their bases under the pretext of participating in NATO exercises, the CBS television company reported.

Recalling that about two dozen such bombers were involved in the raid on Libya, a CBS newscaster stressed that their flight to hit strikes on that country was also initially motivated by the need of "participating in exercises".

A close eye is therefore kept here over the development of events, considering the fact that the U.S. Administration repeatedly threatened to stage a new attack on Libya "in case of need."

U.S. Being Brainwashed

[From "The World today" program presented by Igor Fesunenko]

[Text] To judge from reports in the press along with critical statements, along with protests, one cannot shut one's eye to the lamentable fact that, thanks to a mass propagandist brainwashing of the population, this country -- the United States -- has been gripped by a chauvinistic intoxication. I recall that something similar was observed during the U.S. invasion of Grenada. The question arises: What is the matter? What is happening to America? Where does this cynicism and arrogance come from? And why is it that it affects both those in power and the average citizen with identical ease?

Most likely, the sources and roots of what we observe just now -- what is called the policy, the strategy of new globalism -- go back into U.S. history. Way back in the first years of the existence of the North American United States there appeared in that country ideas of a special, almost divine predestination, of some kind of indeed mythical chosen nature of America, of its right to rule the future of all mankind.

Just listen: As long ago as 1801, Thomas Jefferson announced to his compatriots that the American state system was the best hope for the world. One hundred years later, Theodore Roosevelt pronounced: The success of our experiment will determine not only our welfare but also the welfare of the whole of mankind. These are the first wisdoms of state with which even the recent inhabitants of the White House have presented to their fellow citizens.

Let us quote, Harry Truman, 1945: Whether we want to or not, we are obliged to recognize that the victory sustained by us has laid on the American people the burden of responsibility for the future leadership of the world.

Dwight Eisenhower, 1953: Fate has laid on our country the responsibility of the leadership of the free world.

John Kennedy, 1961: We have to carry out the commitments laid on us by fate in world leadership.

And finally Ronald Reagan, 1981: We will once again be the symbol of freedom and the beacon of hope for those who have no freedom.

That is how in all the 200 years of the existence of the United States the idea has been drummed into the Americans' heads of their own exclusivity. It is natural that in the heads of Philistines such an idea inevitably grows into the idea of everything being permitted. And if this Philistine is an ordinary American, as they say -- the man in the street -- then he will begin to applaud the President's decision to carry out an air raid on Libya. But if this Philistine becomes the dditor of a newspaper, let us say, then he publishes articles in support of this bombing, as, let us say, the San Francisco CHRONICLE, the TRIBUNE, and some other U.S. newspapers, many U.S. newspapers, have done only recently. But if a Philistine poisoned with such ideas of everything permitted lands in the White House, then the most frightening happens: the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the invasion of Korea and Vietnam, the dominican Republic of Grenada, and finally the bombing of Libya. Let us watch these pictures once again. You and I, like the whole world, have already seen them more than once.

Let us once again evaluate the skill of the U.S. military pilots, who, as the President said, succeeded in their mission. I welcome the assistance and the professionalism of the people in our Armed Forces who carried out this operation, said the President of these gallant servicemen, of these knights without fear of reproach. Yes, the President can be proud of them; such a President can be proud of such pilots! He can receive applause and joyous laughter as his due; he has enough coolness to pay no attention to the tears of children, to the blood of his victims, to the curses and anger which the whole civilized world directs at the White House.

'Uninformed' Support Reagan

LD210948 Moscow TASS in English 0936 GMT 21 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 21 TASS — TASS Political News Analyst Sergey Kulik writes:

Having let himself be taken in by chauvinistic propaganda, thickly larded with lies, the American man-in-the-street was unable to rise to condemnation of Washington's political banditry against Libya. The ordinary Americans have the impression of a fabulous military triumph, the British newspaper OBSERVER comments, not without surprise. THE NEW YORK TIMES also points out that most of the Americans endorsed the raids on Tripoli and Benghazi. James Reston, however, explains the phenomenon by the fact that uninformed public opinion approves of President Reagan.

The Americans were indeed told and continue to be told lies. At first Washington made believe that it was out to punish Libya as a "centre of international terrorism" -- but in reality it is not the African coast of the Mediterranean but Langley that directs international terrorism. Then the Americans were hypocritically promised a "surgical operation" against Libyan military facilities -- but it was residential districts, farms and orange groves of the Libyans that were raided.

The Americans were told lies that just 57 warplanes took part in the attack on Libya though Italian radars detected 70-75 aircraft carrying out bomb runs. The Pentagon lied to the Americans, British and the whole of the outraged world that 29 bombers had flown out of Air Force bases in Britain for the raid though in reality 44 warplanes had taken off the strips in Upper Heyford and Lakenheath.

The London SUNDAY TIMES said that, contrary to a secret agreement between Washington and London that five targets were to be bombed, the Americans arbitrarily increased their number by adding residential districts in Libyan cities.

The Italian defense minister concluded that the Americans had isolated themselves from their allies because of the raid on Libya. Even the office of the "Iron Lady", who played the unseemly role of an accomplice of the Washington state terrorists, is now trying to dissociate Britain from any future anti-Libyan ventures of the White House. The London SUNDAY TIMES today reports that Thatcher intends to refuse President Reagan's new request for permission to use the U.S. bases in Britain to deliver another strike at Libya.

Newspapers report that official spokesmen for the British prime minister's office admit that she is getting countless letters of protest and that people keep calling her office to voice outrage over Britain's complicity in U.S. banditry.

The world as a whole is growing more and more alarmed by its understanding of the outcome of Washington's policy of state terrorism, an offspring of Reagan's doctrine of "new globalism." Grenada fell victim to the USA a year and a half ago, Libya nowadays, and tomorrow any other country which refuses to bow to American diktat may become a target. No talk about the need "to fight terrorism" can give the U.S. Administration the right to act as an "international arbiter" and to substitute jungle law for the principles of international intercourse. Moreover, it is not terrorism, strongly denounced by the world community as a whole, that is at issue in this case.

Media's Chauvinism Seen

[Vadim Lobachenko report from Washington; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] In these days following the bandit raid by U.S. aircraft on Libyan cities, material about it in newspapers and magazines and on television screens for the most part recalls well-illustrated military dispatches from the Pentagon, with appropriate commentaries. They are packed with images of the aircraft in flight, rockets being fired, and maps and plans showing the bombing raids against Libya.

The bellicose newspaper headlines and television captions here are typical: Tripoli Erupts; U.S. Hits Libya; Target Libya. The main U.S. papers seem to exude a cloud of chauvinism.

In this way they act as accomplices of official Washington, which, on the pretext of the struggle against terrorism, is whipping up a campaign of chauvinism in the country. The scale of the current hysteria may be judged by the mass production in the United States of new targets for shooting practice. These are made in the form of the figure of Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, the head of the sovereign state of Libya, apparently in order to whip up the anti-Libyan mood in the United States and prepare the population for new aggressive operations against Libya.

The pirate action of the Pentagon has caused pain in the hearts of honest Americans. A mass demonstration in the center of New York was held under the slogans, "Hands off Libya; We want peace!"

The U.S. aggressive actions are very dangerous, says Prof (Gerald Horan), an eminent U.S. scholar, and despite the chauvinist campaign in the country, a growing number of Americans understand that the Reagan administration has plunged the United States into a real foreign adventure, placing the peace and security of all mankind in jeopardy.

The so-called Reagan doctrine, prof (Gerald Horan) continues, is basically aimed at overthrowing any progressive government which is not to Washington's liking. In the New York district of Harlem, where you and I are now (Gerald Horan) notes, there are whole blocks of slums and ruined buildings. Tens of thousands of homeless people in New York sleep and live right in the street, while millions upon millions of dollars from the U.S. state budget are spent for purposes of war and destruction in Libya, Nicaragua, Afghanistan, and other countries. This is an insane policy, Professor (Horan) concludes, and the U.S. public will resolutely demand that it be changed.

U.S. 'Chauvinistic Intoxication' Cited

LD222320 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1908 GMT 22 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Valeriy Korzin]

[Video shows her sitting to speak, with two boys behind her] Dozens of people in the country were wounded as she was. Dozens of victims of the U.S. aggression are now in hospitals and clinics. These pictures cannot help but arouse feelings of compassion in any normal person for the victims of the attack and indignation at those who cold-bloodedly committed it.

They think differently in Washington, however. The U.S. Congress is seriously discussing a bill that would give the President the legal right to carry out an operation like the one carried out against Libya without having to consult Congress beforehand. One of the sponsors of this bill, Senator Jeremiah Denton, said that in the event of acts of state terrorism, this bill would even permit the killing of foreign heads of state. If Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi had died as a result of our strike, he said, this would have been in keeping with the aims of the bill. This is how the chauvinistic intoxication that has now overwhelmed the United States is developing.

In one of his recent speeches, Ronald Reagan recalled the words of Lincoln: Fellow citizens, we cannot turn our backs on history. Evidently, in intending to go down in history as an uncompromising fighter for U.S. interests, Reagan forgets that the laws of historical development are not dependent on U.S. Presidents. No bombing of a peaceful population, no infusions into counterrevolutionary units, no threats of subversive operations can overcome the aspiration of the people for freedom.

'Provocative' Moves Hit

LD210613 Moscow in English to North America 2200 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Valentin Zorin commentary]

[Text] Several of my colleagues and I happened to talk last Saturday to a group of American political observers who were visiting Moscow. Small wonder that our positions disagreed on many issues, but statements by one of the American visitors just took me aback. Tom (Bethell), editor in chief of the Washington edition of HARPER's magazine, declared that in his opinion, any Soviet-American talks, including top-level talks, are unnecessary and useless. America should first gain unquestionable military superiority and only then think of negotiations. Attempting to amend this view held by the Washington journalist, Douglas (McArthur) Jr., who led the delegation of American journalists, started expiating on the benefits that could be derived from talks, especially top-level contacts.

As it often happens in Washington when some officials, including members of the administration, take a tough stand and others cover up by all manner of talk about the need of negotiations and of searching for mutually acceptable and just solutions, the method of the division of roles was used this time as well. So who of the two in Washington speaks for the administration? Those who are so keen at peace rhetoric or those who issue threats right and left? Developments of the last few days have given a clearcut answer to that question.

The world has become eyewitness these days of a whole chain of arrogant and provocative moves by the United States made in response to the Soviet Union's peace initiatives. These moves can be qualified in no other way than an attempt to frustrate the search for ways of improving the international climate, blocking positive trends and quenching hopes that have arisen as a result of the Geneva summit. One such move was the nuclear explosion in Nevada carried out by Washington in defiance of the call of many Americans and of the overwhelming majority of people all over the world to end all nuclear tests.

Another provocative move was America's military attack on little Libya. Americans are led to believe that Washington's illegal actions are part of the effort to combat international terrorism, but Washington has produced no proof showing Libya's involvement in the blast in the West Berlin discotheque or in any other terrorist acts. The Americans are expected to take for granted unsubstantiated statements made by the Washington administration on this. But one can recall similar statements made in the past which turned out to be either erroneous or, more often, deliberately false.

The campaign against terrorism is in this case only a coverup for the policy of state-sponsored terrorism known now as the policy of neoglobalism. In keeping with the doctrine of neoglobalism, Washington usurps for itself the right to punish or pardon whole states or nations at its own discretion. The world has not witnessed such practice since the days of the German Reich.

Some time ago the Soviet leadership warned the American Administration of the need of carefully weighing its actions everywhere, especially in regions lying in close proximity to Soviet borders. Washington, however, preferred to ignore these warnings, scorn the position of its allies and undertake actions seriously aggravating world tensions and enhancing the danger of war.

U.S. 'Piling Up Lies'

LD191759 Moscow TASS in English 1724 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 19 TASS — Follows commentary by Boris Shabayev, TASS political news analyst:

A difficult question has been put to the U.S. delegation at the U.N. Security Council, which is currently discussing the question of the U.S. armed aggression against Libya, "Where are the proofs of your claims that Libya is responsible for 'international terrorism'? This is a reasonable question, the more so, that Libya has categorically rejected the American charges and officially condemned the acts of terrorism, in particular, the bomb explosion in a West Berlin discotheque, in which an American soldier was killed.

Instead of an answer, followed unintelligible and unconvincing specualation by the U.S. representatives, that would be appropriate, at its best, for lowgrade gutter press. But this is precisely the kind of an "argument", which Washington allegedly has at its disposal, about Libya's complicity in terrorism, by which they are trying to justify the monstrous crime perpetrated by the U.S. Airforce on direct orders of the White House — a raid on unsuspecting and brightly lit Libyan cities. The bloody price of that crime was tens of people killed, including babies-in-arms, hundreds of injured inhabitants of Tripoli and Banghazi.

Washington, which found itself pilloried in face of a storm of wrath and indignation sweeping the whole planet, started piling up lies, trying to shift the blame for the crime on other people.

First, Mr. Bernard Kalb, a State Department spokesman, and after him, other Washington administration officials, began zealously speculating in the mass media on the need to resort to military measures against Libya through the fault of ... the Soviet Union, Moscow, they claim, did not respond to the request of the USA for assistance in preventing acts of terrorism, and Washington had nothing left to it, but lauch a "preemtive" strike.

Such is Washington's explanation for the crime. But the truth is that in answer to the U.S. request to the Soviet side the latter asked that concrete facts be furnished to support the charges made. Such facts have proved to be lacking. Hence, the answer could, naturally, be only one: The Soviet Union has always condemned and continues condemning terrorism in any of its manifestations, both individual and state-sponsored terrorism, has always advocated and continues advocating international cooperation in the effort to eliminater terrorism. But this should be done on the basis of the facts rather than inventions. In so doing one should not overlook the causes of terrorism, which is known to emerge where the rights of peoples and national dignity are crudely violated.

But maybe the USA simply did not wish to reveal to Moscow the sources of that information, and therefore did not produce any concrete facts? In that case what sort of information did Vernon Walters, who is known as an expert in clandestine operations, take to London, Paris and Rome? His aim was to get permission for the flight of U.S. aircraft loaded with bombs over the airspace of those countries in the raid on Libya. Could it be that he did not inform the U.S. allies in NATO about the facts? To all appearances, judging by the fact that Paris and Rome refused point blank to meet the U.S. demand, the White House emissary came to them empty-handed too.

Yet, elementary logic prompts that if Washington really had any concrete facts then, as Mr. Kalb himself noted with good reason, answering the inquisitive journalists, the explosion in the discotheque would have been prevented.

Criminals are known to be always willing to conceal every trace of their crime. But if such traces are too obvious, they always wish to decline their responsibility. Therefore, they in Washington are staging a fresh farce. But the most disquieting thing is that under the cover of inventions they are preparing for new bandit raids, as the American "hawks" have failed to achieve their aims.

Reagan Circumvents Congressmen

LD200907 Moscow TASS in English 0847 GMT 20 Apr 86

["White House Tries To Act in Circumvention of Congress" — TASS Headline]

[Text] Washington April 20 TASS — TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports:

The attack by the U.S. Armed Forces on Libya, mounted on order from President Reagan, testifies to the growing danger of the United States being dragged into a new protracted war in circumvention of the country's supreme legislative authority. Many leading congressmen draw attention with alarm to this circumstance and demand that the administration scrupulously abide by the War Powers Act enacted after the United States' aggression in Vietnam suffered the fiasco with a view to preventing the President from making an individual decision related to war and peace.

The administration alleges that in ordering the "blitzkrieg strike" at Libya it didn't violate the War Powers Act since this law commits the administration to notify Congress about the involvement of U.S. Armed Forces in combat not later than in 48 hours after these actions are started and to halt them, if Congress fails, in a lapse of 90 days, to give its consent to their continuation. Conducting the strike against Libya, administration officials and supporters of the aggression against Libya in Congress contend, lasted only 40 minutes and, hence, the War Powers Act was purportedly not broken.

Nevertheless, a group of Democratic senators led by Robert Byrd, leader of the Democratic Minority, sent a message to President Reagan demanding that the administration refrain from taking in the future any actions involving the use of armed forces without preliminary consultation with Congress. The authors of the message suggest setting up a "consultative group" comprising 18 people, including the speaker of the House of Representatives, president of the Senate, the majority and minority leaders in both chambers of Congress, and also heads of the Senate and House committees on armed services, foreign affairs and intelligence. The members of the group should examine in advance all circumstances under which the U.S. Armed Forces can be committed to action.

Apart from Robert Byrd, the message was signed by Democrats leading officials of Senate committees on armed services, foreign relations and intelligence. Democrat Dante Fascell, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and a co-author of the War Powers Act, announced that the committee led by him would hold hearing shortly on U.S. Administration's compliance with that law. He stressed that having ordered the raid on Libya, the President violated the act. Republican Mark Hatfield, chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, levelled criticism at the administration's actions. Republican Richard Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who usually unreservedly supports the administration, demanded that the President "consider" plans of military operations against Libya jointly with the congressmen.

With a view to neutralizing congressmen's attempts to limit the administration's freedom of action in questions of direct use of the U.S. Armed Forces abroad, the White House engineered moves to submit to both chambers of Congress a bill whose adoption would in actual fact cancel congress' control of any kind over the administration's actions. This bill was reported to have been tabled at the Senate on instructions from President Reagan by Republican Majority Leader Robert Dole.

Broader Powers Considered

LD190202 Moscow TASS in English 0741 GMT 18 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 18 TASS — TASS correspondent Igor Ignatyev reports:

Supporters of the White House on the Capitol Hill are in a hurry to ensure for the U.S. Administration legislatively a free hand for launching new bandit actions against other countries, similar to the recent U.S. Air Force raids on Libya.

To this end, a group of senators and congressmen from the ruling party tabled at both chambers a bill empowering the President to give orders, without any consultations or preliminary notification, on carrying out punitive operation, including armed strikes against any country, on the plea of "combatting terrorism." The AP agency stresses that this bill empowers the President to sanction any actions, including political assassinations of the leaders of foreign countries.

In other words, state terrorism, which has become the core of the U.S. Administration's foreign policy is this to be elevated to the status of law.

The proposed measure will, as a matter of fact, eliminate the provisions of the American legislation, which limit to a degree the launching of aggressive actions not only against those whom official Washington brands as "terrorists". But even whole states. The latest events in Libya, Congressman Joe Barton openly said, have demonstrated that the laws in effect now restrict the President's powers for taking speedy actions. In their ardour to play up to the White House, its supporters on the Capitol Hill have gone so far as to undermine by their initiatives the functions of the congress itself, which has long been the administration's objective. George Shultz, U.S. secretary of state, who poses as the main "theoretician" of the policy of "combatting terrorism" described as "impermissible luxury" the constitutional powers of the Congress preventing the White House from taking determined actions on foreign policy issues, above all, when it concerns the use of armed force.

The aggressive action of the United States against Libya and the attempt made now to legalise that crime and pave the ground for future crimes are proof that Washington is turning a deaf ear to the demands of the peoples of the world for ending the policy of aggression and brigandage, is again preparing to flout the sovereignty of other states.

Attack Violates UN Charter

LD191715 Moscow World Service in English 1510 GMT 19 Apr 86

[(Nataliya Zakharova) commentary]

[Excerpts] Speaking in the White House recently, President Reagan praised highly the unprovoked bandit raid on Libya. He portrayed that act of state sponsored terrorism as a display of America's determination to fight for freedom and legality, claiming that Washington's actions stand in conformity with the United Nations Charter. Here to comment on this statement is Soviet expert in international law, (Nataliya Zakharova):

[Begin (Zakharova) recording in Russian with superimposed English translation] By sending its planes carrying lethal cargoes to attack Libyan territory, (Nataliya Zakharova) is saying the United States has grossly violated both the United Nations Charter and many underlying principles of international law. In his speech the American President kept referring to the United Nations Charter, that major international document designed to help promote peace and international security. But point four of Article Two of that document states that in their international relations all members should refrain from threatening to use force or from the use of force against any other country. The American Administration has competely ignored that commitment. It has also ignored point three of the same article, obliging members of the United Nations organization to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered.

I would like to emphasize that these provisions of the United Nations Charter are reaffirmed in the declaration adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1970 and in the Helsinki Final Act of the European Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe of which the United States is a cosignatory. Washingtion's actions against Libya therefore cannot be qualified otherwise than as a flagrant act of treachery and of mockery of international law norms.

The heavy responsibility for all these gross violations of international legality and order is certain to be redoubled by the consequences that they may lead to. As the general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, Mikhail Gorbachev, has put it, the United States has again posed itself as the chief culprit guilty of escalation of world tensions and of playing irresponsibly with destinies of millions of people for the sake of satisfying its imperial ambitions. Academic Questions Legality [Text] Moscow April 22 TASS — The military actions of the USA against Libya are a logical follow-up to the U.S. policy aimed at forcing a change on the home and foreign policies of progressive states, and, if possible, toppling their leaders, a TASS correspondent was told by Gleb Starushenko, deputy director of the Institute of Africa of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR. Since the overthrow of political regimes from the outside is unlawful, the U.S. Administration is out to legalize the "right" to intervention, the prominent Soviet lawyer said.

The aggression against Grenada, the growing interference in Nicaragua's home affairs and the attack against Libya are all links of the U.S. policy of state terrorism.

Another method of undermining the international norms is through their distorted interpretation. President Reagan is trying to present the attack against Libya is an act of self-defence, albeit from the legal viewpoint this is a groundless argument.

In accordance with the definition of that phenomenon, which is recognized by all states, including the USA, aggression is interpreted as first use by a state of armed force against the sovereignty, territorial inviolability or political independence of another state (Article 1 and 2 of U.N. General Assembly Resolution 3314 /XXIX). It follows from this that the right to self-defence envisaged by Article 51 of the U.N. Charter belongs to a state, against which another state was the first to use armed force. Since the USA was not a target of an attack by Libya's armed forces, and neither the sovereignty, nor the territory or political independence of the United States were threatened, the USA had no right to self-defence in that case. It is precisely Washington which launched an act of aggression and was the first to use armed force against Libya, the scholar explained.

Deplorably, acts of international terrorism are getting ever more frequent, the scholar said. And responsible for that is above all the United States. Its policy of institutionalized terrorism is a component and most dangerous part of international terrorism. Moreover, by crudely flouting the rights of other states and peoples, humiliating their national dignity and placing them in an extremely difficult position, for example, Nicaragua, the USA far from suppressing is, on the contrary, encouraging acts of terrorism against sovereign states.

Decision To Bomb Described

[From the "International Panorama" program, presented by Aleksandr Bovin]

[Text] The past week has been an alarming one. It has confirmed once again just how tense, contradictory, and full of contrast is the world in which we live. Just compare the beginning of the week -- the United States bombs Tripoli and Banghazi; Reagan continues the offensive against international law and order, against the Geneva accord -- and the end of the week — the Soviet Union continues its peace offensive. Speaking in Berlin, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev proposed, in addition to our previous initiatives, that all components of ground forces and tactical air forces in Europe, and also nuclear weapons of operational-tactical designation, be considerably reduced.

I am not going to dwell on the factual side of the Libyan events; you are very well aware of them. And you are also aware of the assessment given by our government, which resolutely condemned this criminal action by the White House. But how did people in America react to this deed of the Reagan administration? Let us listen first of all to Vladimir Dunayev:

[Dunayev] Somehow they happened to coincide — the week the cherry trees blossomed and the week of preparations for the piracy in Libya. One thing was on the surface — an annual holiday that was starting in Washington -- while the other was hidden, and hidden very deeply indeed. At the time that this parade to mark the week the cherry trees blossom was taking place just hours remained before the attack on Libya. Already prepared for take-off were American squadrons with experience in carpet-bombing of Hanoi, with the object of diving low over Tripoli and Banghazi. There was a holiday in Washington, but American servicemen — not these who are marching in the parade, they are for domestic adoration — but those in the Pentagon, on the bases and aircraft carriers; they picked out on their charts those parts of the Libyan cities that were to be wiped from the face of the earth.

Yes, while we were filming this parade we did not know what was going to happen the next day, we did not know the kind of muscle display these American personages were going to put on before the whole world, prepared as they were to transfer their cruel games from the American screen to expanses of land on earth. At the very moment the indispensible, inevitable, colorful parade that goes back 200 years was moving along Constitution Avenue in the very middle of Washington, there was General Washington's column, made up of Americans who have fought for freedom.

How long ago all that was! Now there is nothing but the name of the capital to remind one of those times. It has fallen to few countries to outrage in such a way their own history and their own pride, to become the suppressors of the freedom of other peoples, to attack the independence of neighboring countries and countries far away. The cherry blossom week and the week of preparations for invasion went hand-in-hand. At the very beginning of the week, while they were choosing beauty queens from each of the 50 states for this parade and the festive procession along Constitution Avenue it was already known that two aircraft carriers, the Coral Sea and America,were approaching the shores of Libya. On Wednesday, while they were choosing the best bands for this parade in a theater on 15th Street, President Reagan made his final decision to punish Libya. But they did not think that the two aircraft carriers were enough for the bombing of Libya's cities. It would take 10 days to call up a third aircraft carrier. And the White House was very impatient to see the flames of Tripoli. It was decided to use aircraft based in Britain — after all, they are very good for night bombing operations.

The attack could have taken place by the time of the cherry blossom parade. It remained only to get Margaret Thatcher's agreement. Eighteen bombers will take off with cargo for the women and children of Libya. Sixteen will return to base. One will make a forced landing in Spain. One will be shot down. In London they hesitated. There they were also afraid that involvement in the piracy would cost them dearly. But they were not bold enough to say no to the Americans. It was on this very Sunday when this parade was taking place, when the clowns here were entertaining the public, that agreement from Britain came. It was midday in Washington and evening in London: In Tripoli night was falling. The last night for dozens of Libyans, who on the following night would be hit by American bombs and missiles aimed by lasers.

I do not believe that the Americans with whom I watched this festival could wish death upon Libyan children. The day of the parade was the last sunny day in Washington. There is thunder and it's raining here now. But Americans are going to the White House and to the Lincoln Memorial to preserve the honor and the dignity of America, to protest their government's terrorism and the fumes of American chauvinism.

And I do believe that these Americans, who watched and took part in the cherry blossom parade, I believe that they, too, are now at the White House carrying protest placards in their hands. Because a blossoming cherry tree cannot be betrothed to high explosives and ash; it cannot be betrothed to death.

There is only one thing that hurts, the fact that it is from this town, Washington, where they know how to celebrate and have so much fun, that squadrons are now being sent out to different parts of the globe; and the fact that it is from here, from the White House which we are now approaching and where this parade is heading, the fact that it is from the White House that orders are issued which are followed by exploding bombs and which make living on this planet more alarming.

U.S. Stand 'Utterly Cynical'

LD181403 Moscow TASS in English 1253 GMT 18 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 18 TASS -- Official Washington's current stand in connection with the act of terrorism against Libya can be described as being utterly cynical. They in Washington are denying the obvious truth and totally disregarding the tragic consequences of the U.S. bandit attack against that sovereign state.

Reagan as before believes that he was absolutely right in acting against Libya, newsmen were frankly told by Larry Speakes, presidential deputy press secretary. In answer to one of the questions, the spokesman for the White House had the insolence to say that the USA "knew nothing" about the death of the eighteen-month-old daughter of the leader of the Libyan revolution Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi as a result of the raid of the U.S. bombers. We did not see her identity papers, he said.

The CBS television company said that the losses of civilian life in Libya had been actually "planned" by the Pentagon in advance. As the NBC said, the USA may again strike against Libya. New facts have been learned that one of the main aims of the bombing of Tripoli was to kill Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi in contravention of American laws officially banning attempts on the life of foreign leaders. In that connection the ABC showed sequences of a videofilm of the attack against Libya, which was issued by the Pentagon. One of the sequences clearly shows the building of Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's headquarters and a tent standing next to it, in which as is believed, the Libyan leader stayed during the raid. An F-111 fighter-bomber dropped on that place a bomb weighing more than 900 kg, the ABC said.

The newspaper WASHINGTON POST says in this connection today that the bombing raid against Libya was planned in the hope that Al-Qadhdhafi would be killed. The main target of the attack was his command post. A statement to this effect was made by well-informed representatives of the administration. We hoped that we would get at him, said one of the administration's officials, who took part in preparing the raid. Moreover, according to the newspaper, the administration prepared in advance the draft statement describing Al-Qadhdhafi's expected death as "accidental".

Now that the plans of the USA to kill the leader of the Libyan revolution have proved to be a failure, Washington has launched a campaign of psychological warfare in order to try to destabilise the situation in that country. This has been admitted by Secretary of State George Shultz. The CBS quoted him as telling reporters on Thursday night that as he hoped the American raids would result in the overthrow of Al-Qadhdhafi. The newspaper WASHINGTON POST quotes in that connection a spokesman for the administration as admitting that the aim of "clandestine operations" launched by the USA against Libya is to overthrow the Libyan leader. At the same time the American observers unanimously admit that Washington's aggressive stand against Libya is not shared by an overwhelming majority of the West European allies of the United States.

Attack Aimed To Instigate Coup

LD210339 Moscow in English to North America 2200 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Igor Pavlov commentary]

[Text] As President Reagan made his way to a helicopter on Friday a question was shouted to him about whether the U.S. Air Force had had orders to kill Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. We weren't out to kill anybody, the President replied. Our observer Igor Pavlov makes this comment:

About 15 minutes after the raids were over, the government-controlled Voice of America began broadcasting an editorial with an appeal to the Libyan people to revolt and overthrow Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. Radio stations are supposed to broadcast information and opinions, not appeals to revolt. The VOA editorial was part of a carefully planned operation or, rather, a military coup d'etat that the U.S. planned to engineer in a sovereign nation, not just what it called a reprisal. As more and more details are being disclosed, it's also becoming clear that the raids were not a near flawless surgical attack that would go down in American military annals. One F-111 was shot down and two pilots were killed. Aborted missions were not due to the pilots' restraint or humanism but to technical failures and equipment malfunctions. The heavy civilian casualties were not a result of inadvertent bombing. They were caused by the flyers' desire to get out of the heavy anti-aircraft fire unscathed.

On Monday congressional leaders were notified about the impending attack. They were told that chances to kill Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi were slim and that therefore the attack was not a personal revenge but a political necessity. However, the news that Al-Qadhdhafi's children were killed and wounded had made some lawmakers doubt that they were told the truth. Hatred of Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi dates back to the time when he put an end to the U.S. military presence in Libya and nationalized American property after the 1969 revolutions. There have been several attempts on his life by Israel and the United States.

We weren't out to kill anybody, said President Reagan on Friday. On that same day there was a funeral in Tripoli and the victims of the attack were buried outside the city in a cemetery reserved for war heroes. Clenched fists raised in anger were a convincing reply to Washington's state-supported terrorism.

Missiles Deployed Before Raid

LD191026 Moscow TASS in English 0914 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] Kuwait April 19 TASS -- The United States put its nuclear missiles in three West European countries on combat alert last Tuesday prior to its aggression against Libya, KUNA news agency reported from London. It quoted John Milner, a spokesman for the British Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, as telling its correspondent that peace campaigners in Britain, Italy and West Germany had watched those deployments.

In England, missiles were moved to take up positions in Salisbury Plain, a thinly-populated area 75 kilometers south-west of the base at Greenham Common. A planned British Army exercise had to be urgently called off to allow the deployment of the U.S. missiles.

Nuclear-tipped Pershing missiles sited in Ulm and Mutlangen in West Germany were deployed in the course of a NATO exercise under the heavy guard of U.S. troops several hours before the U.S. aerial attack on Libya. Missiles were put in a state of combat readiness also in Comiso, Italy. All those deployments were carried out simultaneously in the three countries, Milner said.

'Time Fragmentation' Bombs Dropped

LD210420 Moscow TASS in English 1100 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 20 TASS — TASS correspondent Vladimir Bogachev and Georgiy Shelenkov report:

Foreign journalists have seen with their own eyes the falsity of the Pentagon's assertions when they went to the area of the international Tripoli Airport which was subjected to U.S. barbarous bombing.

It is not military structures but peaceful Libyan villages that were the targets of the bombing raid. Bomb craters, collapsed walls of utility structures and dwellings, trees cut by bomb fragments and brought down by a blasting wave — such was the Shavat village, located near the airport, seen by the journalists. U.S. bombs and shells fell on gardens and orange plantations. There are civilian casualties.

An official Libyan representative has said that a time fragmentation bomb went off in the area of the airport yesterday, hitting three persons, among them two children. Another 17 such trap bombs were discovered in that area, dropped by American aircraft in the course of the barbarous raid on Libyan towns.

Weinberger Praises Thatcher

LD191549 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1100 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] The Pentagon intends to use the U.S. military bases in Great Britain as it sees fit, and London should be prepared for the United States of America to again consider it necessary to use its armed forces deployed in Britain for practical purposes. Caspar Weinberger, U.S. secretary of defense, said this in essence during an interview which was relayed to Western capitals via a communications satellite. The military agreement with Great Britain, he noted, envisages the use of U.S. Armed Forces in Britain not only in such cases as the action against Libya, but in other similar situations. Praising the Thatcher government for its cooperation in the organization of the raid on Libya, Weinberger confirmed that in fact the majority of the U.S. allies in NATO were not informed by the United States of the timing and other details of the raid on Tripoli and Banghazi.

Differences With Allies Admitted

[By TASS correspondent Aleksandr Shalnev]

[Text] Washington, 19 Apr (TASS) -- Caspar Weinberger, U.S. secretary of defense, has admitted in an interview granted to a group of West European journalists that there exist serious disagreements between the United States and the majority of its allies in Western Europe on the question of policy regarding Libya.

In addition, the Pentagon chief made it clear that Washington will continue to strive for the unconditional support of its allies for its future actions against the Libyan Jamahiriyah. It therefore follows, from the utterances of the head of the U.S. military department, that after the barbaric bombardment of Libya the United States now intends to introduce a wide-scale economic and trade blockade of that North African state.

As is known, Washington's previous attempts to establish such a blockade turned, in fact, into a fiasco: Many West European countries refused to be led by the Reagan administration.

It is possible that Washington may now resort to blackmailing its allies in its efforts to get them to halt their business ties with Libya; the administration is threatening to carry out new raids against the Jamahariyah if the Europeans don't agree to "these measures of pressure" with regard to Tripoli. The probability of such a development was partly confirmed by C. Weinberger himself, who said in the interview that Reagan would not have subjected Libya to bombardment if effective economic sanctions were in effect.

U.S. Miscalculated World Opinion

LD182158 Moscow TASS in English 2134 GMT 18 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 18 TASS -- By TASS Political News Analyst Boris Shabayev:

When sending its warplanes to bring down a lethal cargo of bombs on Libya, the White House clarly hoped that the "surgical operation" of that kind will run smoothly both in military and political terms.

It clearly hoped that nations and governments, especially those in the "Third World", would shudder with horror, defeated by the roar of jet bombers and the sound of explosions, and would follow Washington's instructions more obediently after that.

However, it is obvious that Washington strategists, both military and political, have miscalculated.

The bombing strikes failed to bring Libya to its knees, and the whole wide world rose in a single impulse of anger and indignation.

As soon as the news about the atrocious crime of U.S. imperialism reached New Delhi, the venue of a meeting of the Coordinating Bureau on nonaligned countries, its delegates strongly condemned what they called a shameful, impudent and unprovoked act of aggression staged by the U.S.

A group of nonaligned countries representing Africa, Asia and Latin America in the United Nations Security Council submitted a draft resolution which strongly denounced U.S. actions violating the United Nations Charter and norms of international law and demanded that Washington immediately stop all attacks and threats of using armed force.

The Organization of African Unity strongly protested against an impudent and contemptible breach of international law by the United States.

We mentioned here only a few collective protests of nonaligned countries: it would be simply impossible to list all individual ones.

However, it deserves mention that all the statements made in protest against the U.S. move regarded the criminal act staged by the United States not as an "isolated" case, and surely not as a "pre-emptive" strike at "terrorism."

Washington dealt a pre-emptive strike at the cause of the world peace, at hopes and positive tendencies that came into existence as a result of the Geneva meeting. The Nonaligned Movement regarded the bandit raid on Libya precisely from that standpoint.

The preamble of the said draft resolution of the United Nations Security Council emphasized that the armed attacks of the United States on Libyan cities posed a threat to international peace and security.

At that crucial moment when the reckless actions of the U.S. Administration are pushing the world to a dangerous brink it is inadmissible to remain passive with regard to such actions, (?for) the aggressor surely hopes for this kind of reaction when it claims the role of an "international judge" for itself and replaces the recognized principles of international relations with jungle law.

An active stand of the Nonaligned Movement on that matter which is of paramount importance for safeguarding international peace and upholding the fundamental norms of the United Nations Charter and international law bears witness to the political maturity of the movement and its sense of responsibility for the future of mankind.

World Reaction Noted

LD202239 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 20 Apr 86

[From the "International Panorama" program presented by Aleksandr Bovin]

[Text] Voices of protest have run out and are ringing out. But a majority of Americans at all levels of the social structure support Reagan, often with reservations, but they give their support. Let me give typical statements from two newspapers. Here is the San Francisco CHRONICLE: It is not easy to support a military strike against another nation, but it would seem that it is the only way of convincing Libya's military dictator that he cannot direct terrorist attacks on U.S. targets throughout the world without paying a high price for this. And THE LOS ANGELES TIMES: The events of the recent past show that vengeance breeds vengeance. There is nothing left for us and for all Americans to do other than hope that the escalation of terrorism can be halted by the air raid.

Unfortunately history gives no guarantees that these hopes will be fulfilled. And this note of alarm, that there is no guarantee, sounds loudly even in the camp of those supporting the action. It is a contradiction between emotion and reason, if you like. Emotion gives rise to applause. So what, they have taken their revenge; they have shown their strength and their resolve. But reason says that the bombing of Libyan cities strengthens anti-U.S. feeling and is liable to give rise to retaliatory action. But on this occasion emotion is clearly stronger than reason. This is not surprising. Overall, Reagan's move into the White House and the whole Reagan phenomenon has been brought about not just by neoconservative feeling but by chauvinistic and blind patriotic feeling as a result of the wave that swept America at the beginning of the eighties.

Now let us turn to the allies. The United States was supported clearly and unambiguously only by Britain, Canada, and Israel. The other countries in one way or another expressed their disapproval. Of course Washington knew about those feelings in Western Europe. On Monday, a few hours before the bombing, the Common Market foreign ministers called on all sides to show restraint but the White House did not deem it necessary to comply with this recommendation. And the WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU in the FRG writes: The night bombing of the Libyan cities is adventurist in the highest degree; it is a senseless and dangerous enterprise. The leading Western power has thereby quite simply spat on all the doubts of its European allies. Moreover, the insufficiently energetic position of the West Europeans against possible aggression by Washington has intensified even more the U.S. intentions to carry out its plan.

And here are two more interesting extracts, this time from Japanese newspapers. MAINICHI writes that one result of the escalation of military activity might be greater distrust of U.S. diplomacy by Western countries. It ought to be known that the West does not consider it possible to conquer terrorism by military vengeance. Such tactics, the newspaper writes, merely intensify the vicious circle. And here in more specific terms is the TOKYO SHIMBUN: The historic roots of terrorism in the Middle East are to be found in the conflict between the Arab countries and Israel and in the fact that the Palestinian problem has not been solved. The way towards eradicating terrorism is in a constructive settlement of the Middle East problems. A thought that is perfectly correct, but evidently one that is too complicated for the Washington politicians. They prefer simpler solutions which rely upon the tradition of power politics and the mailed fist. Evidently Vietnam counts for little with the Americans, Iran counts for little, so too does the Bay of Pigs: they have been forgotten, they have stagnated, or whatever. And so once again they are starting to wave their fists.

It is interesting, I have received a lot of letters and there have been many telephone calls of late, particularly following the appearance of the U.S. ships off the shores of the Crimea: What is happening? people write and ask. How come the Americans can behave in an impudent and crude way? We, too, ought to be banging the table with our fists. I understand completely those comrades, but let us think this out together. Do we have to use those rules of the game that are the very ones the Americans are trying to impose on us? Do we have to rise to these provocations? Let us recall that not so long ago the Americans celebrated their 200th anniversary as an independent state. Our statehood goes back for more than 1000 years. Our historical experience is much richer, we are five times as old, and we have a far richer experience in handling international affairs. And naturally we must be more clever than the Americans, more restrained and more responsible in our behavior. You can imagine, Comrade Gorbachev said in Berlin, what would be left of the human race and its civilization if the Soviet Union acted in a similar way to the United States in the world arena.

That is the main thing, comrades. We are very strong. It is difficult even to imagine how strong we are. Our strength when multiplied by reason, our strength which naturally moves in step with reason, is directed toward halting man's slide towards nuclear disaster, to halt the slide and not to nudge it forward. And this, I repeat, is the main thing.

Arab Condemnation Cited

[Text] Beirut April 18 TASS -- Many Lebanese cities have been a scene of strikes and demonstrations in protest against the U.S. attack against Libya. In Sidon, Tripoli, Ba'albekk and Beirut demonstrators carried posters sayings: "USA -- focus of international terrorism". Walid Junblatt, chairman of Lebanon's Progressive Socialist Party, and M. Sa'd, general secretary of the People's Nasirite Organisation, addressed telegrams to Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, the leader of the Libyan revolution, condemning the criminal actions of the USA and declarating support for the people and leadership of the Jamahiriyah. Isam al-Mahayri, chairman of the Party Nationaliste Syrian of Lebanon, said that the U.S. "big stick" policy will not intimidate those who are resolved to uphold their right and national dignity.

The USA is impudently flouting the U.N. Charter and the declaration of human rights. It is high time for the Arabs to understand that Washington is their main enemy, says the statement by the Lebanese Writers Union.

Damascus April 18 TASS -- The Syrian working class calls the Arabs for further strengthening their staunchness in face of the aggressive designs of reaction, the statement by the General Federation of Labour Unions of Syria, said.

The National Committee of the Peace Champions of Syria described the actions of the USA as a crime flouting the basic norms of international law. The aggression against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, the statement by the committee says, has once again exposed the real stand of the White House, which is openly hostile to the peoples upholding their legitimate striving for independence and sovereignty.

The attack against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, says the statement by the Arab Socialist Union Party, is convincing evidence of the policy of state terrorism pursued by the U.S. Administration in the international arena. The militaristic ambitions of the Washington expansionists are truly boundless.

Cairo April 18 TASS -- Washington's aggression against Libya has been one of the manifestations of its policy of neoglobalism directed at heightening tensions in the world and ensuring world domination, says the statement by the Progressive Youth Union of Egypt.

Rabat April 18 TASS -- U.S. imperialism's criminal actions contravene the generally accepted norms of relations between peoples and states, are based on "jungle law" and violence, says the communique issued here by the Political Bureau of the Moroccan Progressive Socialist Party. The U.S. aggression against Libya is spearheaded against all Arab countries, all peoples fighting for freedom, for strengthening peace, against imperialism and neocolonialism.

Kuwait April 18 TASS -- Finance and economics minister of the Arab states condemned the U.S. aggression against Libya and demanded strict sanctions against Washington for the barbarous bombing raids on Libyan cities, says the statement issued here. It was adopted by the Arab ministers at a meeting in Kuwait.

Damascus April 18 TASS -- Mass protest demonstrations have been held in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, the Syrian SANA news agency said. The participants stigmatized the American aggressors and demanded an end to the hostile intrigues of imperialism and Zionism against the Arab peoples.

Sudan Condemns Attack

LD180104 Moscow TASS in English 0924 GMT 18 Apr 86

[Text] Cairo April 18 TASS -- Sudanese Foreign Minister Ibrahim Taha Ayyub has expressed his country's outrage at the U.S. armed attack on Libya.

He told the U.S. ambassador in Khartoum, MENA news agency reported, that the Sudanese Government had decided to recall its ambassador from Washington following the U.S. act of aggression.

MENA also reported that the Trade Union of Sudanese Oil Workers had refused to supply fuel to U.S. ships and aircraft in protest against U.S. aggression.

Kabul April 18 TASS -- The Central Council of the Supreme Jirga (Assembly) of Tribes and the Supreme Council of Ulemas and clergymen of Democratic Afghanistan have condemned U.S. barbarous aggression.

In their statements they said that the United States, flouting all norms and principles of international law and the U.N. Charter, had launched another aggression against the entire Moslem world.

The statements expressed solidarity with the Libyan people's struggle against the intrigues of international imperialists and hit out at the Reagan administration's policy of state-backed terrorism.

Cairo April 18 TASS -- Egypt's People's Assembly has issued a statement here, censuring U.S. aggression against the Libyan people as a gross violation of the U.N. Charter.

The Egyptian people declared once again, it said, that armed force could not and should not be used as a means of settling international conflicts. Egypt, its People's Assembly said, denounced Washington's act of piracy against the Libyan Jamahiriyah.

REAGAN INDICATES U.S. PLANNING ATTACK ON NICARAGUA

LD230706 Moscow TASS in English 0648 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 23 TASS -- The United States is ready to launch the same bandit attack against Nicaragua as it did against Libya. President Reagan made an explicit statement to this effect in his remarks to the attendees at the "Heritage Foundation" dinner on Tuesday.

The "Heritage Foundation" is an ultra-reactionary organization, for which the White House has the greatest esteem.

Reagan made the same charges against the Sandinist Government of Nicaragua of "support for international terrorism", which official Washington was zealously making in the course of a few weeks prior to the bombing raid on Libya. As was the case with Libya, the President could not cite a single fact to "prove" such claims. Yet he firmly declared that the United States would not permit building "a Libya on our doorstep". The significance of last week's events should not be left unclear, President Reagan meaningfully added, implying the raid on Libya. Simultaneously, he reaffirmed that his administration would do its utmost to get from Congress another 100 million dollars for "aid" to the terrorist contras gangs.

ARKHIPOV VIEWS ECONOMIC, SCI-TECH TIES WITH PRC

PM191911 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Yu. Savenkov interview with I.V. Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, under the "IZVESTIYA Interview" rubric: "USSR-CHINA: On the Basis of the Principles of Equality and Mutual Benefit"]

[Text] The first session of the Soviet-Chinese Commission for Economic, Trade, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation was held in Beijing recently. The sides noted substantial progress in these spheres recently and expressed mutual confidence that the results of the session will give new impetus to the trend toward the expansion of mutually advantageous cooperation between the USSR and the PRC.

IZVESTIYA correspondent Yu. Savenkov spoke with I.V. Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, about the galvanization of Soviet-Chinese trade and economic relations and prospects for scientific and technical ties.

[Savenkov] The 27th CPSU Congress again confirmed the Soviet Union's consistent aspiration to improve relations with the PRC and to expand diverse cooperation between the two countries in the interests of the Soviet and Chinese peoples. The recently completed first session of the Soviet-Chinese Commission for Economic, Trade, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation evidently played its role. What do you, as chairman of the Soviet part of the commission, see as the main result of its work?

[Arkhipov] First, a few words about the commission itself. It was created in accordance with the 28 December 1984 agreement between the USSR and PRC Governments. The commission monitors the progress of the fulfillment of agreements and accords between the countries in the field of economic, trade, scientific, and technical cooperation; prepares proposals aimed at its stable development; and examines measures to further expand this cooperation. There is an agreement that the national parts of the commission are headed by deputy heads of government. The chairman of the Chinese part is Li Peng, member of the CPC Central Committee Politburo and Central Committee Secretariat and vice premier of the PRC State Council.

At the first session we discussed a broad circle of problems in Soviet-Chinese trade, economic, scientific, and technical ties; progress in the implementation of the agreement on economic and technical cooperation in the construction and remodeling of industrial projects in the PRC; and results of Soviet-Chinese trade in 1985 and its development prospects.

The sides noted with satisfaction the continuous growth of trade and economic relations between the Soviet Union and China, including border trade, will be further developed on the basis of the long-term trade agreement for 1986-1990. Here it was stressed that we have considerable reserves for expanding trade above the levels envisaged by this agreement.

"Thinking about the future, it can be said that the reserves for cooperation between the USSR and China are enormous. They are great because such cooperation is in both countries' interests, because the most precious things for our peoples — socialism and peace — are indivisible," the CPSU Central Committee Political Report delivered by M.S. Gorbachev to the 27th congress stated. It was this assessment that guided the Soviet delegation at the commission session.

I would like to stress that the discussion was businesslike and constructive in character and the atmosphere was benevolent.

As a result, we formulated joint decisions and determined new paths and forms of cooperation in trade, economic, scientific, and technical cooperation; education; and some other fields in the interests of deepening and expanding businesslike cooperation between the USSR and the PRC.

We see the main result of the commission's work as the fact that a course has been set that is aimed at ensuring the stable development of cooperation on the basis of the principles of equality and mutual benefit and transferring it onto a long-term planned basis. All this is in keeping with the fundamental interests of the USSR and the PRC and will promote the improvement of the international situation, the growth of socialism's role in world affairs, and the strengthening of the cause of peace and stability in Asia.

[Savenkov] Trade and economic relations between the USSR and the PRC have passed through various stages of development (the fifties, sixties, and seventies). What distinguishes the eighties?

[Arkhipov] In trade and the sphere of economic, scientific, and technical ties between the USSR and the PRC there have been periods of rapid development, and there have also been periods of decline. After the formation of the PRC in 1949 these ties became more diverse and developed actively, reaching their peak in the late fifties. During this period the average annual volume of trade turnover reached approximately R2 billion (in the prices prevailing during those years). Economic and technical cooperation developed fruitfully and extensively. The economic cooperation projects included over 200 enterprises in various sectors of the Chinese national economy. Many thousands of Soviet experts with different specialities worked at PRC enterprises. Thousands of Chinese specialists underwent training in the Soviet Union (in academic institutions and at enterprises). Cooperation between scientific establishments was widely developed, and we also exchanged scientific achievements.

During the second half of the sixties trade and economic relations and scientific and technical ties were practically reduced to zero.

What is characteristic of the eighties? The galvanization of Soviet-Chinese trade, economic, scientific, and technical relations. It began in 1983-1984. The signing in 1984-1985 of a number of agreements on cooperation in these fields was of great importance.

[Savenkov] What are the dynamics of Soviet-Chinese trade in the eighties?

[Arkhipov] Whereas the volume of trade in 1983 totaled R490 million, in 1984 it had reached close to R1 billion, and in 1985 it exceeded R1.6 billion. A further increase in trade turnover is planned this year.

[Savenkov] Thus, recent years have witnessed an appreciable galvanization of trade between our countries. Name some of the commodities (imports and exports), please. A few words about border trade.

[Arkhipov] The agreement on trade turnover and payments in 1986-1990 (the first time such an agreement has been signed, incidentally) envisages a trade turnover of R12 billion in the 5-year plan. There a volume of trade on the order of R3 billion is planned for 1990. As you can see, the dynamic nature of trade is indisputable.

Now, about the range of commodities. The predominant place in Soviet exports is held by machines, diverse industrial equipment, and means of transport, including trucks and passenger cars (around 40,000 in 1985). Soviet Volgas and Zhigulis can be seen on the streets of Chinese cities. We supply aviation equipment. Incidentally, Soviet IL-62 aircraft, including some belonging to the Chinese airline, fly the Moscow-Beijing route.

At the end of last year the IL-86 wide-bodied Soviet passenger aircraft carried out successful demonstration flights in China. It is not ruled out that soon it will also be seen in the skies over China. The USSR also exports ferrous and nonferrous metals, timber materials, chemical products, and other commodities.

The PRC supplies the Soviet Union with products which are essential for the national economy -- tungsten concentrate, flurospar, corn, soybeans meat products, cotton textiles, knitwear and clothing, tea, and other products.

Incidentally, at the commission session we discussed proposals for increasing trade turnover between the countries during the current 5-year plan in comparison with the levels envisaged by the long-term agreement.

As for border trade, although the volume is comparatively small it contributes its own specific color to the palette of our trade and economic ties. Trade has resumed between Khabarovsk and Maritime Krays and Amur and Chita Oblasts on the Soviet side and Heilongjian Province and the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region on the Chinese side; agreement has also been reached on trade between the Soviet Central Asian republics, Kazakhstan, and some RSFSR oblasts and the Xinjiang-Uygur Autonomous Region of the PRC.

[Arkhipov] An agreement on economic and technical cooperation in the construction of industrial projects in the PRC was signed in Moscow last year. Cooperation is envisaged in the construction of 7 new projects and the remodeling of 17 projects built in the PRC with the Soviet Union's assistance in the fifties in such sectors as the power industry, ferrous and nonferrous metallurgy, machine building, the coal and chemical industries, transport, and others.

Here are a few examples. The projects planned for remodeling include the metallurgical combines in Anshan, Baotou, and Uhan and the bearing and tractor plants in Loyang. The new projects include three thermal power stations with a total capacity of 3.6 million kilowatts and an open-cut coal mine (up to 20 million metric tons a year).

As for the content of cooperation, this envisages the completion of design work and the supply and installation of equipment. Visits to China by Soviet specialists and the reception of Chinese technical personnel in the USSR for training are envisaged.

When discussing questions of economic and technical cooperation new proposals from the sides on expanding it were examined. We have considerable reserves in this field.

[Arkhipov] The sides considered it useful to establish ties between the two countries' planning commissions and advocated that they should consult in the future on the form and content of these ties. They expressed themselves in favor of an extensive exchange of experience between the Soviet Union and the PRC on planning questions. After all, our socialist countries have accumulated a considerable amount of things of interest in this field.

[Savenkov] What are the prospects for scientific and technical ties with the PRC?

[Arkhipov] We discussed the state of Soviet-Chinese scientific and technical cooperation and the prospects for expanding it. The commission positively assessed the exchange of scientific and technical delegations and groups begun in 1982. During this period Chinese specialists have familiarized themselves with the USSR's coal and oil industries and the administration of sea ports and the health services. Soviet chemists, petrochemists, fisheries experts, and metallurgists have been to China. And this is far from a complete list.

The reserves in the field of scientific and technical cooperation are undoubtedly considerable and its scale will undoubtedly broaden. To coordinate work in this field, a standing subcommission for scientific and technical cooperation has been created.

It is significant that the view that our scientific and technical cooperation should be transferred onto a long-term basis was expressed at the commission session.

[Savenkov] Your impressions of present-day China. Did you visit the enterprises that you knew well from the fifties?

[Arkhipov] I had rich impressions. An active economic life is going on in the country, industrial enterprises are being built and remodeled, and the rates of development of individual industrial regions are high. We visited enterprises in the suburbs of Beijing and the major industrial centers of Nanking and Wuchi and spoke with representatives of enterprises and organizations and urban and rural inhabitants. It was doubly interesting for me because I worked in China for a long time in the fifties.

Here are a few details. The delegation visited a metallurgical combine on the outskirts of Beijing. For 6 years now it has been working under the conditions of an economic experiment. The enterprise has great economic rights. Out of its high profit the combine is remodeling and expanding its shops and ensuring the solution of social problems — all without financing from the state budget. Under the regulations at least 20 percent of the combine's profits go into the state budget. We looked at the remodeled agglomerate shop. The remodeling has been carried out to a high technical standard. We visited the rolling shop built in the fifties on the basis of Soviet equipment. As the shop chief said, the equipment operates reliably and well. The shop exceeded its design capacity many years ago. Output quality meets high technical demands.

In one of the districts linking six villages on the outskirts of Wuchi we familiarized ourselves with two subsidiary enterprises. The first is a factory manufacturing children's soft toys which works for export orders from foreign trade organizations. It employs 110 female workers. The only equipment is 30 sewing machines. At harvest time the women switch to agricultural work. The second is a small metal plant manufacturing simple mechanisms to orders from a specialized industrial enterprise. These enterprises have a dual purpose: to employ free manpower and bring in revenue to solve the district's social problems.

A characteristic detail: In Beijing, Nanking, and Wuchi alike we met Chinese specialists who were educated in the Soviet Union and worked with Soviet specialists in the fifties. We spoke Russian with them.

In conclusion I would like to say that it is possible to conclude from our conversations with members of the Chinese delegation, workers in the provinces, and leading figures of China that they have a good knowledge of the work of the 27th CPSU Congress and its decisions. They expressed great interest in the congress documents and the socioeconomic program to be implemented in the Soviet Union. The Chinese head of government stated that the course aimed at accelerating the Soviet Union's socioeconomic development and the implementation of reforms in the economic field are of great interest.

The delegation took away with it the conviction that progress in the trade, economic, scientific, technical, and other fields of businesslike cooperation promotes the improvement of relations in other fields too, which is in keeping with the long-term fundamental interests of the peoples of the USSR and China.

SOVIET, PRC TIES DESPITE DIFFERENCES STRESSED

OW180436 Moscow in Mandarin to China 0200 GMT 17 Apr 86

[Mulatov commentary: "Expand the Field of Cooperation"]

[Text] The Soviet Union and China held another round of political consultations in Moscow. While receiving Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen [title as heard], Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze stressed that there is a tremendous potential for Soviet-Chinese cooperation. During the meeting, he also pointed out: Although the Soviet Union and China adopt different attitudes toward some international issues, their interests are objectively identical as far as their striving for peace and socialism and their opposition to the threat of nuclear war, the arms race, and the militarization of the space are concerned. The following is a commentary by station observer Mulatov, entitled: Expand the Field of Cooperation.

Further improving and developing Soviet-Chinese relations in the political, economic, scientific and technological, cultural, and other fields accords with the aspirations of the peoples of the two countries, the interests of consolidating peace in Asia and the world, and the interests of strengthening the international status of socialism. Dear Chinese listeners, what gladdens people is that during their consultations, both sides confirmed that they (?were paying attention to these). The 27th CPSU Congress' programmatic document on the expansion of relations with all other socialist countries explicitly, comprehensively, and specifically reflects the position of the CPSU and the Soviet State on relations with China. On cooperation with other socialist countries, a portion of the party program adopted by the congress stresses: What unites socialist countries is of such primary importance that it eclipses what separates them.

Dear Chinese listeners, I believe you understand the tremendous international significance of strengthening the bilateral relations between two big socialist countries. As you know, imperialism uses political, economic, ideological, and other means as well as national sentiments to commit aggression against other countries, to weaken the international status of socialism, and to sabotage the relations among socialist countries, especially the relations between a socialist country and the Soviet Union. Therefore, in the confrontation between two different systems in the world, it is of particular importance for the socialist countries to firmly unite with one another.

Our two countries have undertaken not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, but the United States and its allies are unwilling to undertake such a commitment. The Soviet Union and China are firmly opposed to the militarization of space, but the United States has started research on its star wars program and has convinced some of its military allies to join the program. Both our countries support Democratic Korea's proposal for the peaceful and democratic reunification of Korea, but the United States has been pursuing a policy of dividing Korea. Both the Soviet Union and China advocate the nonaligned countries' plan to turn the Indian Ocean into a peaceful and nuclear-free zone. This is very important. As you know, the United States -- regardless of the vital interests of the peoples of the various countries in that region -- is expanding its military (?bases) there. There are many other instances in which the fundamental interests of the Soviet Union and China are objectively identical. It should be kept in mind that what unites socialist countries is of such primary importance that it eclipses what separates them.

Ryzhkou, Keshtmand Hold Talks

PM230906 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 22 Apr 86 Single Edition p 2

["Arrival in Moscow" -- KRASNAYA ZVEZDA headline]

[Text] Talks were held in the Kremlin on the same day [21 April] between N.I. Ryzhkov and S.'A. Keshtmand.

During the talks that were held in the atmosphere of friendship and complete mutual understanding, the guest was informed about the work now under way in the Soviet Union to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, the strategic course outlined by the congress of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development, and about the international activity of the CPSU and the Soviet Government in the world situation that has been sharply aggravated by imperialist militaristic circles.

The historic significance of the Soviet nuclear disarmament program advanced in the 15 January statement of M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and of the principled bases of a comprehensive international security system contained in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress was emphasized. The USSR's peace-loving proposals for strengthening all-European security advanced by M.S. Gorbachev in Berlin 18 April have also attracted world public attention.

Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand reaffirmed the support of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan for the Soviet Union's foreign policy initiatives whose implementation would make it possible to radically improve the situation in the world.

The sides noted that the undeclared war unleashed against Afghanistan is part of the general line of the imperialist and reactionary forces at the creation of acute conflict situations in various areas of the world, at the use of those situations for the heightening of tension and the continuation of the arms race.

The sides resolutely condemned the U.S. piratic action against Libya, an action that will escalate international tension. They demanded that the policy of aggression be ended.

The Soviet side emphasized that it supports and will continue supporting the efforts of Democratic Afghanistan aimed at protecting its sovereignty.

The Afghan side confirmed the striving for the speediest political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan. It expressed the intention to press for this aim at the coming round of the Afghan-Pakistani talks to be held in Geneva next May. The Afghan side declared again that it firmly proceeds from the view that the main content of a settlement must be a complete end to armed interference and any other outside interference in the internal affairs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and its guaranteed nonresumption. The Soviet side completely supported a realistic and constructive program advanced by the DRA Government.

A thorough discussion of questions of bilateral relations took place at the talks. The sides noted with satisfaction that relations of friendship, genuine good-neighborliness, and all-round cooperation between the two countries are steadily developing and strengthening.

Special attention was paid to the further widening and upgrading of Soviet-Afghan economic cooperation. Prospects for this cooperation for years ahead have been outlined.

Ryzhkov Dinner Speech

PM221537 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 22 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Report on speech by Nikolay Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, at a dinner held in honor of Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers, in Moscow on 21 April: "Comrade N.I. Ryzhkov's Speech" carried under the general headline "In a Friendly Atmosphere" -- TASS headline]

On behalf of the Soviet leadership, he said, we cordially greet the distinguished guests from a neighboring friendly country -- the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan -- the head of its government Comrade Keshtmand and the statesmen and politicians accompanying him. Our meeting is taking place on the eve of a memorable date that we all hold close to heart -- the 116th anniversary of the birth of Vladimir Ilich Lenin.

Associated with his name is the recognition of Afghan sovereignty by Soviet Russia, which was the first in the world to do this, as well as the entablishment of equal relations between our countries and the conclusion of the Soviet-Afghan treaty of friendship in 1921. That treaty embodied a new type of international relations that became possible as a result of the victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution.

For the first time ever in international life relations of genuine free choice, equality, and mutual respect replaced relations based on the oppression of weak countries by strong ones, on the exploitation and plunder of enslaved peoples. The treaty of 1921, the unselfish support given by Soviet Russia enabled Afghanistan to uphold and consolidate its national independence.

After the victory in Afghanistan of the national-democratic revolution of April 1978 relations between our countries were given new momentum and, as it was recently stressed by Comrade Babrak Karmal, acquired a truly fraternal nature. This found its reflection also in the treaty of friendship, good-neighborliness, and cooperation of 5 December 1978.

The 27th CPSU Congress confirmed our party's invariable solidarity with forces of national social liberation, its course of close interaction with revolutionary-democratic parties, with the Nonaligned Movement. In relations with the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan this policy of ours finds its concrete expression in most diverse fields of good-neighborly internationalist cooperation.

The diverse ties between the CPSU and the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, between our governments, and state bodies are acquiring an ever growing importance. Our trade unions, youth, women's and other public organizations are cooperating. More and more new contacts are being established between scientists, between workers in the fields of art and culture.

Soviet-Afghan economic cooperation encompasses diverse spheres of economic activity and is successfully developing. Industrial enterprises have been built in Afghanistan with the assistance of the Soviet Union; big irrigation complexes have been built and turned tens of thousands of hectares of arid land into fertile land; power stations have been built and account for a considerable part of the electricity generated in the country; gas wells have been sunk; apartment houses, educational establishments, and hospitals are being built. All this, just as the work of Soviet technical specialists, doctors, and teachers in Afghanistan is subordinated to the needs of the Afghan people, the aims of fulfilling the programs of overcoming backwardness and developing the national economy outlined by the DRA leadership.

The undeclared war against Afghanistan, unleashed by the forces of international imperialism and reaction headed by the United States and conducted mostly from the territory of neighboring Pakistan, has become a great trial for the young republic. Today the state has to spend half of its budget on defending the country, on defending the revolution. But even in these conditions the Central Committee of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the Revolutionary Council, and Council of Ministers of Afghanistan give constant thought to the country's future, to strengthening its economy and raising the people's living standards.

Modern Afghanistan is a country confidently building its life on principles of independence and progress, a country consistently carrying out socioeconomic transformations in the interests of working people. The policy pursued by the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan finds a growing response and support among the people.

Ever broader sections, including representatives of the tribes, the clergy, the intelligentsia, and the business community, are being drawn into carrying out tasks of importance to the whole state, the entire nation.

Soviet people and all friends of Afghanistan note with much satisfaction these new manifestations of national consolidation in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. They reflect the irreversibility of the gains of the April Revolution that guarantee the country's development along the road of progress and social justice.

But the forces of imperialism and reaction would like a different morrow for the Afghan people. They have not given up attempts to dictate to independent Afghanistan what road it should follow, what government it should have, and what friends to chose. The Afghan people are courageously and selflessly struggling against this interference and resolutely repulsing the aggression unleashed against it. The democratic forces of the whole world are in solidarity with it.

The Soviet Union invariably supports the DRA in its striving to achieve a settlement of the situation around Afghanistan by political means. Our principled position on this question was outlined at the 27th CPSU Congress. As we were told by Comrade Keshtmand, the Afghan-Pakistani talks have now approached a particularly important stage. The Soviet Union wishes these talks success and would like substantial progress to be achieved as soon as this year in the matter of reaching a political settlement that would ensure a real terminiation and guaranteed non-resumption of armed interference from the outside into the internal affairs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan.

The Soviet-Afghan talks which have been held have shown that we have every opportunity for further developing bilateral relations and have confirmed our common assessements of the situation in the world, which enable us to continue cooperating fruitfully in the international arena.

Afghanistan holds a worthy place in the world community of states. It is making a useful contribution to the common efforts of the participants in the Nonaligned Movement directed at preserving and strengthening peace, averting nuclear war, liquidating racism, neocolonialism, economic discrimination, and at developing extensive international cooperation. We respect the policy of nonalignment pursued by the DRA.

We express our firm solidarity with Libya, a member of the Nonaligned Movement that was subjected to a barbarous attack by the United States. In the case of both Libya and Afghanistan the source of the aggression is one and the same. The difference being that in one case it was perpetrated by the United States itself and in the other case by proxy. But an aggression remains an aggression, it creates a threat to universal peace and an end must be put to it. Such is the demand of the peoples.

We note with gratification that the DRA Government has supported the program for liquidating weapons of mass annihilation and of averting a new world war, outlined in the statement made by CPSU Central Committee General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev on 15 January 1986. The basic principles of an all-embracing system of international security formulated in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th party congress, our efforts to stop nuclear tests, and the new Soviet initiative concerning a substantial reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces in Europe, which was announced by Mikhail Gorbachev in Berlin on 18 April, were also received with a positive response and support in Afghanistan. We value the mutual understanding with the Afghan friends on all these questions and their contribution to our joint struggle for peace and international cooperation.

Soviet-Afghan relations have a good future. We will do everything possible to strengthen and develop ties with the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and friendship with the Afghan people.

We wish the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, its Central Committee, the Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, the entire Afghan people successes in fulfilling the tasks set by the April Revolution and in defending its gains, N.I. Ryzhkov said in concusion.

We wish big successes and health to the Afghan leadership, to Comrade Babrak Karmal, to you, Comrade Keshtmand.

May friendship, cooperate, and revolutionary solidarity between the CPSU and the PDPA, the Soviet and Afghan peoples strengthen.

Keshtmand on Normalizing Relations

LD211750 Moscow TASS in English 1716 GMT 21 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 21 TASS -- "Despite the grim conditions of war the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan is implementing consistently the course at fundamental transformations in the political, economic and social spheres," member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand said today at a dinner given in his honor in the Kremlin. He is staying here on an official visit at the invitation of the Soviet Government.

"The broad masses of the people strongly support the aims of the April Revolution which is shown by the results of the Loya Jirga and the Supreme Jirga of frontier tribes. They have endorsed wholly and completely the home and foreign policy of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, the policy of Afghan-Soviet friendship," Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand said.

"More than 100 facilities have been built in Afghanistan with all-round Soviet assistance. They play the decisive role in the consolidation of the country's economy", the speaker went on.

"Enterprises built and operated with Soviet assistance ensure about 45 percent of the revenues of the state budget from domestic sources and account for 75 percent of the industrial output of the state sector."

"As an Asian country, nonaligned and revolutionary Afghanistan has particular interest in the problem of ensuring security in Asia," Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand said.

"I would like to emphasize in this connection that the well-known proposals of the DRA Government and the steps it takes toward political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan blend with the Soviet Union's concept of peace in the Asian continent", he said.

The sincere desire of the DRA and the USSR to achieve political settlement of the problem is strikingly confirmed by Mikhail Gorbachev's pronouncement at the 27th CPSU Congress that the two countries will agree on the schedule of stage-by-stage withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan as soon as a political settlement is achieved that will really put an end to outside armed interference in internal affairs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and reliably guarantee that such interference is not resumed.

"We have a right to expect the same sense of responsibility and realistic approach from other side. Deplorably, while paying lip service to the normalization of relations with the DRA, Pakistan steps up interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs from its territory, the interference that is masterminded by the USA, by its Western alies and the reactionary circles in the region."

"But all attempts of the enemies of the April Revolution to bring Afghanistan back to the past grim times are doomed to failure", Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand said in conclusion.

TASS CITES CONDEMNATIONS OF U.S. ATTACK ON LIBYA

Laos Calls Raid 'Disgraceful'

LD180448 Moscow TASS in English 1113 GMT 17 Apr 86

[Text] Vientiane April 17 TASS — The Foreign Ministry of the Lao People's Democratic Republic has strongly condemned the brutal bombing of the Libyan cities of Tripoli and Benghazi by U.S. Air Force planes.

This disgraceful attack launched on the orders of the U.S. Administration, the statement by the Foreign Ministry says, is a crude encroachment upon the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Libya — a state belonging to the Nonaligned Movement, a member of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Organization. There is no justification for the provocative actions of the USA flouting the fundamental principles of international law and the U.N. Charter.

The people of Laos, who went through the flames of the U.S. imperialist aggression Indochina, are expressing solidarity with the struggle waged by the friendly Libyan people, the statement says. The Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic demands an immediate and unconditional end to the hostile actions against the Libyan Jamahiriyah.

[Text] Phnom Penh April 17 TASS — A statement of the Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea published here says that the government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea, the whole of the Kampuchean people, emphatically denounce the criminal, aggressive act of the U.S. Administration staged against sovereign and independent Libya.

The Kampuchean people who some time ago fell victim to the barbarous aggression of U.S. imperialism know from their own experience the brutality of the U.S. military. The people and the Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea fully support the just struggle of Libya against the U.S. aggressive actions and demand that an end be put at once to the criminal actions of the Reagan administration.

PRAVDA VIEWS AUSTRALIA'S STAND ON SDI PLANS

PM171415 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 15 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Oleg Skalkin "Commentator's Column": "The Pressure Is Not Working"]

[Text] Sydney — Washington's attempts to involve as many states as possible in its space militarization venture have misfired in Australia. This was shown particularly by Pentagon chief C. Weinberger's recent visit here. It has been stated here that "the Australian Government will not compromise on the question of participation in the 'star wars' program."

The stormy debates which have raged in recent days in Australian political and public circles and in the local press have shown that this stance is supported by most Australians. Addressing his party's parliamentary faction, Australian Prime Minister R. Hawke confirmed "the government's resolute opposition to the SDI program." He described reports about the possibility of a change in his stance on this issue as groundless speculation. Defense Minister K. Beazley also said in parliament that it was the government's intention to "strictly adhere to its initial principle of opposing SDI and any Australian participation in research under the program." Judging by these statements, Australia, while remaining an ally of the United States, is nevertheless seeking to define the boundaries of military collaboration with Washington, excluding from it spheres which from Canberra's standpoint deliberately lead to an intensification of the nuclear arms race and undermine the prospects of disarmament.

This display of willfulness on the part of its junior ANZUS partner is clearly not to Washington's liking. There they prefer to pay no heed to statements unfavorable to Americans and carry on regardless. And although in its attempts to win Australia round the United States has not acted as crudely as with New Zealand, which has closed its ports to America's nuclear fleet, the wearing of "velvet gloves" does not soften the "senior partner's" grip. The latest evidence of that was the visit by C. Weinberger, who, according to the newspaper THE AGE, again tried in Canberra "to sell 'star wars' to the Australians.

Weinberger's bait turned out to be the old one: Australian scientists are being tempted by the fact that they will obtain large subsidies for research work in the event of an SDI linkup. Attempts are also being made to inveigle local industrialists with promises of profit from SDI orders...

Thus far, however, American efforts have not been crowned with success. And this is demonstrated not only by the Australian Government's firm refusal to participate in SDI. It is also shown by the resolute rejection of the "star wars" plans among broad strata of the Australian people. Australians, with every justification, regard SDI as an outcome of the American policy of "neoglobalism" which threatens international peace and the peoples' security.

GORBACHEV TOURS INSTITUTE, VISITS POTSDAM

PM231012 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Apr 86 First Edition p 2

[TASS report: "CPSU Delegation's Visit"]

[Text] Berlin, 21 Apr -- Yesterday M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and the other members of the CPSU delegation attending the 11th SED Congress visited the SED Central Committee Central Institute for Socialist Management of the National Economy.

The institute's staff warmly welcomed the dear Soviet guests.

Addressing the staff of the institute, M.S. Gorbachev emphasized that the 11th SED Congress is a great event in the life of the GDR people. I want to congratulate you, he said, on your good results and prospects. You have worked well. When a man has completely clear vision of the future, of how the country, the enterprise, and the family will live -- this is a great thing. Both you and we are so spoiled by socialism that we frequently forget this. (Animation among the audience, applause). We take everything for granted. Yet both the current achievements and the excellent prospects are a great thing.

We are proud of our friendship, of our joint struggle, the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee went on. We take pride in the fact that for more that 40 years we have marched together, shoulder to shoulder. We share the pride of the GDR people who have built the first state of workers and peasants here on German soil. We have always been at your side, we have always helped each other. I would like to repeat here what I told the congress delegates: The CPSU and the Soviet people favor the further strengthening of the bonds of our friendship so that this friendship can bring new successes and happiness to the GDR and the Soviet people. After all, this is of tremendous significance for Europe and the whole world.

Academician (G. Kotsiolok), the institute's director, spoke about the main areas of the institute's activity. One of the main tasks of its staff, which includes 30 professors, is the training and retraining of leading party, state, and economic cadres. The institute's graduates are working successfully in party committees and at the country's enterprises and scientific establishments. As the coordinator of scientific activity in the economic sphere, the institute conducts research into socialist economic management problems. AS the principal scientific organization, it participates directly in the work of the USSR-GDR Joint Economic Commission.

At the end of last year a center for training leading cadres in the field of automated control and planning systems was established here, the only center of this kind.

The CPSU delegation members inspected the institute's scientific laboratories, talked to scientists, and acquainted themselves in detail with scientific methods of national economic management based on the application of computer technology.

M.S. Gorbachev thanked the staff of the institute and noted that both in their research and in their practical work they are on the right path.

On the same day the CPSU delegation visited Potsdam Bezirk. Thousands upon thousands of inhabitants enthusiastically greeted the representatives of the Leninist party.

A talk was held with the leadership of the SED Bezirk Committee.

M.S. Gorbachev presented the Potsdam party bezirk committee with a commemorative Red Banner. Accepting it, G. Jahn, first secretary of the bezirk committee cordially the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. He said that the bezirk's Communists will treasure this Red Banner and will take it to the May Day parade.

Then the CPSU delegation visited the Cecilienhof palace, where the historic Potsdam Conference of the heads of state and government of the USSR, the United States, and Great Britain was held in the summer of the victorious year of 1945. In 1952 a museum, which around half a million people visit every year, was opened in the palace.

M.S. Gorbachev and the other members of the CPSU delegation looked around the hall where the conference was held and visited the room where the Soviet delegation worked and other premises at the museum.

Addressing those who had gathered in the museum, M.S. Gorbachev said: Everyone who comes here is compelled to return to history, especially here where the results of the bloodiest war in mankind's history were summed up. It is impossible not to think about mankind and its destiny here.

The documents on show here remind us that when the Potsdam Conference ended, the leaders of the anti-Hitler coalition powers parted with words of hope for a more lasting peace. These words have not lost their meaning today.

On the one hand, we have had more than 40 years of peace in Europe, although there have been military conflicts in other parts of the world. This is a great victory for the forces of peace, which was achieved above all thanks to the tremendous contribution of the socialist states and other peace-loving countries.

On the other hand, we know that the times in which we live are very alarming and dangerous. Certain people are again indulging in illusions of being able to achieve military superiority and rule the world. If you take into consideration that all this is happening in the nuclear age, and where such a policy can lead, it become clear to all who treasure peace, who remember at what cost it was won, that the main thing now is to spare no effort to ensure that the sacrifices of World War II whose results were summed up here in Potsdam prove not to have been made in vain. Here, in this museum there is much food for thought...

The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee recalled further that one of the most important results of the war and postwar development is the present-day GDR, a great friend of the Soviet Union and a powerful factor for peace in the center of Europe. However, it is necessary to think about the future, he said. It is to this that the 11th SED Congress is devoted. One of its delegates said yesterday that the stronger socialism is, the stronger peace is. But socialism also needs peace in order to realize its potential. Fine words, true words!

This theme, M.S. Gorbachev emphasized, also rang out at our 27th party congress and the congresses of the other fraternal parties. This theme and our plans for the future are the best evidence of what our peoples are thinking about and what they are striving for. We will spare no effort to preserve peace!

The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee thanked the museum workers for their useful work which helps people understand the past and learn its lessons. He presented a gift to the museum, a sculpture by RSFSR People's Artist O.S. Kiryukhin which symbolizes a Soviet soldier bringing peace and happiness to children.

M.S. Gorbachev made the following inscription in the museum's guests of honor book:

"We were deeply impressed by our visit to Cecilienhof, the venue of the Potsdam Conference, which has become the symbol of the rout of fascism and the establishment of a just peace in Europe. It also set an example showing that cooperation between states that belong to different social systems is possible.

"The claims that 'Potsdam and Yalta split Europe' are totally at variance with the truth. On the contrary, they created the conditions for the peaceful, free, and democratic development of all states in Europe. Europe was split by the West's striving for military superiority and the attempts to revive West German militarism. The Soviet Union, and the socialist community as a whole, will not weaken in its efforts to overcome this split and to strengthen detente on the basis of the further development of the all-European process."

M.S. Gorbachev and members of the CPSU delegation were accompanied on the trip by G. Mittag, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo.

ZHIVKOV SENDS MESSAGE OF SUPPORT TO LIBYA

LD172359 Moscow TASS in English 1937 GMT 17 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 17 TASS -- "The totally unprovoked barbarous aggression by the United States of America against Libya has filled the Bulgarian people and their leadership with profound indignation," says a message sent by Todor Zhivkov, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, president of the Council of State of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, to Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution, the head of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah (SPLAJ).

The message points out that the U.S. aggression has been firmly condemned in Bulgaria. Firm solidarity with and support for the friendly Libyan people were expressed in the Bulgarian Government's statement and in the joint statement of the Warsaw Treaty member states.

"Disregarding the calls and protests of world public opinion and the warnings of the peace-loving countries, and trampling on the norms of international law and on the principles laid down in the U.N. Charter, the United States, through its brazen provocative actions against the Libyan people, delivered a blow on mankind's hopes for peace and security," the message emphasizes.

"This new manifestation of the policy of neo-globalism and state terrorism, the policy which runs counter to the policy of all peace-loving poeples, is fraught with serious and grave consequences both for the Mediterranean area and for the entire international situation. The U.S. aggression is spearheaded not only against Libya. This is a multi-aspect anti-Arab action and an act directed against the efforts aimed at preserving and strengthening universal peace".

"Expressing the Bulgarian people's anger and indignation at the aggression against sovereign Libya," Todor Zhivkov writes, "I want on these stressful days of ordeals to express once again our firm solidarity and to voice conviction that the Libyan people, who are rallied round their leadership, who daringly uphold their progressive achievements and the independent anti-imperialist foreign policy, and who have inflicted a new moral and political defeat on imperialism, will further the triumphant march of the September 1 revolution."

TASS ANALYST CRITICIZES EEC DECISION ON LIBYA

LD222354 Moscow TASS in English 1945 GMT 22 Apr 86

["Victim of Aggression, Not the Aggressor, Is Punished" -- TASS identifier]

[Text] Moscow April 22 TASS -- TASS political news analyst Aleksey Grigoryev writes:

After the United States had staged bombing raids of peaceful Libyan cities, the Common Market member countries subjected the victim of the aggression to an attack by means of diplomacy: A series of sanctions against Libya has been endorsed at a session of the Council of Ministers of the European Communities at the level of foreign ministers held in Luxembourg. The sanctions were manifested in the cuts of the personnel of the Libyan Embassies in the capitals of the Common Market countries, with the simultaneous reduction of the number of diplomats representing EEC countries in Tripoli, and also in the discriminatory measures against Libya's commercial and tourist agencies in the EEC countries.

It took Washington a week to compel the 12 Common Market members, by means of overt pressure on Western Europe, to actually encourage the U.S. piratic policy in the Mediterranean. Every method of propaganda pressure was brought into play: The head of the White House and many high officials of the U.S. Administration publicly expressed more than once their annoyance at "stubborness" of the partners on the other side of the Atlantic. According to a report in the "QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS", Reagan intends to have a serious talk with Francois Mitterrand about the ban on the use of the air space of France by U.S. bombers for a raid on Libya when he meets President Mitterrand during a conference of the seven major capitalist countries in Tokyo in May.

Besides that, U.S. Undersecretary of State John Whitehead was sent on a tour to Europe. The British "GUARDIAN" write that he was to try to overcome in some measure the damage done to the solidarity of the member countries of the alliance by the raid of the U.S. aviation on Libya.

There is no doubt that Washington's irresponsible actions in the Mediterranean were received in Western Europe as a slap in the face from the senior partner in NATO. Such an attitude was manifested in a number of political statements condemning the United States brutality, in a wave of mass protest that swept the cities of Britain, Spain, Portugal, FRG, Italy and other countries, and in the results of the public opinion polls in which the Pentagon's venture in Libya has been stigmatised. The London "TIMES" wrote in this connection that West European governments had landed in a difficult situation.

On the one hand, they had to lessen the dangerous contradictions within NATO manifested in Washington's statements about "conciliatory attitudes" of Western Europe with regard to terrorism. On the other hand, they had to take into consideration broad opposition of the public to the United States actions against Libya.

And yet the EEC leaders were lacking political will to open their eyes to the ruins of residential areas of Tripoli, the dead bodies of Libyan women and children, to listen to the clamour of the protest of thousands in the streets of European cities. The participants in the Luxembourg meeting followed in the wake of Washington that continues to whip up the unbridled anti-Libyan campaign and to threaten Tripoli with "new actions".

But it is not likely that they in Washington are fully satisfied with reports from Luxembourg.

Contrary to the demands by Washington and by London obediently following in its wake, the EEC refused to rupture the political and diplomatic relations with Libya, and confirmed its negative attitude to the economic sanctions. The cracks in the edifice of so-called Atlantic solidarity, though pasted up, have not been removed. The formally deferential attitude is the cover for doubts about Reagan and his policy. The NEW YORK TIMES had to admit this in its commentary on relations between the United States and Western Europe. The newspaper writes that on the other side of the Atlantic ever more concern is shown over Reagan's interventionist actions in Libya, Nicaragua, Angola and over his pronouncements in Rambo's style.

UK JOINS 'VICIOUS' ANTI-LIBYA CAMPAIGN; DEPORTS STUDENTS

LD221301 Moscow TASS in English 1218 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] London April 22 TASS — The British Government has joined in a vicious anti-Libyan campaign launched by Washington and announced the arrest and forthcoming deportation of 19 Libyan students. It follows from a statement of the Home Office (Ministry of the Interior) that the orders on the arrest and deportation of the students were given personally by Home Secretary Douglas Hurd. The pretext for that act of provocation was the allegation that the arrested students had been involved in "student revolutionary activity." It is noted here that the action followed immediately the decision of the Common Market foreign ministers to introduce sanctions against Libya.

SPD OFFICIAL CONDEMNS U.S. NUCLEAR TEST BLAST

LD222332 Moscow TASS in English 1825 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Bonn April 22 TASS -- The head of the working group for disarmament and arms control of the SPD [Social Democratic Party] faction in the Bundestag Defense Commission, Hermann Scheer, condemned the U.S. latest nuclear blast today. Every further U.S. nuclear weapon test, he said in a statement here, reduces chances for a turn to nuclear disarmament.

If the West German Government's statements about being interested in an end to nuclear explosions aren't all bluff, he added, Bonn should finally make initiatives towards this end in NATO. Scheer urged the government to table a proposal at the NATO ministerial council's session next May for an immediate end to nuclear weapon testing and to join efforts with Europeans and Canada to make certain that this proposal will be put into effect.

Syrian Minister Interviewed

[Damascus special correspondent Farid Seyful-Mulyukov report on and interview with Syrian Defense Minister Mustafa Talas; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The blast from the barbaric U.S. bombing of cities and other civilian targets in Libya instantaneously buffeted the Syrian capital as well. The Arabs have once again felt the scorching breath of imperialist aggression. In the presidential palace, at government sessions, at the editorial desks of local newspapers, radio and television, they are discussing with alarm the tense situation that has unfolded in this area. Syrian President Hafiz al-Asad, maintains constant contact with Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. Both Arab countries are bound by the close ties of a joint struggle against Washington and Tel Aviv's aggressive schemes in the Near East. Today Libya has become the next victim of U.S. piracy. Tomorrow, under the pretext of pursuing terrorists, the United States or Israel may carry out an attack on any other Arab country with the same ease. In Damascus, in the general headquarters of the Syrian Armed Forces, I met with Syrian Defense Minister Mustafa Talas:

[Begin Talas recording in Arabic with superimposed Russian translation] As he gave the order to bomb Libyan cities, Reagan cynically asserted that, allegedly, it is a question of neutralizing the sources of terrorism. In fact, Washington has made active use of the tools of state terrorism in its unsuccessful struggle against peoples' national liberation movements. Syria, like other countries, resolutely condemns the criminal U.S. aggression against Libya. The Syrian people support the Libyan Jamahiriyah, which is courageously withstanding the blows of U.S. imperialism, with all available means. [end recording]

The cabinet examined the political situation, which emerged in the region as a result of the U.S. aggression against Libya.

TOLKUNOV DENIES SOVIET ARMS SALES TO IRAN

LD222208 Kuwait KUNA in Arabic 2015 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Ellipses as received]

[Text] Tunis, 22 Apr (KUNA) -- A prominent Soviet official here this evening denied that his country has been selling arms to Iran, while he stressed that the Soviet stand vis-a-vis the U.S. aggression on the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah "was not short of the required level." The chairman of the Council of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, Lev Tolkunov, said, at a press conference in reply to a question by KUNA on the reason why the Soviet Union has been selling arms to Iran despite its obstinacy in refusing to stop the ongoing war in the Arab Gulf region, "We have to take into consideration that we are also selling arms to Iraq, and in the event of stopping our sale of arms to Iran we must do the same in relation to Iraq... This is taking into account the fact that we sell small quantities of arms to Iran." However, one of the Soviet official's aides slipped a written note to him that made Tolkunov reconsider and say: "One of my aides has alerted me that we do not sell arms to Iran."

In reply to another question by KUNA on his interpretation of the Soviet stand vis-a-vis the U.S. aggression on the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah, which has been described as "short of the level required in Arab terms," the chairman of the Supreme Soviet strongly condemned the U.S. aggression against Libya and placed all responsibility for the results on the United States...in addition to this, the Soviet Union cancelled a meeting between its foreign minister and the U.S. secretary of state that was to pave the way for s summit meeting between the leaders of the two countries, due to the U.S. aggression on Libya. He added: "As you know, all popular institutions in the Soviet Union have strongly condemned the aforementioned U.S. aggression... and all this, in my opinion, confirms that the Soviet stand was at the required level under the prevailing circumstances." On the Middle East issue, Tolkunov said that the solution to this issue must be sought in the framework of an international conference with the participation of all concerned parties, including the PLO, on an equal basis.

PRAVDA Article

[Own correspondent Yu. Glukhov report under the rubric "17 April -- Syria's National Holiday": "The March of the Revolution"]

[Text] Damascus, April -- There are many sights in Damascus. Some are notable by virtue of being centuries old, others for their unique architecture, others again for the famous names of the architects who built them. But there is a building in the city center that has become famous for other reasons. It is the parliament building, whose popularity is closely associated with the Syrian people's independence struggle. Feelings have often run high within its wall and ardent speeches have rung out, reflecting the Syrians' desire for freedom. The parliament building has even been subjected to armed attack by the French colonialists, when the question of their withdrawal from Syria became acute in the mid-forties.

However, neither this nor other attempts to keep the country under foreign control was successful. The colonialists had to leave all the same. Here an important role was played by the support given to Syria by the Soviet Union. The USSR demanded at the United Nations that the French and British troops withdraw unconditionally from Syria. Evacuation Day -- 17 April 1946 -- became a national holiday.

Syria has come a long way since then. The most important milestone was the choice of the progressive course which now determines the country's development. This course was formulated under difficult conditions. At various stages very difficult barriers have been overcome -- the resistance of internal political reaction, comprador elements, and foreign capital.

Since 1963 the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party has been in power in the country, its leadership headed since 1970 by Hafiz al-Asad, who is also president of the country.

The Syrian people's socioeconomic gains are considerable. The nationalization of large enterprises, banks, and insurance companies secured commanding heights for the state sector. The agrarian reform undermined the position of rural landowners. The people's standard of living has improved considerably and great successes have been achieved in combating illiteracy and developing culture.

The composition of the parliament also reflects the changes in Syrian society. The majority of seats belong to representatives of the working people. During the recent election campaign the candidates were on a joint list put forward by the Progressive National Front. That is another characteristic of present-day domestic political life. The front was set up in 1972 as a base for cooperation between the ruling Ba'th Party and the Syrian Communist Party and other progressive forces. There are eight Communists in the present parliament. Two Communist Party representatives are in the government.

Despite all this, the task of defending the chosen course is still on the agenda. People I spoke with in Damascus repeatedly told me about the danger that exists from the parasitic and bureaucratic bourgeoisie and concealed reaction. Recent experience confirms this. In 1980-1981, for instance, there were counterrevolutionary armed sallies by the "Muslim brothers."

The most serious threat to Syria comes from outside. Of the 40 years that have elapsed since the country's deliverance from the colonial "presence," one-half have passed in direct confrontation with the Israeli aggressor. Tel Aviv's occupation of Syria's Golan Heights has continued since 1967.

The republic has recently been subjected to increasingly unbridled militarist blackmail. Relying on U.S. support, the Damascus newspaper TISHRIN writes, Tel Aviv entertains a plan for a large-scale "campaign" against Syria, regarding it as responsible for the failure of the so-called "peace initiatives" in the Near East aimed at establishing American-Israeli diktat in the region.

Delivering a program speech in parliament recently, Syrian Prime Minister 'Abd al-Ra'uf al-Kasm called for a redoubling of efforts in order to uphold and augment the people's gains.

Great attention is devoted to the comprehensive fulfillment of the tasks of the current, Sixth 5-Year Plan (1986-1990). 'Abd al-Ra'uf al-Kasm noted that it is based on improving the socioeconomic structures, increasing labor productivity and the productivity of agriculture, and strengthening the role of the public sector, as well as encouraging the private and mixed sector, in order to achieve cooperation among all three sectors.

In this connection, it must be noted that the Syrian economy is overloaded and is experiencing serious difficulties. The last 5 years have been years of drought; even without that the republic needs to import food. Considerable resources are spent on importing equipment and raw materials. On the basis of the decision of the Baghdad summit conference, Syria, as a country opposing the aggressor, should receive annual aid from the Arab oil-producing states to the tune of $1.8 billion, but this money has never arrived in full.

Reliance on the country's own forces and cooperation with the socialist countries -- that is the basis of the implementation of the tasks set.

Very rich experience has been accumulated in cooperation between Syria and the USSR which are linked by close treaty relations. The Soviet Union's multifaceted aid and assistance to the friendly country is an important factor promoting a successful advance along the path of independence and progress.

The flag of a truly free Syria was hoisted above the parliament building 4 decades ago. Under this flag the Syrian people are building a new life and, on the basis of their friends' support, resolutely rebuffing all who would like to hinder them.

ETHIOPIA CONDEMNS U.S. ATTACK ON LIBYA

LD162222 Moscow TASS in English 0915 GMT 16 Apr 86

[Text] Addis Ababa April 16 TASS -- Ethiopia has condemned the U.S. attack on Libya that caused casualties and destruction, according to a spokesman for the Ethiopian Foreign Ministry. The act of unprovoked aggression was in violation of all norms of international law, he said.

The fact that a permanent member state of the U.N. Security Council was using raw force attested to the serious threat to all small countries, the spokesman pointed out. He said that Ethiopia demanded that the American Administration stop intimidating independent nations. Ethiopia called on the Organization of African Unity to render urgent assistance to Libya and hold an emergency session of the OAU Council of Ministers for that purpose. The African countries jointly with the United Nations should find means to ensure respect for Libya's sovereignty and territorial integrity, the statement said.

MORE SOVIET TECHNICIANS, PILOTS SENT TO ETHIOPIA

AU150740 Paris AFP in English 0444 GMT 15 Apr 86

[Text] Paris, April 15 (AFP) -- Up to 5,000 extra Soviet technicians and pilots have arrived in the Eritrean capital of Asmara to help preparations for a new large-scale Ethiopian offensive against Eritrean separatist forces, the rebel Eritrean People's Liberation Front claimed here Monday.

The Addis Ababa government had also conscripted about 50-60,000 people into the Army in connection with the offensive, it said in a statement. The new Soviet arrivals brought the total of Soviet military advisers in Eritrea to about 8,000, it added. The front appealed to the Soviet Union to use its "authority and influence" as a major power to bring "peace and stability" to the region instead of backing Ethiopia's policy of "expansionism and destabilisation."

ETHIOPIAN LEADER LAUDS SOCIALIST BLOC AID

[TASS report: "Workers Party of Ethiopia Central Committee Plenum"]

[Text] Addis Ababa, 11 Apr -- A WPE Central Committee Plenum has been held here. It approved the country's draft constitution that is now to be submitted for nationwide discussion. The definitive version of the basic law will take into account Ethiopian working people's suggestions.

The development of agriculture is the main present-day task in Ethiopia, Mengistu Haile Mariam, general secretary of the WPE Central Committee and chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council, stated at the plenum.

The Ethiopian Government continues to help drought victims, Mengistu Haile Mariam pointed out. The campaign to move people from drought-affected regions and resettle them in fertile areas plays a paramount role in eliminating the after-effects of the natural disaster. Mengistu Haile Mariam expressed gratitude to the Soviet Union and other socialist countries for their assistance in combating the drought. From July 1984 through December 1985, he announced, 4.1 million people had received assistance at special centers. The WPE Central Committee general secretary condemned certain circles in the West, primarily the U.S. Administration, which spread lies about the resettlement campaign with the aim of destroying it.

Ethiopia's foreign policy, the country's leader stressed, is based on the principles of proletarian internationalism, peaceful coexistence, and nonalignment. Our country, he noted, advocates peace and progress in the Horn of Africa and will do its utmost to ensure them. Mengistu Haile Mariam declared the Ethiopian Government's readiness to normalize relations with Somalia.

IZVESTIYA Reports Meeting

[Own correspondent Z. Kadymbekov dispatch: "Ethiopia: Mobilizing Efforts"]

[Text] Addis Ababa -- The fourth routine plenum of the WPE Central Committee has been held here. It examined the draft constitution of the future people's democratic republic and questions of domestic and foreign policy.

A long report was delivered to the plenum by Mengistu Haile Mariam, head of the party and state.

Stressing the importance of drafting the constitution as a paramount task on the way to creating the republic, the speaker noted that by decision of the plenum the preliminary version of the country's fundamental law would be submitted for discussion by all people.

The report allocated considerable space to economic problems. It was noted that certain tasks, above all in agriculture, have been resolved during the implementation of the programs adopted by the party and government. The first steps in that direction are promising. A larger harvest of agricultural crops has been obtained than in past years and the program to create new villages is being carried out. More than 7,500 villages have recently been created in Arsi, Shewa, and Harerge Provinces alone.

The government has taken resolute measures to help drought victims, the speaker stressed, which have made it possible to control the situation and save millions of lives. In the period from July 1984 through December 1985, food and other necessities were provided for more than 4 million people concentrated in camps especially built in 12 provinces.

The Ethiopian leader spoke highly of the assistance provided by the USSR, other socialist and friendly countries, and international organizations in the fight against the consequences of the drought. At the same time he sharply condemned the slanderous propaganda campaign launched by certain Western circles, above all the U.S. Administration, against the measures being taken by the party and Government of Ethiopia to combat the natural disaster.

The plenum reaffirmed Ethiopia's commitment in its foreign policy to the principles of proletarian internationalism, peace, and noninterference in other states' internal affairs. A resolution adopted by the plenum participants confirms the need to further mobilize efforts to boost labor productivity in the agrarian and other sectors of the economy, to increase the people's prosperity, and to ensure peace and progress.

NICARAGUA'S BORGE ON U.S. 'ABDUCTION' OF MISKITOS

LD200450 Moscow TASS in English 0828 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Text] Puerto Cabezas, Nicaragua April 19 TASS -- By TASS correspondent Sergey Gorbunov: The U.S. Central Intelligence Agency has carried out another large-scale act of terrorism against the Indian tribe of Miskitos inhabiting the northern part of Nicaragua's Atlantic coast.

In the course of that operation armed gangs of the C.I.A.'s mercenaries intruded into Nicaraguan territory from Honduras and then drove by force back in Honduras more than 9,000 inhabitants of the Indian villages of San-Jeronimo, San-Alberto, Santa Fe and Las Espereanzas, all located near the border river of Coco.

As they left Nicaraguan territory, the counter-revolutionaries mined the vicinities of many Indian villages in order to prevent their inhabitants from returning to their home parts.

U.S. military units stationed in Honduras, Nicaraguan Interior Minister Tomas Borge, a member of the national leadership of the Sandinist National Liberation Front, told journalists in Puerto Cabezas, had given the "contras" direct aid in that massive abduction of Miskitos.

He said the acts of terrorism by U.S. mercenaries were directed at thwarting efforts to settle the situation in Selaya Department and talks on granting autonomy to the Atlantic coast, which were under way between the Nicaraguan Government and Indian organizations.

Borge said the Sandinist Revolution's enemies were aiming to provoke a secessionist movement but those plans would never materialize as the unity of the Nicaraguan people was inviolable.

The Nicaraguans, the interior minister said, were determined to fight till the last drop of their blood to defend the independence and sovereignty of their homeland.

CUBAN UN ENVOY ATTACKS U.S. 'NEOGLOBALISM' POLICY

LD162130 Moscow TASS in English 2328 GMT 15 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 16 TASS -- Alberto Velazco San Jose, Cuba's ambassador to the United Nations, stated Tuesday at the Security Council that the barbarous attack of the U.S. on Libya had become another manifestation of the policy of neoglobalism pursued by the U.S. Administration which cordially [as received] hated the striving of peoples for freedom and independence and which was trying to change the course of history.

According to Alberto Velazco San Jose, the U.S. pursues the same policy in Nicaragua in an attempt to strangle the Sandinista revolution, in Angola where it arms gangs of killers and in all other regions where peoples refuse to yield to the diktat of Washington and pursue an independent policy, where they repulse injustice and immorality of the claimant to world domination.

REPORT, COMMENT ON BAY OF PIGS ANNIVERSARY

Castro Gives Speech

LD201639 Moscow TASS in English 1613 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Text] Havana April 20 TASS -- Those who fought against the imperialist hirelings in Playa Giron and routed them battled for socialism. This has been stated by Fidel Castro, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Cuba, president of the Council of State and of the Council of Ministers of the Republic, in a speech at a celebration meeting on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the defeat of the armed intervention of imperialist hirelings in Playa Giron and the proclamation of the socialist nature of the Cuban revolution. Touching upon the events that took place in Play Giron in those distant days, the Cuban leader said: Due to the presence of the combat equipment received mainly from socialist countries, and due to the courage, stoutness and patriotism of the air pilots, tankmen, artillery and infantry men, the victory over the hirelings was achieved within a space of less than three days.

He recalled that the socialist nature of the revolution had been proclaimed during the funeral of the victims of the bombings on the eve of the landing in Playa Giron.

"Those who fell in the fighting in Playa Giron saved the lives of hundreds of thousands and, maybe, millions of Cubans. We would win the victory in any event, but it would have been achieved at a price of the death of a huge number of people and complete destruction of the country. This is one of the lessons of Playa Giron which new generations should learn and remember forever".

"Another lesson of Playa Giron, which is indicative of the consequences which such attacks by imperialism may have, is that the Americans, upon coming to feel humiliated, took steps towards a direct aggression. This entailed measures which subsequently brought about the October crisis which put the world on the verge of a nuclear catastrophe".

"The events in Playa Giron showed the treacherous, aggressive and blood-thirsty nature of imperialism. Thus, when bombing Cuban airfields on April 15, 1961, the U.S. imperialists tried to deceive the world public by asserting that the act was committed by 'insurgent Cuban air pilots'. Previously U.S. imperialism had organized the overthrow of the democratic government of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala. After that, U.S. imperialism practised invasions of countries where revolutions took place, and conducted dirty wars against them. Everywhere U.S. imperialism used the same methods, showing an utter lack of conscience and honour".

"Nowadays imperialism seeks to stifle the peoples of Latin America by means of the noose of exorbitant external debt which amounts to almost 400,000 million dollars, uses high interest rates for its criminal purposes, and practises dumping and protectionism".

"It can be maintained", the Cuban leader went on to say, "that all patriots who rose against Spanish colonial domination, fought and died for socialism, for in those historical conditions that was the struggle for progressive ideas of those days. To struggle for socialism nowadays is to strive for the supreme forms of humanism, freedom and justice, for the supreme form of genuine freedom".

"The historic significance of the battle in Playa Giron", the Cuban leader said, "is not only in mass heroism and in what happened. It is in the price which Cuba would have to pay if the U.S. plan for the landing of hirelings succeeded and the country had to wage a struggle similar to the one conducted subsequently by Vietnam".

"That struggle", Fidel Castro emphasized, "would have been waged in much more difficult conditions because Cuba's territory and population are much smaller and, besides, it has no border with any country but the United States -- the main aggressor. In any event the victory would have been ours but it would have been achieved at a much higher price. This is one of the lessons of Playa Giron which new generations should remember always".

Speaking of the U.S. aggression against Libya, the Cuban leader qualified it as a treacherous, inhuman, disgraceful, criminal and terrorist action.

Having recalled the words of the Cuban representative at the United Nations, who described the U.S. aggressors as real successors of Hitler, the Cuban leader emphasized Reagan's unscrupulousness about means and his irresponsibility, which is particularly dangerous with the availability of nuclear weapons and of other sophisticated modern hardware which is designed to kill and destroy and which puts the world on the verge of a nuclear disaster.

"The purpose of the U.S. attack on Libya was to kill the leader of that country, Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi," Fidel Castro stated. It is known that the United States has long been busy working out plans for the assassination of political leaders by means of various barbarous methods, which is a crime which the U.S. itself confesses. However, there has been no such precedents so far for the president of one of the mightiest countries to resort to bombing in an attempt to kill the head of another state".

"The Americans knew that there were the wife and children of Al-Qadhdhafi in the house and nevertheless dropped dozens of bombs to raze it to the ground without the slightest concern that that posed danger to civilians and to foreign embassies in Tripoli. The U.S. Government had prepared in advance a statement in the event of Al-Qadhdhafi's death to describe it as 'fortuitous'. Where will this way lead us to? Truly, there is no difference between the bombing of Tripoli and the bombings of Warsaw, Amsterdam and London during the Second World War". Fidel Castro called for vigilance in the face of the intrigues of U.S. imperialism which resorts to gross lies to justify its criminal methods.

Fidel Castro voiced firm confidence that new generations of Cubans would defend the gains of the socialist revolution with the same courage and selflessness as the defenders of Playa Giron had done. Capitalism, he stated, will never return to Cuba and our country will never become imperialist property.

PRAVDA Views Lessons of Invasion

[Article by P. Bogomolov: "Remember Playa Giron"]

[Text] This small settlement baked by the tropical sun is situated on the shore of the Bay of Pigs itself. You walk out onto the concrete pier and the boundless blue Caribbean opens up before your eyes. For visitors it is exotic, but for Cubans it is an ordinary landscape repeated almost everywhere along the coastline.

Yes, for Cuba this small corner is generally typical. But it is worth going into the square in the center of the settlement, where you will see smashed combat equipment with the label "made in the United States." Alongside there is a museum telling of the special role this stretch of Cuban soil was fated to play in modern history. It was here, 25 years ago, that an event took place which has become a glorious page in the annals of the Latin-American people's national liberation struggle.

...Spring 1961. A memorable time, a time filled with hope and daring. The land of the soviets is the home of the first manned space flight. The world is applauding the pioneers of the universe. On the banks of the Potomac -- dismay, which develops into unconcealed malice. The United States tries to counter socialism's increased international prestige with another demonstration of its military might. And primarily just where Washington is used to playing the boss -- in the Western hemisphere.

The so-called "Union for Progress" proclaimed by the White House in March 1961 was expected to play the role of the "carrot" in Washington's policy: a subsidy of $20 billion was presented virtually as a guarantee of overcoming Latin America's centuries of backwardness. As far as revolutionary Cuba was concerned, the imperialists set aside the whip for it. Murders, explosions, arson -- "cloak and dagger knights" from the CIA tried a whole assortment of criminal state terrorist methods against the island of freedom. Finally, on 15 April 1961 Havana and other cities in the republic were subjected to a massive air attack. The enemies counted on demoralizing the Cubans, but the result was directly the opposite. To the stormy applause of the popular masses, Fidel Castro proclaimed that the Cuban revolution was socialist by its nature. Two days later a team of Cuban counterrevolutionaries knocked together by the Americans landed near Playa Giron, but the people rose up in their path -- conscious defenders of Cuba's independence and sovereignty, of its socialist future.

The Bay of Pigs was clouded with the small of gunpowder and the acrid smoke of smouldering mangrove thickets. Declaring their brazen intention to proclaim a "democratic Cuban government" on the captured bridgehead, the fighters from brigade "25006" embarked on brutal reprisals against innocent inhabitants. Shaken by the aggression, the world was indignant. But Washington tried to present what had happened virtually as an "internal Cuban conflict" in which the United States had allegedly played no part. As if American vessels had not transported the interventionists to Playa Giron, as if American warships and planes had not covered the invasion. Whatever, the battle was all the more difficult for those defending Cuba, but the victory they gained over the enemy armed to the teeth in less than 72 hours was also the more impressive!

The victory at Playa Giron shattered the theory of "geographical fatalism" held by the Latin American states -- their allegedly being eternally doomed to dependence on the United States. It was proved before the whole world that even at a distance of many thousands of miles from the countries of the socialist community, a true people's revolution is capable of defending its achievements. Defending them thanks to the cohesion of all working people under the firm leadership of their combat vanguard and with fraternal, disinterested assistance from true friends, and primarily the Soviet Union.

Having suffered defeat in open battle, the enemies of socialist Cuba began to foretell its failure in peaceful pursuits. And what has happened? Over the last 25 years this once semicolonial U.S. appendage has developed into the most dynamically developing Latin American state with the highest GNP growth rates. The island of freedom is justly proud of the fact that it has the best indicators for the region in such spheres as national education, public health care, and sport. What is more, these high goals have been achieved in spite of unceasing intrigues by American imperialism, its trade and economic blockade, and "psychological warfare."

You can see the successes of socialist building everywhere in Cuba, including Matanzas province, on the territory where Playa Giron is situated. The largest citrus fruit farm here is named for the historic victory over the aggressors.

I spent the whole day traveling around grapefruit, orange, and lemon plantations covering tens of thousands of hectares. All around, like festive decorations, the gifts of the bountiful nature of the tropics shone on the leafy trees. The delicate aroma of fruit was wafted in the air. But before, two-thirds of this land was barren waste ground.

Juan Sureda, leader of the farm, said that these plantations yield approximately 250,000 metric tons of fruit, whereas before the revolution the island as a whole produced not more than 60,000 metric tons. Mechanization has been a great help for workers in the collective, and the majority of the 800 tractors available here are Soviet-produced. The bulk of the produce is exported to the USSR and other fraternal countries. These are just some of the aspects of the "citrus program" implemented on the basis of a multilateral agreement between Cuba and its CEMA partners.

"Implementation of this program gives a great deal in a social respect," the director summed up. "Take, for example, the substantial earnings of our workers, which have increased on average to 175 pesos per month. Or, even more important, the formation of 64 boarding schools on the farm's territory, whose students contribute to gathering the harvest by working as much as they are able, thereby acquiring work experience."

Appraising their achievements on merit, the Cubans do not stop at the point they have reached. They have a clear perception of their difficulties, errors, and unresolved problems. They boldly set about overcoming them. The ability of the republic's Communists to draw the correct lessons from the past was impressively reflected by the recent Third Cuban Communist Party Congress. Conducted in an atmosphere of a businesslike and critical approach to questions of the country's development, it clearly reaffirmed the party's strength and maturity and its increased experience in political leadership of the masses.

The cause of the Playa Giron heroes lives on and triumphs in the everyday life of Cuba today. The last 25 years are both a triumph of socialist building and evidence of its increased international prestige.

The republic's successes visibly contrast with the reality of the majority of Latin American countries. The "Union for Progress" proclaimed by Washington on the eve of its aggression at Playa Giron, like many other U.S. foreign policy doctrines, became a cruel deception. A $360 billion noose of debt and a cruel yoke of reactionary dictatorships -- this is what imperialism brings to Latin Americans. Revolutionary Nicaragua is in the front ranks of the confrontation. Showing invariable solidarity with the Sandinist motherland, its friends in Latin America say to the Washington adventurists: "If you do not wish shame and infamy, remember Playa Giron!"

Having stood its ground in the cruel fight against the aggressors, Cuba has become a firm outpost of the new society and a beacon of social progress in the Western hemisphere. The dynamism of its life, and its increasing number of new successes in the task of socialist building in spite of all difficulties, fill the hearts of Soviet people, working people in fraternal countries, and all people of goodwill with legitimate pride.

Gromyko Said Suffering From 'Heart Condition'

LD230920 Kuwait KUNA in English 0829 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 23 (KUNA) — President of the Soviet Union Andrey Gromyko who has not been seen in public for the last three weeks, is believed to be suffering of a heart condition, KUNA learnt from Soviet official sources Wednesday.

Gromyko, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, was absent Tuesday from an important public function to commemorate birthday anniversary of the founder of the Soviet State Vladimir Lenin. Gromyko's failure to confer with the Afghan Premier Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand who concluded today his official visit to the Soviet Union, fuelled further speculations about his serious sickness.

President Gromyko, born in 1909, was elected chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the country's parliament, in July 1985.

["Report by Comrade E.A. Shevardnadze at the Ceremonial Session Devoted to the 116th Anniversary of V.I. Lenin's Birth" – PRAVDA headline]

[Text] Comrades! On Vladimir Ilich Lenin's birthday I want somehow, in a special way, to express my attitude toward his personality, activity, and legacy. However, no words can contain Lenin's life, and the best way to express our feelings is by being loyal in deeds and actions to his example and his behests. Such is the effective criterion for each genuine Leninist. The steps of memory are not steps of a monument: They lead into the future where Leninist thought is applied creatively in the contemporary context. Moving ahead we realize more and more profoundly the unfading strength of Leninist ideas.

This strength was given to Lenin by his motherland, Russia, the Russia of the people's rebels — the Decembrists — of Lomonosov

The mighty reconstruction of the country now being implemented is, without doubt, a long-term matter, but man needs changes today. He has a right to demand that both at enterprises, town streets, in transportation, kolkhoz markets, shops, hospitals, and at culture and consumer services establishments order should be established everywhere and discipline should prevail, that man might feel care and attention everywhere. It is not only investment running into billions that is needed here but also capital investment as regards soul and sincerity.

As Lenin said, "Now everything depends on practical work and on practical results." This is precisely how Mikhail Sergeyevich posed the matter in his speech to the working people of the town of Tolyatti. The people must see and know that the decisions of the congress are operating.

Comrades! The size of the acceleration is well known. The task is very complex and difficult. Over a period of 15 years, the country's production potential and the national income will double in size on a qualitatively new basis. The starting point for our future, for the implementation of all our program goals, is a mighty modern economy. Economic building, Lenin stressed, is "our most correct course, most correct both from the viewpoint of principle, and from the practical viewpoint." In peaceful competition with capitalism, we must and are obliged to gain victory by economic means. There is no other way. What is at stake is the fate of socialism and the future of the whole of mankind.

Posing the task in this way and no other, the congress stressed that there is no time for warming up. The reconstruction must be carried out quickly and at a high pace and, what is no less important, competently and intelligently.

Lenin stressed more than once the importance of the factor of time when the matter of the turning point in our country's life was being decided. "Winning time means winning everything."

The congress filled with concrete and practical content the Leninist formula of a level of labor productivity higher than that of capitalism. Thereby, a clear and working criterion has been given for a modern, scientific-technical, and "structural and investments policy" and a precise measure has been indicated for evaluating the final results of all the work done on fulfilling the decisions of the congress.

If one remembers in what an unprecedentedly short period of history a mighty industry was created, collectivization and the Leninist cultural revolution were carried out, the war-ravaged economy was restored, the Virgin Lands were upturned, and the peaceful conquest of space was begun, then, with all its complexity, the task posed by the congress is seen to be wholly realizable. The launch pad for acceleration is everything accumulated by preceding generations: this is the powerful base from which the take-off to new frontiers is effected. The first year of the 12th 5-Year Plan has begun successfully, comrades. But the Central Committee warns: There is no reason for complacency. For it is precisely during the present 5-year plan that a firm basis must be laid for the intensification of production, so that in the future we can proceed forward more rapidly in all the directions of the country's socioeconomic development. For this reason, growth in the national economy in 1986 is oriented toward very high rates and toward a higher level of economic thinking.

If one is to speak frankly, there is a view which says: When the new generation of technology comes in, then we shall begin accelerating everything. This is a mistaken opinion. In concentrating its efforts on the rapid development and introduction of advanced technology, the party is calling for the most efficient use to be made of existing production potential, for all reserves to be brought into play, and for labor discipline and good organization in work to be tightened up. The yardstick here is quality: quality of output and quality of labor. This multiple category fuses together economic theory and design, technology and conscientious attitudes, the prestige of the producer, the authority of the state, and the interests of the consumer.

It has correctly been said that merchandise stamped with a brand name amounts to not only a calling card but also a record book for the enterprise. The Soviet people often award low marks. Why does this happen? Certain leaders stubbornly repeat that there are objective reasons; but the example of those who show initiative and enterprise indicates that to a large extent these reasons have a personal, subjective tinge. "Yesterday's" things are the product of yesterday's psychology. In over-all terms no major production or social problem can be resolved unless we first resolve the problem of quality. Unless we link it to this, it is unrealistic to pose as a practical task the transfer to full financial autonomy, to enterprises being self-supporting, to a steady growth in profitability.

That is why there should be every kind of encouragement and support for those labor collectives which maintain the prestige of their output at a high level. Both in this country and abroad. The principle of social justice requires that they feel direct benefits from their high-quality work.

Thriftlessness, unproductive spending, losses in work time — all these cause huge damage. But the damage from the waste of talent, the stifling of initiative and innovation, and the desire of people to think and work in a new way is incalculable. Here as well, the decisions of the congress signify a sharp turning point. The system of management is being radically reorganized. The plan is this: The center determines key matters relating to the economy; locally affairs are conducted more independently and responsibly. Departments will not put a brake on the development of the regions, and the regions will further the growth of industries.

The flexible combination of centralized leadership and local initiative and of the sector and territorial principles, and the abolition of superfluous levels ensure mobility of management.

In the new conditions, it is impossible to lead in the old way. The old method of economic leadership, based to a considerable degree on restrictions and bans, is no longer up to today's requirements. The congress spoke about this clearly and adopted a decision on the all-around strengthening of progressive forms of economic management and on orienting enterprises and associations toward working on the basis of self-financing and paying their own way.

The individual moves forward to the center of difficult and deep processes of renewal. Without a reshaping of his consciousness, his psychology, and his thinking, all other changes are impossible. And here we cannot turn a blind eye to the difficulties. There is great danger of an oversimplified attitude to decisions that have been made and of primitivism in interpreting them.

Naturally the quest is not without risk and there can be failures, but we must not let this frighten us. What is frightening is stagnation, ossification, and absence of movement, without which, as is known, any organism is condemned to dying out. The tasks set by the congress presuppose such a high level of intellect and erudition, competence, party devotion to the cause as well, that education, training, the search for and the advancement of gifted people become one of the most important political necessities. There are such people in the country. Maybe one of the main services of the congress is that it put them in the foreground. The great cause is calling on outstanding workers. An intelligent man in the right place is a reliable guarantee of success if he is helped to toil at full strength. The task is to give full play to his energy, experience, and desire to work in a new way, so that the innovator is no worse off than the mediocre person who never takes risks and compensates for his lack of ability with bootlicking and servility.

The reshaping of consciousness is a most difficult process and at times is agonizing. It is attended by colossal overloading. This is relieved by consideration for the individual, a principled attitude, and fairness, heartfeltness, and sincerity in relations between people. How much is meant now by moral support and assistance! How much the worth of a warm word, which so inspires the individual, is growing! All talk about the human factor are empty without genuine humanity.

We need beauty, everywhere and in everything: in production, in planning construction, in artistic creativity, in relations between people. Aspiring to the highest world achievements — in the economy, in science, in culture — the party lays its hope on committed participation in the projected transformations by people of labor — talented, educated, cultured, beautiful, and strong, attractive by their example.

We are unusually wealthy. Our wealth has many components: these are the indisputable gains of our social system, of our order; these are the indestructible Leninist alliance of the working class, the kolkhoz peasantry, the people's intelligentsia; these are the indissoluble international brotherhood of peoples and republics.

Internationalism in the Leninist sense is a realistic policy; the Leninist nationalities policy has raised peoples once left behind to the level of world culture. The concept of acceleration adopted by the congress presupposes a multiplication of the economic and cultural potential of each people, of each republic, of each region, an increase in their real contribution to the all-union wealth. The reserves here are enormous and inexhaustible, and the task is set thus: The contribution of all republics, krays, and oblasts, to the progress of the country's unified national-economic complex and to the nationwide spiritual culture must correspond to their maximum possibility. On the other hand, it is obvious that excessive regulation in the planning of their development should make way for more flexible and stimulating methods.

The congress particularly emphasized the social orientation of the economy. Yes, the benefits must be distributed according to justice. But, as well as this, of course, it is very important that the volume of these benefits should be as large as possible and that aggregate wealth should grow. In other words, more should be given to the people, but more must come from the people too. It is only in this way that the principle of social justice will obtain material content.

And furthermore, social justice will not triumph if an end is not put to all sorts of antisocial phenomena: drunkenness, parasitism, hooliganism, ill-mannered behavior in home life and in public places; if there is no rooting out of the plague of the private-ownership mentality, of bribe-taking, of getting rich at the expense of the people, of enjoying a comfortable existence on unearned income.

Let us recall: "If there is such a phenomenon as bribery," Lenin said, "if this is possible, then one is not dealing with politics." In the struggle against any vermin, local organs can — and do — do much. To set store by intervention from the "center" means to capitulate to the defects in one's own house. On the contrary, the uncompromising nature and decisiveness of the legitimate measures being adopted are an indicator of the political health and the militancy of party organizations.

The course of the April plenum of the Central Committee toward a resolute struggle against phenomena which are alien to the socialist way of life has met with the full support of the labor collectives and the absolute majority of Soviet people, and this course will be pursued consistently and steadfastly.

Comrades, the 27th congress examined in a new way, in the Leninist manner, the questions of development of Soviet democracy. Its decisions are a practical program of drawing the working people more and more into the management of affairs of the society and the state, of an effective utilization of all forms of representative and direct democracy, the perfection of the election system, the improvement of the activity of state and public organizations and all our political institutions.

The further democratization of public-political and economic life is linked directly with raising the level of the people's political standards. At present, it is such that it enables the bold development of socialist self-management. Its main links are the soviets of peoples' deputies. We are working out measures which are, on the one hand, intended to increase the responsibility of local organs of power and, on the other hand, to ensure their sovereignty in practice. The party is in favor of the soviets being directly and immediately interested in the achievement of the best end results of the work of all enterprises situated on their territory. When the soviets truly influence their production activity and carry their share of reponsibility for it, then everyone is the winner — enterprise and industry, village and town, and their inhabitants. In several rayons of the country, the experimental model of such cooperation has been tested successfully. First results indicate that the departmental-and-local-interests-first attitude can be overcome, that it is possible to remove contradictions in interests, and the main fact: it is possible to give local soviets the necessary economic independence.

Bureaucracy is contrary to genuine democracy, and the party has always fought against it. The bureaucrat is especially dangerous today because today's bureaucrat is more educated and, if you like, more qualified; he adapts himself better, changes his color more easily, and brings matters into disrepute so much more strongly. The congress named the real means of struggle against bureaucracy. These are first of all the further democratization of management, the participation of citizens in working out and adoption of decisions, a course toward extending the system of appointing leading workers in enterprises by election, the periodical reporting-back by organs of management to working people, the taking into account of public opinion in making appointments to various posts, attestation of workers everywhere. All this and much more is gradually entering the life of our society.

This is not an easy process, overcoming obstacles; but the congress decisions stimulate it. The party is establishing a direct link between the process of democratization and openness. The Leninist thesis that the masses must know everything and undertake everything consciously is becoming, in contemporary conditions, a norm of social practice. A healthy society has no fear of openess, criticism and self-criticism, and a keen formulation of the issues. We fundamentally disagree with those who campaign for measuring out social information in doses. There cannot be too much truth. The party has eliminated areas which were once closed to criticism and has abolished the "privilege" of being protected from criticism. The suppression of criticism is being prosecuted without regard to the individual concerned or his rank. No honest person should suffer for the truth. However, in conditions of broad criticism, openness, and the struggle against shortcomings a barrier must be raised against slander and slanderers. This is also a matter of political principle.

The nature of socialist self-management is such that, in it, democracy is inseparable from discipline and order, freedom is inseparable from responsibility, initiative from organization, and rights from duties. It is precisely in this dialectical unity that the guarantee of real self-management, which provides a broad outlet for the civic energy and the social activity of the Soviet people, operates.

Comrades, Lenin and our historical experience teach us that the key to success consists above all in the party and all its detachments, links, and cells, influencing social processes and the course of events not by the force of power but by the force of authority, vigor, experience, and conviction, and in their proving to be bodies of specifically political leadership. Of all the issues, the most important one here is that of cadres, above all, of leaders. Since the April Central Committee plenum, those entering the leadership have been, as a rule, more energetic, of greater initiative, less subject to the usual stereotypes, and with a better understanding of the spirit and the requirements of the day. Among them are many young workers, but many of them are experienced comrades who have well proved themselves in the past. They are, so to speak, leaders of an "earlier batch of results" capable of thinking and acting in the new way. At the same time, the party is freeing itself from sluggish and incompetent workers. There is occuring, as Lenin put it, a "reevaluation of the leaders and a certain transferral of them because since it is impossible for them to adapt to the new conditions and the new tasks."

Our society is paying dearly for mistakes in the cadre policy. We need an atmosphere which excludes the possibility of mistakes with cadres and which allows them to be exposed. This is precisely the climate being confirmed within the party and the country following the historic April plenum of our party's Central Committee.

Today, no Communist, whatever post he may occupy, can be protected from being held responsible for his deeds and actions, and this is true primarily with regard to his primary party organization. As regards ostentatious party members: No, we don't need them, as Lenin used to say. Guard the party's honor and purity of its ranks, the honest and pure aspect of the party member, as the apple of your eye — this is what Lenin bequeathed to us and this is what the congress appealed for. We shall always remain faithful to his behest and unswervingly follow this appeal.

Today, when the ideas of the congress are taking hold of the masses, it is very important not to allow a devaluation of the new concepts, an emasculation of their essence, or a situation where the words are new but the actions are old. It is particularly necessary to take this into account in ideological education work, where fundamental restructuring is also under way; and here the emphasis should be on qualitative indexes, on a maximum correlation with life, on work with people on an individual level, and on informal, intelligent, and honest dialogue with the individual. He should be respected and not repelled by empty edification. Cliches and stock phrases do not stimulate feelings of patriotic duty. The energetic, active soviet patriotism of today has finer and deeper motivating incentives.

True patriotism lies in daily intensive work of heart and mind and in everyday courage, which rejects easy paths and solutions. It is not satisfied with the average but strives for the very highest levels in any matter, be it work with machine tools or on the farm, combat duties or construction of new machinery, scientific research or artistic creativity.

A patriot is formed not only by knowledge of the glorious past of the homeland but awareness of his involvement in the movement of the fatherland toward the most advanced boundaries of our time.

The decisions of the congress particularly impress young people. Their moral sensitivity unerringly picked out in the decisions the dynamism, novelty of views, and clarity of directions as to what is of value which are so attractive to young people. Young people like a discussion in which they are treated as equals and where there is respect and trust toward them without grumbling and a patronizing tone. We have fine young people. In the final analysis everything we undertake today is for the sake of our children and grandchildren. They are to be the sole masters of our country once we enter the 21st century, which is already close at hand. We want them to build its future together with us and to be happy.

By creating for them the optimum conditions for work, education, and leisure, the party has a right to expect that young people will pour all their creative strength and energy into acceleration.

The congress devoted great attention to the family. It is very important to try to ensure that young families are strong, harmonious, and industrious; and may the remarkable family of the Ulyanovs, which brought up outstanding strugglers for the people's cause, be an example for them.

We Communists are inspired by Lenin's words: "We are the party of the future. The future belongs to youth. We are a party of innovators, and young people always willingly follow innovators. We are a party of selfless struggle against old putrefaction, and young people will always be the first to embark on selfless struggle." Our party is a party of pioneers, and this is what makes it eternally young. Its youth is found in the daring search for new ways for the future and in the boldness of achievements which renew life for the happiness and well-being of our people.

The 27th Congress: The Leninist Philosophy of Peace and Security

Comrades! Lenin said that the old diplomacy is incapable of speaking directly and openly. Direct and open speaking with peoples and governments is the inalienable characteristic of the new, socialist, Leninist diplomacy. The our party's 27th congress has just demonstrated this. The Political Report made to the congress, the principles set out in it for the creation of an all-embracing system of international security, and the program for the elimination of nuclear weapons and other types of weapons of mass destruction, embody the Leninist principle: "As few general statements, solemn promises, and elaborate formulas as possible; and as many very clear resolutions and measures as possible, which will really lead to peace."

The Soviet Union has proposed very clear measures and resolutions, which will lead to peace, and to totally removing the danger of war. Clear proposals presuppose clear answers. But the West is replying in its traditional tone — by striving, as Lenin pointed out, "to divert attention toward the details and the individual aspects of current events and to obscure the meaning of the process as a whole." A disinclination to speak sincerely, diplomatic casuistry and pettifogging, and the "art" of complicating the very simplest issues and bringing about a stalemate — all these are specific instances of the reactionary ideology which imperialists are guided by in their vision of the world exclusively as a sphere for pursuing their antipopular, narrowly egotistical interests, an arena of action for disparate and mutually hostile forces.

The fundamentally new concept set out in the statement by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January [and] in his Political Report to the congress is based on an understanding of the world as a complex, contradictory but increasingly interrelated entity. The course of its development led to a review of such traditional political concepts as "war" and "victory in war," and revealed their unacceptability, or more accurately their senselessness in the nuclear space age The new political philosophy of peace equates averting war with mankind's survival. The level of security, it emphasizes, is now inversely proportional to the rate of stockpiling and perfecting nuclear weapons.

The starting point [for the new political philosophy of peace] is that the security of each state is directly dependent on the security of all. National security is a fiction if it is not part of universal security. Thus, there follows the vitally important conclusion for the destinies of mankind: The only path which does not carry the risk of suicide is to renounce the methods of force in resolving international questions and to settle them exclusively by political means. This philosophy sets the task of preserving civilization higher than bloc, national, and other interests.

At the beginning of this century, Lenin discerned with foresight the trends in development of military equipment capable of putting a question mark over life on earth and formulated a practical line toward peaceful cohabitation and cooperation between states with different social systems. In the nuclear space age, this is imperative for all countries and all peoples.

The concept of an all-embracing system of security contains prerequisites for the materialization of a new political philosophy of peace. The entire complex of international relations and their every sphere, whether military-political, economic, cultural, or humanitarian sphere, can be restructed on this basis. It contains the key to resolving global problems and settling regional conflicts and eradicating terrorism.

Our ideology categorically rejects terror. As early as its second congress in 1903, the Communist Party resolutely rejected it as a means of political struggle.

The Soviet Union is a principled, convinced opponent of any terrorism, primarily of the most repugnant form of terrorism — stateterrorism. Imagine what will happen if states, in response to individual or group terrorist actions, make it a rule to carry out aggression by armed force against other states accused of terrorism. This will threaten peace and the security of peoples not only in individual regions but also in our world as a whole. And how can it be possible in such conditions to succesfully conduct a line of reducing armaments, strengthening the security of peoples and peaceful coexistence in general. We, like the governments of other countries and many state and political figures, are resolutely against arbitrariness in the sphere of international relations, which creates irreparable danger for peace on earth. We are prepared, on a rational basis, to cooperate with all countries, with all peace-loving forces, in the fight against terrorism whatever form it takes.

Our concept of peace and security is in accordance with the fundamental aspirations of all peoples. A historical parallel suggests itself here. At one time Lenin's slogan, the slogan — A world without annexations and war indemnities — was rejected by capitalist governments but accepted by the peoples. Today, in the new political philosophy of peace, we see once again the common aspirations of the peoples but also the unwillingness of some governments to accept it.

Does not this lead inevitably to conclusions about the preservation of the age-old order of things? The April plenum and the 27th CPSU Congress clearly and precisely said No. We are not pessimistic about the fact that the first steps in the practical implementation of our proposals have met with nonacceptance on the part of certain Western states. We understand that this is only the beginning of the road. Everything still lies ahead and we are determined patiently and consistently, purposefully and step by step, to implement a course toward the comprehensive development of international cooperation and toward mature detente..

In any sphere, in any form, on any levels, from meetings with experts to summit meetings, it is characterized by enhanced dynamism, activeness, and aggressiveness, as well as by realism and a scientific approach to stating and resolving problems. The entire post-April period is evidence of fidelity to this course.

We will continue to not miss a single political chance to achieve the aims outlined. We will further improve the mechanism of negotiations, strengthen the legal treaty basis of relations, raise the efficiency of our foreign policy, and enrich it with all the best that has been accumulated by socialist diplomacy, and conduct a direct and honest dialogue with our partners in the quest for mutually acceptable results.

This is one orientation of our party's foreign policy activities. Another is that of open dialogue with the world public. The theoretical premise for this is Lenin's: One of the reasons for the "great acceleration of world development is the involvement in it of hundreds and hundreds of millions of people." Gone are the times when deals were concluded behind the people's backs. The right to know and understand what is going on in the world is their profound and vital right. And we shall continue to quench the thirst for truth, whatever that truth may be.

They can call this propaganda in the West if they will. We have different understandings of what this means: For them it is the erection of screens of lies and deception, to camouflage plans and actions; we understand it as explaining true goals, combining word and deed and deed and word.

And finally, we have no right to be oblivious of our security and the security of our allies, our friends. More than sufficient evidence has been given of the seriousness of our intentions. For 8 months our country refrained from carrying out nuclear explosions — nor is it in a hurry to resume them now.

It is not we who are testing the will of the world community, expressed by the leaders of six states of Europe, Africa, Asia, and Latin America. We were not the ones who responded to their appeal with new nuclear explosions.

All peoples, including a majority of the American people, come out for the halting of nuclear arms tests. We again call upon the leaders of the United States to heed the voice of mankind, the voice, after all, of its own people, the voice of reason.

If they fail to do this, they will be taking upon themselves serious responsibility before the world. The Soviet Union is doing everything to stop the nuclear train, which is about to be derailed. No one, however, should be mistaken: We are capable of responding to any challenge, including a military challenge from space.

But this is not our choice. We are convinced that not only do we not need it, but neither does any people. Let us look at this question from the point of view of our world's socioeconomic problems. The leaders of the United States are not averse to boasting of their mighty economy. Elementary justice requires it to be said that this exists to a considerable degree at others' expense, primarily at the expense of the developing countries and peoples. It is also known that the crisis-stricken economy of the richest capitalist country in the world is being bouyed up by militarization and by the allocation of colossal funds to finance military programs — including, of course, to finance the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative, which is called upon to maintain the U.S. military-industrial complex at a level acceptable to its owners, generals, and advocates. As the Political Report to the congress noted, the fact that more than $200 billion is extorted from the developing countries every year, and that the size of the U.S. military budget in recent years is practically the same — that is no coincidence. And it is not only other people's money which is taken away — they recruit other people's minds and talents.

The peoples should realize that it is they who will finance the star wars program, too, but with even more grievous consequences for their economic and sociopolitical health and their spiritual and intellectual potential. But not only that, because economic security and political freedom, the sovereignty of peoples, are indivisible. Our concept of peace highlights the economic, social, and other aspects of disarmament. For if the present rate of military expenditure of the nonsocialist countries is maintained, then by the end of the century this expenditure will, experts believe, amount approximately to another $9 trillion — for the nonsocialist countries alone.

The implementation of the Soviet proposals would open up real opportunities for cutting the military budgets of countries which have nuclear weapons. The renunciation of new nuclear missile and chemical arms programs would yield for the West European states alone a savings of approximately $300 billion.

Disarmament is vitally needed by peoples of liberated countries where the number of those who go hungry reaches 500 million people. No, an equitable economic order will not be established in the world if material preparations for war are not halted.

Our wide-ranging proposals aimed at curbing the arms race and at disarmament and military detente are widely known. Recently in Berlin Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev set out in a concrete manner the practical aspects of the foundations for all-embracing security. The essence of the new initiative of socialist countries, aimed at strengthening all-European security and at an equitable and gradual lowering of the levels of conventional arms, has been set out.

The new approach to international affairs took shape in the process of the collective examination of the problems of world politics with our allies and friends. The meetings among the highest party and state leaders of the fraternal countries were of special significance in this creative cooperation.

The interaction within the Warsaw Pact framework and the CEMA has been raised onto a new level.

At the same time, this new approach predetermined a different pace for the development of our relations with all socialist states. Following the Central Committee's April plenum, the cooperation with them, on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism, reached a qualitatively higher level. A greater dynamism, comradely openness, a greater coordination, purposefulness, and profound democratism are now inherent in all its areas.

It is gratifying that certain positive turning points have begun to take shape in the Soviet-Chinese interstate relations.

Pooling the forces of the socialist countries gives an impetus greater than the mere sum of the parts. This is the decisive factor in ensuring that the concept of peace based on a civilized approach will be put into practice.

The communist and workers parties, the social democrats, the Nonaligned Movement, and the powerful antiwar forces of the world are coming out increasingly resolutely for a radical restructuring of international relations on just and democratic foundations. It is only the ruling circles of imperialist powers, led by the United States, who are aspiring to hegemony and to the role of arbitrary ruler of the destinies of people who are in opposition. Thus, on one side of the scales there is a policy of peace and security and on the other a policy of militarization and expansion expressed today as the doctrine of neoglobalism. The very vocabulary of this doctrine — "punish," "instruct," "teach a lesson," "take revenge" — indicates its essence and direction. It is nothing other than a modernized version of colonialism called upon to underpin the right to overthrow legal governments by means of the export of counterrevolution and the use of hired bandits, and calculating on taking social revenge by this means. An example of this is the undeclared wars against Afghanistan, Lebanon, Nicaragua, Angola, Mozambique, and subversive acts against the governments of other sovereign states. The U.S. aggression against Libya has shown how dangerous such a policy is. There is an organic link between the bomb blasts in residential areas of Tripoli and Banghazi and the nuclear explosions in Nevada. Peoples have seen shameless chauvinism, arrogance, and the anything-goes psychology turn into a barbarous act of state terrorism carried out by the most advanced means of destruction. Peoples have seen why U.S. aircraft carriers rove the seas and oceans, and why U.S. military bases, surrounding the globe with barbed wire from Japan, the Korean Peninsula, then to Britain, and to the Panama Canal, have been set up.

The steadfastness of the Libyan people, the resolute measures and actions taken by the Soviet leadership and our country, and the condemnation in principle of the act of state terrorism by the world community have prevented a further increase in the threat to peace and have smashed this imperialist venture. But the danger of new intrigues of imperialism still exists. And no one must be in any doubt about the sympathy and solidarity of the Soviet Union for all those who are defending their right to independent and free development, who are defending their national and human dignity.

Our country is willing to conduct a constructive dialogue with all countries, and of course with the United States. We are in favor of continuing the process that was started in Geneva. But Washington, by its actions, has created serious difficulties regarding the possibility of improving Soviet-U.S. relations and practical preparations for the meeting between the leaders of our two countries all the more so. In Washington there are forces which would like to explode the warming that has taken shape in Soviet-U.S. relations and to put an end to the Geneva spirit. This influence of theirs has been felt recently in the U.S. policy, and the Libya events are a link in this policy. The creation of the conditions that are necessary for continuing direct dialogue at a high level depends now upon the U.S. Administration. Practical actions are needed that are capable of reducing the military danger and raising trust between states. We are ready for this.

Ilich's comrades-in-arms were enraptured by his political realism. Georgiy Vasilyevich Chicherin used to recollect that at critical moments, this trait of Lenin's was a certain guarantee of the infallibility of our party's foreign policy course. We stand on the same positions: The Soviet leadership is convinced that political reason and realism will prevail over political madness. The Communist Party and the Soviet Government will do everything that is essential for our people to live in conditions of peace, and will work confidently and energetically at implementing the historical decisions of the party's 27th congress.

The creative work of Soviet people is the most reliable guarantee of peace and security and our readiness to respond to any challenge of time and to repulse any intrigues from the foes of socialism. We have huge natural resources, inexhaustible resources of willpower and knowledge, energy and talent, the ability to create and to achieve success. There are people on hand to guard and there are the means to protect the creative work and the freedom of Soviet people.

We will not allow military-strategic parity, which guarantees our security and the security of our allies and friends, or peace throughout the world to be broken. We have an active foreign policy, an integral conception of a stable peace and universal security elaborated by the party congress, and the firm will to implement it in practice.

We have a weapon against which all plans for obtaining military superiority, the most refined military doctrines and all technology, are powerless and which will never be acquired by the enemies of socialism — and this is firm confidence in our strengths, in the historical correctness of our cause, and the moral and political cohesion of Soviet society, our internationalist brotherhood, and the indestructible unity of the party and the people.

Comrades! At all times, at the most drastic turning points of history, the working masses have believed in the party: at the barricades and the storming of the Winter Palace, during the repelling of intervention, at legendary 5-year plan construction sites, and in the battles of the Great Patriotic War they were with the party and achieved victory together with it. The cause of the party is invincible, for it lives in the strivings of the people and is linked to them by thousands of living threads. The cause of the party is invincible, for its plans and achievements are founded on a very firm alloy of theory and practice. The most convincing example of this is the 27th congress of our party which fulfilled Lenin's order to "cast away that which is harmful, unite all which is of value in order to determine precisely a series of practical measures, and carry them out whatever the cost." And thus it will be!

May Lenin's cause live forever in our achievements!

Theater Workers, Creative Unions Meet in Moscow

Ligachev Urges 'Boldness'

[Text] Moscow, 19 Apr (TASS) — A conference of theater workers and directors, secretaries of party organizations; playwrights, and leaders of creative unions was held today in the CPSU Central Committee. Taking part in the work of the conference were Yegor Ligachev, member of the Politburo and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; Petr Demichev and Nikolay Talyzin, candidate members of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo; and Aleksandr Yakovlev, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

With profound interest and based on the party's principled positions, the conference participants discussed concrete ways of perfecting work of the theater, the loftiest aim of which is serving the people.

Yegor Ligachev, member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central committee and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, spoke at the conference.

The 27th CPSU Congress, Ligachev said, has laid out the general line of the party policies: to accelerate the country's socioeconomic development and to consolidate peace and social progress. The entire course of communist building and of the organizational, economic, and psychological reconstruction; the eradication of immoral phenomena; and all processes of renovation are being carried out under the leadership of the party.

The party calls on literature and art to reflect the truth and only the truth. But we need the whole truth which, as the congress's Political Report points out, consists of the achievements of the people and the contradictions of the development of society, of the heroism and daily occurrences of the work days, of successes and failures, that is, of life itself in all its many facets, its drama and grandeur, Ligachev said.

We live at a crucial time which demands an intense work rhythm and the total commitment of the strength of every citizen. At all times, and particularly at crucial stages of the development of our society, Soviet literature and theater have focused on the image of those who fight for what is new against the outdated. It is the duty of the theater to point out and to reveal the sources of all sorts of divergences from socialist morality. The theater has occupied a passive position in the struggle to extirpate drunkenness and to assert a sober way of life. Now and then it gets away with jokes and funny catch phrases, although the issue is one of changing manners, customs, and consciousness — the most complicated sphere of life.

Discussing the tasks of the party's cultural policy, Yegor Ligachev stressed that masters of literature and art need to step up activity in portraying the Soviet way of life and to show greater aggressiveness in the struggle against bourgeois ideology.

Dwelling on questions connected with the development of the social and cultural sphere, acknowledged to be a most important part of the CPSU Program, Ligachev noted that in the current 5-year plan period it is planned to build 500 houses of culture and 5,600 clubs in rural areas — double that built in the last 5-year plan period. Between 1986 and 1995 it is planned to build 42 concert halls in oblast and republican centers. The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have adopted a decision on improving concert activity in the country. The CPSU Central Committee has deemed it necessary to create an all-is of value in order to determine precisely a series of practical measures, and carry them out whatever the cost." And thus it will be!

May Lenin's cause live forever in our achievements!

The entire course of communist building and of the organizational, economic, and psychological reconstruction; the eradication of immoral phenomena; and all processes of renovation are being carried out under the leadership of the party.

The party calls on literature and art to reflect the truth and only the truth. But we need the whole truth which, as the congress's Political Report points out, consists of the achievements of the people and the contradictions of the development of society, of the heroism and daily occurrences of the work days, of successes and failures, that is, of life itself in all its many facets, its drama and grandeur, Ligachev said.

We live at a crucial time which demands an intense work rhythm and the total commitment of the strength of every citizen. At all times, and particularly at crucial stages of the development of our society, Soviet literature and theater have focused on the image of those who fight for what is new against the outdated. It is the duty of the theater to point out and to reveal the sources of all sorts of divergences from socialist morality. The theater has occupied a passive position in the struggle to extirpate drunkenness and to assert a sober way of life. Now and then it gets away with jokes and funny catch phrases, although the issue is one of changing manners, customs, and consciousness — the most complicated sphere of life.

Discussing the tasks of the party's cultural policy, Yegor Ligachev stressed that masters of literature and art need to step up activity in portraying the Soviet way of life and to show greater aggressiveness in the struggle against bourgeois ideology.

Dwelling on questions connected with the development of the social and cultural sphere, acknowledged to be a most important part of the CPSU Program, Ligachev noted that in the current 5-year plan period it is planned to build 500 houses of culture and 5,600 clubs in rural areas — double that built in the last 5-year plan period. Between 1986 and 1995 it is planned to build 42 concert halls in oblast and republican centers. The CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers have adopted a decision on improving concert activity in the country. The CPSU Central Committee has deemed it necessary to create an all-union theatrical society, a cultural fund, and an all-union musical society.

A comprehensive experiment aimed at expanding the rights and independence of theater collectives and increasing their responsibility for the ideological and artistic level of performances on stage is to promote an increase in the effectiveness of the theater. It is important that the conduct of the experiment always be at the center of attention of party and trade union committees, arts councils, and cultural bodies.

Along with expanding rights and increasing independence, the leading cadres' ability to make use of these rights and this independence now comes to the forefront. The main concern of the party is bringing out creative boldness in our cadres and adapting their way of thinking. In this lies the very essence of the reorganization in society that is taking place. Much can be accomplished in this regard by Soviet theatrical art and those active in it.

An effective means of further raising the level of theatrical art is literary and artistic criticism, which as yet still lacks sufficient principledness in the appraisal of works and sufficient rage in combating drabness, banality, and unnecessary obsession with trivia.

Producers, actors, directors, and secretaries of party organizations in theatres have many duties. They include one duty of particular importance, namely the shaping of young actors. There can be no sparing of time or energy in this regard. This is where the future of Soviet theater lies.

In conclusion, Yegor Ligachev expressed confidence that the exchange of views which has taken place on important questions relating to the theatrical process will provide a fresh impetus in solving the artistic tasks that have been outlined by the party congress.

At the present time, the Soviet theater comprises 630 collectives employing over 40,000 creative workers, and it annually presents 3,000 premiers and over 300,000 shows to 124 million audience members.

Supreme Soviet Commissions Discuss Conservation

[TASS report: "In the Standing Commissions of the USSR Supreme Soviet Chambers"]

[Text] A joint session of the Industrial Commissions and the Conservation and Rational Utilization of Natural Resources Commissions of the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of the Union and Soviet of Nationalities was held in the Kremlin on 9 April. The question of "The Observance by the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry of the Requirements of Ligislation on the Rational Utilization of Raw Timber Resources" was discussed.

It was noted in the report and the deputies' speeches that the ministry and the associations, enterprises, and organizations under its jurisdiction, guided by the instructions of the Communist Party and the requirements of USSR legislation, have in recent years done some work to improve the utilization of timber raw materials.

At the same time it was stressed that the activity of the ministry and its subunits is not yet in accordance with the tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress and the requirements of legislation. Thriftlessness occurs, raw timber resources are not utilized rationally, and plans for the production of the most important types of output are not fulfilled. Resource-saving and waste-free techniques are being introduced too slowly. Broadleaf timber, waste, and paper pulp are not used sufficiently in processing. There are major shortcomings in work to restore the forests.

The USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry, other USSR ministries and departments, and the union republic councils of ministers are instructed to examine the recommendations and observations set forth in the commissions' documents.

It was decided to ask the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium to recommend that the union republic supreme soviet presidiums adopt measures to ensure the fuller exercise by local soviets of the rights granted to them in the sphere of state management and control of the utilization of timber resources and to increase exactingness toward leaders of enterprises and organizations which procure and process timber as regards their observance of forestry legislation.

PRAVDA Examines Restructuring of Party Work

PM221405 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 21 Apr 86
First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "On the Paths of Restructuring"]

[Text] Soviet people are working enthusiastically on the implementation of the program approved by the 27th CPSU Congress for accelerating the country's socioeconomic development. The energy of thoughts is being transformed into the energy of specific actions. In every republic and oblast and every labor collective a hard but irreversible process of renewal, of radical transformations is under way. And it is proceeding through people's minds and hearts, demanding that each person fully give of himself.

Ensuring the fundamental restructuring of party work is a matter of paramount importance. That means that an atmosphere of efficiency and initiative, creation, principled exactingness, and self-criticism must be asserted everywhere. That means that a resolute struggle must be waged against departmentalism and localistic tendencies, paper-shuffling, and other bureaucratic obstacles. That means that the Communists must seek new and effective solutions to the problems which arise, strengthen discipline and order, and develop socialist enterprise. That means that superannuated work style and methods must be improved and where necessary radically altered, and that cadres must be taught to take on responsibility and not to be afraid of bold, innovatory actions.

The style necessary right now is a specific, consistent nature, the unity of word and deed, and broad publicity. It is necessary to conduct an active quest, to choose the most effective methods and means, to carefully consider people's opinions, and to coordinate skillfully the actions of all social forces. Not the compiliation of papers and protocols but the organization of the masses' enterprising work and innovation — that is what is needed. Work with people must be improved: They must not be dragged into offices; we must go out to the localities where problems, successes, and ommissions are more evident.

The restructuring and alteration of work style and methods must take place not only in the upper echelons, in the party, soviet and economic organs. Every worker, kolkhoz member, engineer, and scientist has his own style. Improving it means improving his attitude toward matters. We must rid ourselves more rapidly of all hack work, of the mere semblance of work, of window-dressing. Fewer smoking breaks, more smartness, initiative, and attention toward the matter are needed. We are rightly indignant about any kind of shortcomings and those specifically to blame for them: slipshod workers, idlers, and bureaucrats. Who if not the Communists is to call them to order? There is no vanguard role for party members in general terms; it is expressed in specific practical deeds. It is important to enhance the primary party organizations' militancy, to seek that a full life is ensured, characterized by openness, publicly for designs and decisions, humanity, and mutual exactingness. We must substantially enhance the influence exerted on the work of the apparatus and sectors as a whole by Communists in ministries and departments. So far their party committees are using the right of control very timidly and circumspectly.

The Moscow Gorkom has begun restructuring vigorously in accordance with the requirements of the times. Here emphasis has been placed on enhancing people's activenews and rendering practical assistance locally. A precise set of regulations has been approved for all public organizations. There has been a reduction in the number of measures of all kinds, 50 percent fewer bureau resolutions have started to be adopted, and there has been a reduction in the flow of documents sent to party raykoms and primary organizations. The monitoring and verification of execution are being improved and a more effective system of work with the cadres reserve is being created. Reports from Communists on the fulfillment of statutory requirements have begun to be heard more frequently. All this is producing quite good results.

Efficiency will lend new impetus to the acceleration of movement. It is lacking in many workers who are inclined to replace business with talk and unfounded assurances and promises. Responding to the conversation under way in PRAVDA on resructuring, readers report that attachment to the old and attraction to overorganization are still having an impact locally. Some organizations are slow to overcome inertia, formalism, and cliches. The Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committee plenum rightly rebuked the Dnepropetrovsk Obkom in this connection: At plenums and aktiv meetings none of the 125 speeches contained any criticism of the obkom bureau or secretaries.

The demand of the moment is that he who merely "finds his place in the restructuring" and does not intend to work in a new way must go. To call things by their name, to judge everything unequivocally, to provide objective information for higher-ranking party organs and the masses, to display high exactingness and honesty everywhere and in everything, to extirpate inertia and conservatism in any of their manifestations and the desire to embroider on the true state of affairs — all this must be the unshakable rule in party work.

The need for criticism and self-criticism can be felt more keenly than ever. After all, where no exacting words are to be heard an atmosphere of complaceny and permissiveness is created and stagnation is formed. But we must not allow criticism and self-criticism to be turned into farce, into a kind of fashion which has taken over from eulogizing the status quo. Yet that, unfortunately, is what is happening in some places: People engage in self-flagellation, confess their sins, but do not turn from their old track. Criticism and self-criticism require actions. Recognition of errors should be followed by their rapid rectification.

In checking their work against the congress requirements, the party committees must develop by every means the initiative of the soviets and trade unions and put into operation the tremendous reserves contained in Soviet democracy. We must seek persistently to ensure that every person is not only aware of being the master of our state of all the people but also — the main thing — really is the master. A real, responsible master.

Work and life style cannot be altered immediately. Overcoming inertia in thinking and carrying out restructing is even more complex. The most important thing today is to achieve an understanding by each person of the actueness of the moment we are living through and of its breakthrough nature. Vigorous efforts are needed here, as are great purposefulness and consistency. The militant slogan of these days is "The living creation of the masses is the decisive force of acceleration!"

IZVESTIYA on Improving Social Justice

[Editorial: "The 27th CPSU Congress on Social Justice"]

[Text] At its 27th March session the CPSU Central Committee Politburo examined, among other questions, two which have the most direct relation to establishing the principle of social justice in our life — namely, improving the living conditions of invalids from childhood and stepping up the struggle against unearned income. We again see an example of energetic and consistent implementation of very important party congress ideas.

The CPSU Program, the new edition of which was adopted by the 27th congress, clearly sets out the basic tasks of social policy. Establishing the principle of social justice increasingly fully in all spheres of social relations is one of the most important. This confirms the main point of party activity, which is to show concern for the people's well-being, improve the living and working conditions of millions of people, and develop their abilities and talents.

Social justice permeates every aspect of socialist social relations. It consists in real people's power, equality of all citizens before the law, effective equal rights among nations, respect for the individual, and the creation of conditions conducive to his all-around development. It also comprises extensive social guarantees: provision of work; access to education, culture, medical services, and housing; and care for the aged, mothers, and children. Strict adherence to the principle of social justice is an important condition in ensuring the unity of the people, the political stability of society, and dynamic development.

This understanding of social justice makes it the fulcrum of party social policy. However, the qualitatively new state of society, which is to be attained by speeding up socioeconomic development, also demands qualitatively higher criteria for assessing Soviet people's living conditions, deepening our concepts of social justice.

That is why the 27th CPSU Congress particularly stressed the need to take a fresh look at the question of further developing the social sphere and fully appreciate its growing significance. The lessons of the past also demand this of us. The certain bias toward technocratic approaches which occurred in past years diminished the attention paid to the social aspect of production, everyday life, and leisure, which could not fail to lower working people's interest in the results of their labor, reduce discipline, and lead to other negative phenomena.

Under socialism the implementation of social justice consists principally in ensuring that our fundamental principle of "from each according to his ability, to each according to his labor" is applied steadfastly and consistently.

To work according to your ability, you must have the opportunity to develop that ability from childhood. Children from families with different social positions and different levels of prosperity must have roughly equal conditions for making a "start in life." That is why the party congress drew particular attention to the role of social consumption funds. Approximately one-third of the material goods and services used are currently provided by these funds. They play an important role in ensuring that society's members have equal access to education and culture, in equalizing conditions for bringing up children, and in providing for those who for various reasons need occasional or permanent assistance. At the same time it is also a means of providing incentives for skilled, conscientious labor. The party intends to continue pursuing the line of further increasing and making more effective use of the social funds.

Schools have a crucial role to play in developing abilities. The congress stressed that the pace and extent to which the measures envisaged by the school reform have been carried out cannot yet satisfy us. It demanded that the Leninist principle of combining study with productive labor be applied more fully and that young people's training for independent life and work be radically improved.

To work according to your ability, you must have the opportunity to actually show your ability in the work process. Therefore improvements in quality in the social sphere are impossible without profound transformations in the content of labor. The retooling of the national economy, which — and this was stressed at the congress — must have a clear social thrust, has a basic role here. And good labor organization, which makes it possible for every member of society to work with maximum efficiency, is no less important.

Socialism develops the whole diversity of people's interests, needs, and abilities. Moreover, socialism needs such diversity, regarding it as a necessary condition for further increasing creative activeness, initiative, and competition between minds and talents, without which the socialist way of life and true social justice are inconceivable. If we are unable to raise production and economic competition in the spheres of science and artistic creativity to a new, far higher standard we will be incapable of resolving the tasks of speeding up the country's socioeconomic development.

These are the most important conditions for the principle of "from each according to his ability" to be effective. But smooth functioning of the second part of the formula — "to each according to his labor" also requires that a number of obligatory conditions be observed.

This primarily involves, as the congress stressed, enhancing the forms of moral incentives and radically improving material incentives. The congress said with the utmost clarity that a gross violation of our principles occurs when a good and a careless worker receive equal remuneration for their work.

Combating unearned income obtained through illegal activity, embezzlement, bribery, speculation, or unauthorized use of state transport, machinery, or equipment for personal gain is an important function of the state. But in stopping unearned income we must not allow suspicion to be cast on people who obtain extra earnings through honest labor. That kind of labor must be fully combined with the principle of socialist management and put on a cooperative or contract basis. The congress drew particular attention to the fact that all efforts to improve distributive relations will prove ineffective and the task of increasing the people's prosperity unfulfilled if we are unable to meet the market's needs for various goods and services. The social acuteness and significance of the housing problem requires that increasing attention be paid to it. It is not just a matter of increasing the scale of construction and improving its quality but of substantially improving the practice of housing distribution. These questions must be resolved on a broad, democratic basis, openly and under constant public monitoring.

The creation of working and living conditions for women which enable them to successfully combine motherhood with energetic participation in labor and public activity, as the congress stressed, bears the most direct relationship to the problem of social justice. Care for the older generation — war and labor veterans — must occupy a large place in our work. The whole lifetime of a person — from birth to extreme old age — and every aspect of that life, ranging from working and living conditions, health, and leisure through to social, class, and national relations, should be illuminated and warmed by social justice. That is how the party puts the issue. But this demand will become a daily reality only in conditions where every Soviet person works strenuously and efficiently: every Soviet person, no matter where he works or what post he occupies. What we ourselves do will determine what we will have and the way that we will live.

[USSR Central Statistical Administration report: "To Consolidate and Augment Successes. On the Results of the Fulfillment of the State Plan by the USSR's Industry in the First 3 Months of 1986"]

[Text] The first 3 months saw an achievement of faster pace of industry's development and improvement in the technical and economic indicators in the work of most of its sectors on the basis of increased labor activeness and initiative by collectives in associations and enterprises. The total volume of output increased by 6.7 percent in comparison with the corresponding period of last year. Labor productivity increased by 6.3 percent and this accounted for 94 percent of the production growth. The set targets for the output of the majority of most important types of articles were exceeded.

The prime costs and materials-intensiveness of output produced were reduced, and profits increased.

The plan for output sales was fulfilled by all the union republics and by industrial ministries, except for the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry.

Figures for the fulfillment of the industrial output sales plan, the rate of production growth, and the rate of labor productivity growth for the ministries are cited below:

The plan was fulfilled for the extraction of gas and coal and for the production of steel, finished rolled ferrous metal products, iron ore, mineral fertilizers, chemical plant protection agents, metal-cutting machine tools, forging and pressing machines, industrial robots, instruments, automation equipment and computer equipment, agricultural machines, commercial lumber, paper, cement, and precast ferroconcrete.

Targets for the output of many consumer goods were exceeded. Above-plan output figures are as follows: 26 million square meters of textiles, 5 million items of knitted underwear and outerwear, 1.9 million pairs of footwear, 28,000 radio receivers, 11,000 television sets, 16,000 refrigerators and freezers, furniture worth R49 million, and much other output. The output of nonalcoholic beverages, mineral water, and fruit juices increased by 26 percent.

The scale of retooling and reconstruction of industrial enterprises was expanded. The capital investment funds channeled into this work were 30 percent higher than in the corresponding period of last year.

Industrial sectors continued to be supplied with modern means of production. More than 1,500 automated, rotary, rotary-conveyor, and mechanized flow lines were installed, and about 1,000 sections, shops, and production units switched to comprehensive mechanization and automation. The application of advanced resource-saving manufacturing processes was expanded. The production of 290 new types of industrial output was assimilated and started up, including construction materials and efficient equipment for the fuel industry, machine building, and agriculture.

The output of advanced types of machines and equipment developed at an accelerated pace in the machine-building complex sectors: machine tools with digital program control, industrial robots, flexible production modules, and computer equipment. Production of the "Volgar" 170-horsepower caterpillar tractor and the "Don-1500" high-productivity grain harvesting combines was started up.

Ferrous metallurgy boosted the output of high-grade hot-gauged steel, hot-tempered rolled metal products, rolled metal products made of low-alloy steel, and other advanced types of metal products. This resulted in a saving of more than 700,000 metric tons of metal in the national economy.

The reduction of pulp consumption [massoyemkost] in the pulp and paper industry production made it possible to save about 300,000 cubic meters of lumber raw material.

Technical and economic indicators of work improved in many sectors and production units.

The fast pace of output growth in the first 3 months of 1986 is to a certain extent linked with the low growth of production output in the first 3 months of last year (2 percent).

In the first 3 months a number of production associations and enterprises failed to fulfill their plans for total output volume, labor productivity growth, reduction of the prime costs of production, and accumulations. The attainment of targets set by the plan for the development of science and technology was not fully ensured.

The Ministry of Petroleum Industry failed to ensure the fulfillment of the quarterly targets set for petroleum extraction and deliveries.

Output of the following products was below plan: AC electric motors, sulfuric acid, color television sets, and some highly efficient types of products — iron powder, thermoplastic pipes and pipeline components, pneumatic shuttle looms, and units [stantsiya] for the comprehensive mechanization of finishing work in the construction industry.

Considerable laggardness was allowed to occur in the performance of contractual deliveries obligations by associations and enterprises within the systems of the ministries of the timber, pulp and paper, and wood processing industry and of the light industry.

Implementing the tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress, the labor collectives of industrial associations and enterprises are mobilizing existing reserves for the successful fulfillment of the 1986 plan.

Agricultural Developments for 17-22 April Reported

LD230055 [Editorial Report] The following is a compilation of reports on agricultural developments in the USSR carried by Moscow Domestic Service in Russian, unless otherwise indicated, on 17-22 April. Times of broadcasts are given in parentheses at the end of each item.

17 April

By today, Belorussian machine operators have sown spring crops on an area of about 380,000 hectares. The frontiers of sowing have reached Vitebsk Oblast, the most northerly one in the republic. In the country as a whole, by the start of the week, spring crops and resowing already occupied over 4.8 million hectares. (1000 GMT)

By mid-April, in the country as a whole, perennial and annual grasses have been sown on almost 2.5 million hectares; this spring it is planned to sow feed crops on over 30 million hectares in the country. (1100 GMT)

Large-scale corn sowing started today in the Crimea, using only mechanized equipment. Corn will be grown on some 40,000 hectares in the oblast. (1500 GMT)

Thirteen union republics are now sowing; spring crops already occupy one-tenth of the allocated area. By the end of the 5-year plan, grain production is to be increased to 250-255 million metric tons per annum. This means that the average grain yield must be raised by 5 quintals per hectare, that is, by 1 quintal each year. Correspondents report from farms in various regions. Local officials discuss in general terms the problem of grain production. In Rostov Oblast, there is eagerness to introduce the latest intensive technology, but some of the wheat varieties are unsatisfactory. (Moscow Television 17 Apr 86 1700 GMT)

18 April

The spring fieldwork season has come to southern rayons of Orel Oblast, albeit with not quite favorable weather conditions. The sun shines, then it rains and sleets, and work has to be halted again. Farmers are carrying out moisture retention, fallow plowing, winter crop top-dressing, and perennial grass sowing. The first tens of thousands of hectares have already been sown to early spring and grain crops; Orel Oblast farmers are to sow early grains on more than 500,000 hectares. (1800 GMT)

The sowing of the first 1 million hectares of spring crops has been completed in Krasnodar Kray. Spring crops have now been sown on more than 1 million hectares in Kazakhstan. This year spring and winter crops will be grown on 30 million hectares in the republic. (1950 GMT)

19 April

More than 1 million hectares has been sown to spring crops in Kazakhstan. In the Balkhash plains in Alma Ata and Taldy-Kurgan Oblasts they have completed sowing of spring cereal crops. The soil has been well prepared, and the state of the first shoots shows that the quality is good. All rayons in the Crimea are sowing intertilled crops. Many farms have completed plans for beet and sunflower sowing. Preparations for sowing soya are ending. The main crop on irrigated land is now corn. (0000 GMT)

Spring crops have been sown on 1 million hectares in the Kuban steppe. Shoots have appeared on fields of early spring grain and pulse crops. This year's spring sowing has been speeded up thanks to earlier and better preparation of the fields. (0104 GMT)

Farmers in the southern part of Tambov Oblast are retaining moisture and are top-dressing the area sown to perennial grasses. Winter grain crops are being fertilized. Seeds of early grain crops and annual grasses are now being sown. (0204 GMT)

Nearly all agricultural land in Rostov Oblast is now being worked by contract labor teams, which has led to a significant improvement in quality. In the northern part of the oblast, the sowing of early eared crops is coming to an end. In the southern area, the sowing of corn, sunflower, and mangel-wurzel has begun. (1100 GMT)

The second stage of fieldwork has been begun earlier than usual by land husbandry farmers in western rayons of Kalmyk ASSR. They have begun the mass sowing of sunflower, corn, and Sudan grass. Over 100,000 hectares of plowed land in the kray on the steps has been allotted to them. (2004 GMT)

20 April

(Yevgeniy Antonovich Shchetinskiy,) deputy chief of the RSFSR Ministry of the Forestry Industry's Main Administration for Guarding and Protecting the Forest, warns of the dangers and damage caused by farmers burning stubble, particularly in the Far East and Eastern Siberia. Although some people still believe that this is a useful procedure that is beneficial to the soil, it is erroneous and counterproductive. Moreover, the fire may spread to the forests, causing even more damage than in the fields. Stubble burning must stop. It is, in fact, forbidden by a 1977 government decision. (1100 GMT)

21 April

Sowing of early spring crops is coming to an end in Belgorod Oblast, in spite of capricious weather. Efforts are now being concentrated on the area's main cash crop, sugar beet, which has been planted on more than half the area allotted to it. (0200 GMT)

Feed crops are being harvested in southern Tajikistan. The warm winter speeded up their ripening. (0200 GMT)

Farmers in Saratov Oblast are engaged in mass harrowing of autumn fallow. (0204 GMT)

Selectionists of Kirghizia have completed treatment of winter beetroot seeds over 10 days. Machine operators have tilled soil, weeded, and applied mineral fertilizers on the total acreage of almost 10,000 hectares. (1100 GMT)

Sowing of early spring crops has been begun in Penza Oblast. A great deal of attention is being paid to cultivation of grain crops according to progressive technologies. (1100 GMT)

The second harvest of white cabbage has begun this year in Azerbaijan. It is now being dispatched to the country's industrial centers. An average of 300-350 quintals per hectare is being lifted. (1200 GMT)

Irrigated fields in the Danube area have been allocated for corn in a number of farms. Farmers have started planting. The soil has been analyzed and the optimum dosage of fertilizer and water has been worked out scientifically. (2304 GMT)

22 April

Farmers in Penza Oblast have started sowing early spring crops. Sowing is planned to take 5 days. The area using intensive technology will increase by 70,000 hectares, and occupy nearly one-quarter of the whole grain area, which is intended to yield at least 1 million metric tons of grain. (0200 GMT)

In Belorussia farmers have started planting potatoes. For the first time, half the area allocated to them, 200,000 hectares, will be cultivated by intensive technology. Most of the potatoes will be high-yield strains bred for the locality and which have good taste. (0204 GMT)

Stavropol farms have completed sugar beet sowing. It occupies almost 45,000 hectares of arable land. (1100 GMT)

Warm weather has finally set in in Mordovia, so field work is under way to retain moisture. Sowing of early grain crops has begun in the western rayons. (1100 GMT)

Bashkiriya farmers have started spring sowing: intensive cultivation methods will be used on almost 1 million hectares of grain crops, one-third of the sown area. (1100 GMT)

Harvesting of rape and perko has started in Kirgiz valley, yielding 150 quintals per hectare of highly nutritious feed. (1100 GMT)

Tree planting is under way in Altay and is keeping pace with the cutting. This spring 20,000 hectares is to be planted with saplings, more than was cut in the winter. (1100 GMT)

Early grain crops are now being sown in Tamboy Oblast. To date, grain crops have been sown on an area of 75,000 hectares. (2130 GMT)

NEW SOVIET CW PROPOSALS EXPECTED TO BOOST TALKS

["The USSR's New Initiatives on Chemical Weapons" -- PRAVDA headline]

[Text] Geneva, 22 Apr (TASS) -- The new Soviet proposals on banning chemical weapons, which were announced by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in Berlin at the 11th SED Congress, were proposed in Geneva today at the disarmament conference.

These proposals allow an elimination of the differences so far existing at the talks being held here and a resolute progress forward in working out a convention that would ensure full and universal destruction of chemical weapons by the end of the present century.

The Soviet Union, as was said in M. Gorbachev's statement on 15 January 1986, favors the speedy, total elimination of chemical weapons and the very industrial basis for their manufacture. Our country is prepared to provide an prompt declaration of the locations of enterprises for the production of chemical weapons and to cease their production, to start working out procedures for destroying the manufacturing basis and to begin, soon after the appropriate convention enters force, eliminating chemical weapon stocks. All of this would be carried out under strict supervision, including international verification on site.

The new Soviet proposals proceed from the statement of 15 January 1986. Their essence was set out by the Soviet representative at the disarmament conference, Viktor I. Israelyan.

They envisage that the destruction of chemical weapon stocks should be started by every state taking part in the convention not later than 6 months, and the destruction or dismantling of installations for their production not later than 1 year after the convention cames into force. Moreover, 30 days after that time the participants will have to declare the exact location of every installation for the production of chemical weapons, including components for so-called binary weapons. This applies to any such installations, irrespective of whether they are in state or private ownership.

The Soviet proposals allow an effective, timely cessation of chemical weapons production. Every participant state, immediately after the convention comes into force, will have to halt all activity at installations for chemical weapons production. For the period of 3 months after the convention comes into force those taking part will be obliged to take national measures to close down installations, such as banning occupation of the buildings, cutting off and dismantling all communications serving the installation, and so on.

The Soviet representative also set out specific considerations concerning the procedures for the destruction or dismantling of these objectives.

The new Soviet proposals give a special place to questions of monitoring. The Soviet Union proposes that the closure of every installation for chemical weapons production, including private enterprises, should be ensured by means of strict monitoring, including systematic international on-site verification. It is a question of verifying the correctness of declarations, of the application of seals by inspectors to a site that is being closed, and of periodicaly checking that these remain intact right up to the time that the destruction or dismantling of the site begins. For purposes of effectively monitoring the destruction and dismantling of installations for chemical weapons production, the Soviet Union proposes that there should be provisions for implementing systematic international on-site inspections and that a system for visits to a site by international inspectors should be worked out that would provide for them to be present at all important operations in the destruction or dismantling of the site.

Final international verification would be carried out when the process of eliminating or dismantling the whole site was completed in full.

The Soviet representative also stated that the convention must provide for measures for ensuring that it is observed and unswervingly implemented by every participating state, irrespective of whether one is dealing with state or private enterprises or transnational corporations; primarily ensuring that the use of the commercial chemical industry for the development and production of chemical weapons is not permitted.

V. Israelyan sharply criticized U.S. plans for the production of binary chemical weapons and for the deployment of these in Western European countries. Implementation of these plans, he noted, threatens to transform the thickly populated countries of Western Europe into a potential theater of destructive chemical warfare, primary victim of which would be the civil population. As in the case of the Pershing-2 and long-range cruise missiles, the United States is clearly playing a dishonorable game, counting on deflecting a retaliatory strike on its own territory and exposing the territories and population of its allies to that strike. The siting in Western Europe of binary chemical weapons would reflect, in a most negative way, on the talks taking place at the disarmament conference on a comprehensive ban on chemical weapons. The Soviet Union resolutely condemns plans for the production and deployment of binary chemical weapons and considers that the U.S. government must realize the responsibility for the consequences of such a step.

On the same day the Soviet delegation in Geneva gave a press conference devoted to the new Soviet steps at the talks on banning chemical weapons.

The Soviet proposals immediately gave rise to lively interest among the delegations at the disarmament conference. In conference circles it is considered that they will give a powerful impulse to the talks that have been dragged out excessively because of the unconstructive position of the United States and several of its allies. The delegates attach particular importance to the bold, constructive Soviet approach to the problem of monitoring. Many stress that it completely refutes assertions that the USSR is supposedly not interested in working out effective means for verifying fulfillment of the convention on banning chemical weapons. In this connection it is noted here that earlier the USSR favored establishing systematic international control over the limited production of the most dangerous chemicals, the so-called hypertoxic lethal chemicals, which will be permitted under the future convention. Those taking part in the talks assess the new Soviet proposals as graphic confirmation that the words of the Soviet Union do not differ from its practical deeds. It is now up to those who are holding back progress at the talks under various pretexts -- primarily the United States -- to make their reply.

New Proposals Outlined

[Text] Geneva, April 22 (AFP) -- The Soviet Union put forward Tuesday at the Geneva disarmament conference a step-by-step plan for banning chemical weapons. Soviet delegate Viktor Israelyan told the conference that immediately after a convention on chemical weapons came into force, "signatory states will have to suspend all activity in chemical weapons-producing installations."

Thirty days after the convention came into force, he said, the same countries "must indicate the precise location" of all such installations, state or privately-owned, and this would include component-producing sites. Within three months, signatory states "will be obliged to take national measures" for closing the installations, Mr. Israelyan said.

The destruction of chemical-weapon stocks would begin within six months, at the latest, after the convention came into force. One year, at the latest, after the same date the destruction or dismantling of the installations themselves would begin.

Concerning supervision, Mr. Israelyan came in favor of "systematic on-the-spot international checking." Western observers noted that Moscow had previously accepted this principle only for the destruction of weapons stocks.

But Mr. Israelyan rejected once again the "open invitation" principle launched by the United States in 1984, under which all convention signatories might verify at any time or place whether a country was abiding by the convention.

'Noble Example' Set

LD232349 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1645 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Boris Adrianov commentary from the "International Diary" program presented by Igor Surguchev]

[Text] By putting forward new proposals at the Geneva disarmament conference on the banning of chemical weapons, the USSR has once again strikingly confirmed that its words match its actions. Moreover, these latest proposals by our country are dictated by a sober appraisal of the existing problem: The USSR sees it as an entirely realistic task to abolish chemical weapons of mass destruction in the present century. Yet that task is not only realistic, it is also exceedingly urgent. If it is to be solved, measures must be taken without delay. This is necessary because of the ever-increasing confirmation that the United States is preparing for chemical war; that war is seen -- in the strategic centers of the Pentagon -- as a global war, one that threatens the whole of mankind.

The scale of this preparation is shown by the fact that the United States already has in its arsenals 150,000 metric tons of poisonous substances for combat use. They are stored in 3 million units of ammunition of various types. In the opinion of U.S. Senator David Dryor, the existing chemical weapons are enough to destroy the whole population of our planet fifty times over. Meanwhile, the United States has adopted a large-scale 5-year program to renew its chemical potential. This is due to be completed by the end of next year when the Pentagon's chemical arsenal will be topped off with another 2 million bombs, shells, and mines stuffed with military poisons. All this serves to emphasize how acute the task of totally abolishing chemical weapons, which are barbarous devices for the mass destruction of human beings, has become.

That is the purpose of the talks on chemical weapons that are being held in the framework of the Geneva disarmament conference. However, the talks have gone on for an impermissibly long time. This has happened because of the unconstructive position adopted by the United States and some of its allies. They are trying to assert that the USSR is not interested in working out effective means of controlling the observance of the convention banning chemical weapons. The new Soviet initiatives convincingly demonstrate that such arguments -- if they can be called such -- are completely unfounded. Our country's proposals confirm that the USSR stands for the earliest possible total abolition, both of chemical weapons themselves and of the industrial base for manufacturing them. The essence of these proposals flows from the statement by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January this year.

The new Soviet initiatives envisage precise dates for the destruction of chemical weapon stockpiles and for the destruction and dismantling of the sites where they are produced. It is particularly emphasized that this applies to any such facilities, regardless of whether they be state-owned or privately owned.

A very important place in our country's new proposals is given to questions of control -- the strictest control, including systematic international on-site checking. Even such details are envisaged as the sealing of the facilities subject to closure and periodic inspection of their intactness up to the time when destruction or dismantling of the facilities begins.

In the matter of banning chemical weapons, as in other questions of disarmament, all participants in the talks must be willing to look at matters afresh. That is being demonstrated in full measure by the USSR, by its bold and constructive approach to the problem of control, in its new proposals on banning chemical weapons. Will the Western participants in the Geneva disarmament conference follow this noble example?

Need for CW Ban Reiterated

[Text] Moscow April 23 TASS -- TASS news analyst Leonid Ponomarev writes:

The Soviet Union declares for banning chemical weapons and for complete elimination of such weapons everywhere. This is one of the main directions of the Soviet foreign policy. The Soviet Union's new proposals for banning chemical weapons, submitted to the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva, fully reflects this invariable Soviet course and open real opportunities for drawing up an international convention that would ensure the elimination of such weapons everywhere by the end of this century. Chemical weapons, first of all, are essentially weapons of mass destruction of civilian population. They are offensive, not defensive weapons, and are meant exclusively for the destruction of humans, with material values remaining intact.

The strike power of up-to-date chemical warfare agents, particularly binary agents (filled with nerve gas) is described by the following characteristics: While in 1914 it took approximately 1,000 mg of mustard gas to kill a human, the United States possessed as early as the sixties highly toxic chemical agents whose killing power was 10,000 times greater. And the toxin of botulism evolved in the USA is 1,000 times stronger thatn highly toxic agents.

Developing such weapons, the United States proceeds from the premise that it will be used not on the United States' territory but in countries that are Washington's allies, above all in Western Europe. This is safer and more convenient for Washington since U.S. medium-range missiles have also been deployed there. Large stockpiles of U.S. chemical weapons are kept on the FRG's territory, specifically. Binary ammunition is also planned to be deployed there. It should be noted the the "Autumn Forge-85" exercises were held on the FRG territory last September. During those exercises U.S. and West German units were drilled in operations with the use of chemical weapons, including binary weapons.

The Pentagon's representatives declared more that once that the United States must view chemical warfare as part of any conflict. This means that U.S. forces might use chemical weapons any time, proceeding from Washington's strategic and tactical considerations. Drawing up plans for combat use of chemical weapons in Europe, U.S. military experts have already determined the targets, the ways of dealing strikes, chemical ammunition supply rates, and so on and so forth. Thus, the United States starts on another direction of the arms race, which is a continuation of the United States overall militaristic course.

The Soviet Union is in favour of an early and complete elimination of chemical weapons and of the industrial base for their production. The Soviet Union's new proposals also envisage a balanced and wide system of control, including international on-site inspections. The threat of mankind's poisoning with chemical weapons must be averted forever.

NUCLEAR TESTS PROVIDE 'GRAPHIC EVIDENCE' OF U.S. AIMS

[Text] Moscow April 23 TASS -- "Nuclear tests, conducted one after another, are a graphic evidence of the U.S. Administration's striving to continue the course towards confrontation, and deal a blow on the hopes of those Americans who expected a renunciation of the nuclear arms build-up policy and a responsible approach to the destiny of mankind", Andrey Tolkunov, PRAVDA's New York correspondent, writes in the newspaper. "Many of those people now become active opponents of the policy of the White House and are stating their resolute opposition to the Washington-chosen course."

The correspondent points out that the nuclear arms race continues to gather momentum in the United States. For example there is feverish excitement at the military plant of the Lockheed arms company in the Californian city of Santa Clara. The White House and the Congress have allocated next appropriations for the development of "Trident-2 D-5" supermissiles there. The supermissile will take the place of the "outdated" Trident-2 C-4 missile. The yield of 24 supermissiles on board a submarine is such that it could cause destruction equivalent to ravages brought on by wars in the entire history of mankind.

Mr Norris, Mr Cobrain, and Mr Arkin, experts in the field of nuclear strategy, report in their study that appropriations for the conduct of nuclear explosions have sharply increased of late. At least 1,800 warheads a year will come off the assembly lines of munitions factories in the coming years. "Pursuing the course towards the development of space strike systems, Washington is moving on to tests of nuclear-pumped X-ray lasers at the Nevada testing range", the correspondent points out. "Thus how the Nevada testing range is being drawn into the 'Star Wars' programme which leads to an uncontrolled arms race. The entire international community, including millions of sober-minded Americans, is now demanding that this vicious circle be broken", the correspondent emphasizes.

PENTAGON COMPLETES FIRST TEST OF TOMAHAWK MISSILE

[Text] Washington, 23 Apr (TASS) -- According to a representative of the U.S. military department, the Pentagon has carried out its first test of a sea-based Tomahawk cruise missile against a land-based target. A cruise missile with a non-nuclear warhead was launched on 1 April from a submerged submarine in the Pacific Ocean at a target 474 miles away. The target was an aircraft on the island of San Clemente off the southern coast of the State of California. The missile approached the target at a speed of around 550 mph and exploded as it was flying over the target aircraft at a height of around 30 meters. According to a Pentagon representative, "the target was destroyed."

The launch of the Tomahawk is just one of a whole series of tests on advanced armaments that have been carried out recently in the United States. As a Pentagon representative reported, during joint U.S. Air Force and Navy exercises on Sunday off the shores of Puerto Rica, Harpoon milliles, which are designed to hit ships, were tested. The simultaneous launch of six missiles of this class was carried out.

MIKHAYLOV, GRINEVSKIY DISCUSS ARMS TALKS

[Political Observer V.A. Matveyev "conversation" with V.V. Mikhaylov, leader of the Soviet delegation at the Vienna talks on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe, and O.A. Grinevskiy, leader of the Soviet delegation at the Stockholm Conference on Confidence-Building Measures and Security and Disarmament in Europe under the rubric "IZVESTIYA's Round Table": "Europe's Mission" -- date and place not given; first two paragraphs are IZVESTIYA introduction]

[Text] A special mission may be assigned to Europe in implementing a drastic change in favor of a policy of peace. In accordance with the new proposals put forward by our country in the statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee on 15 January this year, real measures are envisaged in the disarmament field on our continent in the very near future.

This question is being discussed at the Vienna talks. The Stockholm conference is also an important forum.

Question: What impact have the new Soviet initiatives had on the state of affairs at the conference in Stockholm and the talks in Vienna?

O. Grinevskiy: These initiatives pave the way at the Stockholm conference to the elaboration of accords that take into account the legitimate interests of all sides and the interests of security in Europe.

During last fall's visit to France by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, the Soviet side expressed important views promoting the fundamental normalization of the situation on the continent. They include the idea of mutual exchange of annual plans for military activity subject to notification. This step was greeted positively at the conference. It has initiated not only discussion but also agreement on this important measure, which may become a serious safety device on the path of the emergence of a military conflict in Europe.

The Soviet proposals of 15 January also lead to the solution of one of the main unresolved problems at the conference. These proposals suggest resolving the problem of notification of large-scale military exercises in parts, that is, agreeing right now on providing notification of large-scale ground forces and air force exercises and carrying over the question of naval activity to the next stage of the conference.

This proposal is the focus of the talks. Of course, the reaction to it cannot be called homogenous. For instance, the United States and some NATO countries have had quite a few good words to say about this initiative. But they hedge around its implementation with a fence of formal stipulations and reservations.

In general, there is a keen political struggle under way at the conference and its outcome is still far from clear. So far, all that has been determined is the range of questions delineating the outline of a possible accord in Stockholm. We have also succeeded in agreeing on the first formulations concerning the nonuse of force, the notification of large-scale military exercises, the exchange of annual plans for military activity subject to notification, the invitation of observers, and others.

V. Mikhaylov: As for the Vienna talks, the situation there remains complex. To this day it is impossible to say whether the United States and its closest NATO allies want to reach a serious agreement in Vienna.

Last year, with a view to overcoming the protracted deadlock and in the search for at least a partial, albeit modest, accord, the USSR, together with the other Warsaw Pact countries taking part in the talks, suggested focusing efforts on the elaboration of an agreement on an initial reduction of ground forces and armaments in central Europe by the Soviet Union and the United States with an undertaking on the subsequent non-increase of the levels of NATO and Warsaw Pact armed forces and armaments in this region.

Such an accord and its implementation would provide useful experience for further talks. Our side specifically suggested a reduction in Soviet and U.S. troops, together with their armaments, of 20,000 and 13,000 men respectively with the relevant mutual observation and subsequently, not increasing for 2 years or, as they say, freezing the sides' armed forces and armaments on a collective and national basis.

Some 10 months later the Western representatives cam out with ideas in response. The Western side's reaction is evidence that, while formally agreeing with the general idea and scheme for initial reductions put forward by the socialist countries, the United States and its allies are essentially trying to push through their old, unacceptable aim. If anything in it has changed it is only in the direction of toughening their stance, not the reverse.

Question: How can you describe "the narrowest bottleneck" at the forums in Stockholm and Vienna, preventing a successful conclusion?

O. Grinevskiy: For Stockholm, it is above all the lack of counterproposals toward reaching an accord on the part of the United States and its closest allies. They have no new proposals and they are avoiding the search, which the socialist countries are suggesting, for solutions to unresolved problems. One journalist in Stockholm acidly called this position "a monument of NATO's lack of initiative." As a result, matters at the conference are advancing intolerably slowly.

For instance, take the problem of limiting the dimensions of military exercises. This is an important avenue for building confidence because modern military exercises sometimes acquire such scope that it is hard to distinguish them from the deployment of troops for the initiation of hostilities. The socialist, neutral, and nonaligned countries suggest limiting military exercises to a level that would eliminate these legitimate fears of the European states. But the NATO countries are opposed to this.

V. Mikhaylov: I must say that in Vienna the Western representatives are continuing to arbitrarily try to manipulate the question of verification [kontrol] measures, divorcing these measures from the essence of the proposed agreement and deliberately taking them to unrealistic limits intentionally unacceptable to the other side.

Question: How is this manipulation manifested?

V. Mikhaylov: This flaw in the West's position is manifested, first, in the fact that in connection with the steps to freeze armed forces levels, it is proposed, for instance, to exchange information on the structure of troops, right up to indicating each barracks where the troops are stationed! In addition, attempts are being made to unilaterally achieve a totally unjustified extension of inspection and verification [proverka i kontrol] measures on various pretexts beyond the long since agreed region of reduction, including to the Western regions of the USSR, for instance from Petrozavodsk to Odessa.

At the same time, the West is narrowing to the extreme the actual volume of measures for a real lowering of the level of military antagonism. Thus, the figures for initial reductions have been reduced to 11,500 men for the USSR and 5,000 for the United States. If we suggest reducing troops with their armaments and military equipment, the West categorically refuses.

Nor does it want the level or armaments to be frozen together with the numbers of personnel.

Question: Oleg Alekseyevich, how do matters stand with regard to the conference's examination of the question of the nonuse of force?

O. Grinevskiy: As is well known, this question was put on the agenda of the Stockholm forum at the initiative of the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. The United States and its closest NATO allies spent a long time opposing its discussion, but were eventually obliged to embark not only on an examination but also on the drafting of a text of the accord. But here, too, we can discern among them a line toward procrastination and avoiding making this principle specific and effective.

Question: General Rogers and the other leading NATO figures claim that the discrepancy in military forces to NATO's disadvantage remains and is even being increased between the NATO and Warsaw Pact countries. The conclusion is that NATO needs new armaments. To what degree does this complicate the Vienna talks and the work of the Stockholm conference?

V. Mikhaylov: These claims cannot be called honest. They are being made in the West to justify militarist programs. It is well known that the deployment of U.S. nuclear missile weapons is continuing in Western Europe. At the same time, the NATC strategy is placing increasing emphasis on these weapons, if you have in mind conventional weapons that would act against regions deep inside the Warsaw Pact countries and on autopilot. There is no need to prove how such preparations contradict what is being discussed at the talks in Vienna.

O. Grinevskiy: You form the impression that the drafting of accords, which has begun in Stockholm, has not been to the taste of some people in the United States and they have begun to put on the brakes. The reasonable question arises: Are the United States and its allies ready at all for serious talks and is the U.S. Administration not transferring the gereral toughening of its line in international affairs to Stockholm?

The conference has now entered a decisive stage of its work -- the completion stage. We have only just enough time, as they say -- it will complete its work 19 September. The Soviet initiatives open up practical opportunities for the successful completion of the conference. But good will and the desire for cooperation on the part of all the conference's participants are needed.

Question: Valerian Vladimirovich, you have been taking part in the Vienna talks for a long time. How, on the basis of your experience, would you define the talks' prospects? After all, surely it is scarcely possible to endlessly beat the air as the West is doing?

V. Mikhaylov: The Soviet side has indicated in the most authoritative manner that the talks should not be a game, should not serve as a screen for accelerating the arms race. That would be misleading the public and its peaceful aspirations and hopes. Proceeding from that premise, the delegations of the USSR and the other socialist countries at the Vienna talks are not only seeking to ensure that the NATO countries examine our constructive proposals but are also revealing, form principled positions, everything that is impeding the talks' progress.

On 20 February this year the socialist countries displayed a new initiative. They submitted a detailed draft initial agreement. The agreement develops and gives detail to previous proposals from the socialist countries, including those on verification [kontrol].

Alongside national technical means of verification it also provides for measures like the creation of permanent points for observing the entry of military formations and units into the region of reductions, notifications of troop movements, possible on-site inspection following a justified request, and other measures. It is important that the verification measures should comply sensibly with the nature and content of the actions that are being carried out to reduce military forces.

The achievement of even a limited agreement would be of considerable political and psychological importance. Persistent new efforts must therefore be made to strengthen peace in Europe and to develop good-neighborliness.

WEINBERGER CONFIRMS PLANS TO CONTINUE ARMS TESTING

LD222228 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1407 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] The Reagan administration continues to steer a course of whipping up the arms race and boosting military spending. This has been borne out again by U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's statement before the House Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.

The administration, he said, continues to be filled with firm determination to secure the constant strengthening U.S. possibilities in the field of securing national security. To justify the militarist course being put into effect by the current Washington administration, the defense minister could not find anything better than to resort once again to references to the mythical Soviet military threat.

Weinberger stressed that the administration intends first and foremost to continue the program for modernizing and improving the U.S. strategic forces. Its aim, as is well known, is to achieve the creation of the potential for inflicting a first nuclear strike on the territory of the USSR. Justifying Washington's aspiration to global military superiority, the Pentagon boss resorted to affirmations that the modernization of the U.S. nuclear arsenals would create a propitious atmosphere for the talks on reducing armaments with the Soviet Union. The defense minister also let it be understood that Washington, despite the wide-scale protests by the American and international public, would continue testing of nuclear weapons.

BOVIN ADVOCATES 'NEW THINKING' IN NUCLEAR AGE

[Political Observer A. Bovin article: "An Imperative of the Nuclear Age"]

[Text] The first nuclear device was exploded by the Americans at the Alamogordo (New Mexico) testing ground at 0530 hours on 16 July 1945. "The immediate impression of the explosion," General Farell, who was present, recalled, "can be described in words like unprecedented, majestic, wonderful, amazing, and terrifying.... The beauty of that scene can be described only by great poets who, alas, have not seen anything like it." I doubt whether poets could have shared the general's enthusiasm; as for politicians, yes, they could and did. W. Churchill called the atom bomb "the second coming of Christ." Less than a month later -- on 6 and 9 August -- Hiroshima and Nagasaki were destroyed on orders from U.S. President H. Truman. Mankind entered the nuclear age.

Initially it was only single individuals and primarily scientists -- the scientists who were involved with the bomb -- who appreciated the true significance of what had occurred.

Politicians and generals, as always, were preparing for a war like those in the past. From their point of view, atomic weapons changed tactics and changed strategy but did not affect the philosophy of war, the classical perception of war as a completely rational means to attain political ends.

Nevertheless, as the scale of the catastrophe that engulfed the two Japanese cities became known, as the data provided by more and more tests of atomic and subsequently, thermonuclear weapons was accumulated, it became increasingly clear that the creation [sozdaniye] and stockpiling of nuclear weapons marked mankind's transition to a fundamentally new historical epoch -- an epoch when people were given the technical capacity to exterminate and destroy all of mankind.

This devalued and deprived of all sense many of the conventional political and military-strategic stereotypes. This demanded substantially and qualitatively new approaches to all the problems of war and peace. "What is needed is a new way of human thinking so that mankind may survive and develop further," A. Einstein, the greatest physicist of the 20th century, said. "The atom bomb has radically changed the world today; we know this, people are in a new situation and their thinking must correspond with it." This is the political imperative of the nuclear age.

A new way of thinking and a new approach to the solution of what would appear to be traditional and conventional tasks -- this is the necessary and the only sensible reaction to the situation in which mankind has found itself. All people are mortal -- this is obvious. But there has been an equally obvious and indisputable acceptance of the thesis about the immortality of mankind. Wars have gone on for thousands of years. People have perished in millions and even billions. States have disintegrated. Civilizations have collapsed. There has always been, however, a hope of different times and new generations to come.... To put it briefly, despite all the mistakes and crimes, despite the mountains of bodies and rivers of blood traversed by history, the future was guaranteed. Herein lies the radical change in the world: Now we have no guaranteed future. Now there could be no future at all. Now the mistake or crime that would launch a thermonuclear catastrophe will be the last mistake, the last crime.

According to scientific analytical data, the deadly effect of a full-scale exchange of nuclear strikes coupled with the pernicious consequences of climatic and ecological changes (the "nuclear winter") would destroy intelligent life on earth. Or at least civilized forms of such life. Someone may object: Strictly speaking, all these are just hypotheses. Yes, strictly speaking, this is true. But, first, these are highly feasible hypotheses. And second, considering the price of a mistake, in this case it would be permissible to accept the worst alternative as the truth. This will make it possible to evaluate anew many conventional impressions and to choose accordingly the correct line of political behavior.

War is the continuation of politics, but by other, violent means. This formula of Clausewitz' was considered to be one of the few axioms of political science. And now? If it is launched and if it is fought, a war -- be it a conventional war or a nuclear missile war -- has been, is, and will be (regardless of consequences) a continuation of politics. Clausewitz is as axiomatic as ever. But the formula in question is not just a statement of fact. It defines the parameters of choice: In order to attain some political end it is possible, depending on circumstances, to either operate by peaceful means or use military force. Both alternatives are absolutely equal in principle. Everything depends on specific circumstances. But this is where Clausewitz is out of date. There is not, nor can there be, any political end for whose sake the future of mankind may be risked. A nuclear missile war cannot be perceived as a sensible choice or a rational means for the continuation of politics.

People have fought and do fight because, from the viewpoint of those who start a war and of those who resist aggression, some things are more important than peace.

For some these are power and wealth, for others -- independence and freedom. Independence was more important than peace both for the Americans in the late 18th century and for the Vietnamese in the mid-20th century. And they fought. They hoped to achieve victory, and they did achieve it. What if it is impossible to win a war? What if there will be victors but only vanquished? What if the one who is the first to start is the second to perish? It is evident that nothing is more important than preventing such a war. Nor is there anything more important than peace is the alternative to peace is a nuclear missile war. This is why the principled rejection of such a war is indeed the only sensible stance, the only morally and politically justified stance.

The history of wars has made it acceptable to think that the level of security of a given state is directly proportional to the quantity and quality of the weapons at its disposal. Now, under conditions of military-strategic parity and of the obvious impossibility to go beyond its parameters or breach it, it is virtually impossible to even think of unilateral security, of security guaranteed by some kind of military-technical "miracle" (like SDI, for example). The keys to the USSR's security are kept not only in Moscow but also in Washington. The converse is equally true: U.S. security is guaranteed not only by what is done in Washington but also by what is done in Moscow.

There can be only one conclusion: Anyone trying to build up his own security at the cost of infringing on the "opponent's" security will ultimately aggravate his own military-strategic situation. Here is a textbook example. When (in the early seventies) the Pentagon was about to MIRV its ballistic missiles, many people, including people in the United States, warned: This should not be done, it would be better to reach agreement with the Soviet Union and mutually abandon the next round of "modernization." But the U.S. strategists did not heed the voice of reason. They were too eager to rush ahead and feel more secure at the cost of an enhanced threat. And what happened? In order to maintain parity, the Soviet Union was forced to deploy similar systems. It was not security that increased, it was U.S. vulnerability that increased.

Real security in our age cannot result from any technical solutions, let alone from unilateral solutions. Real security is offered by political accords aimed at reducing and later liquidating existing nuclear missile potentials. Precisely this is the meaning of M.S. Gorbachev's well-known proposals published on 15 January. Unfortunately, the Americans have hitherto failed to surmount the intellectual barrier separating our age from the prenuclear one. They continue to think in the classical terms of strong-arm politics, identifying their security with their power. This is why when they are asked to sacrifice power for the sake of security their answer is "No!"

Sometimes you can hear the following view: What is there to actually worry about? Let plowshare be plowshares, and swords -- swords. Nuclear optimists claim that the real of mutual assured destruction and the equilibrium of fear -- fear of inevitable retribution -- create a sufficiently lasting and sufficiently durable framework for peaceful mutual relations.

Okay, this is valid for the time being. Peace is, indeed, for the time being maintained by the equilibrium of fear. But the whole point is that this equilibrium is burdened by internal instability, it is internally contradictory and paradoxical. Quite. If I know (if I believe) that the use of nuclear weapons by me would lead to my own destruction (by a retaliatory counterstrike), how can I deter the "opponent" by the threat of using nuclear weapons? Conversely, can the "opponent" consider my nuclear threat credible if it is presupposed that my strike will result in my inevitable destruction? Theory offers no convincing answers to these questions.

In practical terms, another aspect is much more important. The objective correlation of forces and actual intentions are not as significant as one side's impressions of the other side's forces and intentions.

And since the equilibrium of fear inevitably generates an equilibrium of mistrust, each side proceeds on the basis of the worst possible alternative for the "opponent's" behavior.

I have had numerous opportunities to debate these issues with Americans. They usually take great offense on hearing that we perceive their actions (the "star wars" program coupled with the "modernization" of strategic offensive weapons) as preparations for a first disarming strike. They try to prove, almost with tears in their eyes, that the United States has nothing at all like this in mind. One has to explain. We cannot guess what is inside the heads of Pentagon strategists. We can only conclude that their actions objectively create a first-strike potential. This potential cannot be ignored.

The arms race, even if equilibrium is maintained, leads to increased potential of mutual mistrust and therefore, to destabilization of the equilibrium itself.

There is only one way out. To halt the arms race and to embark on real disarmament. It has to be repeated: The United States is not prepared to do this. It decisively rejects even the minimum program proposed by the Soviet Union -- to ban nuclear weapon tests and thus hinder and slow down the arms race.

U.S. leaders admit in words that a nuclear missile war cannot be won. But an analysis of U.S. military policy convincingly shows that the Pentagon has not given up hope of rehabilitating Clausewitz and elaborating the "strategy of victory." U.S. researcher R. Osgood writes that the purpose of more accurate strategic weapons, of their more flexible targeting, and of more reliable command-control-communications systems is to ensure "technical potential for transforming the exchange of strategic nuclear strikes into a rational instrument of politics rather than an act of national suicide." The quest for victory is also the objective pursued by the various concepts of "graduated" exchange of nuclear strikes. Answering the organizers of such research, M.S. Gorbachev said: "Those who resort to arguments about 'limited,' short, or 'protracted' nuclear wars are evidently still in the grips of the obsolete stereotypes of an age when war was indeed a major calamity, but did not threaten, as it does now, the destruction of mankind. The nuclear age inevitably dictates a new political thinking."

Grim reality cannot be ignored. Nuclear war is possible while nuclear weapons exist. Such a war is not, however, inevitable. The task of politics, the paramount task facing mankind now, is to reduce and eliminate the possibility of a nuclear war. New thinking is a necessary prerequisite for the successful solution of this task. Accurately formulating the pernicious and mortally dangerous prospects of the arms race, it encourages energetic and purposeful antiwar activity. It prompts politicians to consider mutual interests, mutual concessions, and sensible compromises without which it is impossible to bring stances closer together. The new thinking, which was spoken of at the 27th CPSU Congress, is called upon to point out the path to a world without nuclear weapons. All other paths lead to catastrophe.

TASS REPORTS GORBACHEV GREETINGS TO WPC SESSION

["Verified version" of greetings message by CPSU Central Committee General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev to the World Peace Council]

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee has sent a message of greetings to the participants in the session of the World Peace Council: [This and following variations are reported by Moscow TASS in English at 0655 GMT on 24 April in a similar report. Here TASS adds: "Follows the full text of the message of greetings from Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee to the participants in the session of the World Peace Council:"]

I convey heartfelt greetings to the participants in the session of the World Peace Council, to the representatives of the millions of men and women who have devoted themselves to serving the loftiest and greatest aims of today -- the preservation of peace and life on earth.

We are living in a very difficult time, in a vulnerable world. For the first time ever the problem of survival now looms before all people in its entire grim simplicity. So today it is already not enough to wish peace, not enough to condemn the buildup of military potentials, not enough even just to see from where the threat to mankind comes. Today one must act -- persistently and purposefully. Everybody must act -- both governments and public forces.

The mass movement for peace possesses big and not yet fully used possibilities for establishing a new, anti-war, anti-nuclear mentality in world politics proceeding not from the "enemy image", that stimulates confrontation, but from the necessity of concerted actions for the sake of creating an all-embracing system of international security. The work conducted by the World Peace Council along with a multitude of other movements and organisations helps this, facilitates the strengthening of the powerful potential of peace, reason and self-preservation that has formed in recent years. While overcoming obstacles, disunity and prejudices within its own ranks the mass movement for peace will enhance this potential and have an increasing impact on international politics. [TASS 0655 GMT version reads: "While overcoming obstacles, disunity and prejudices within its own ranks this potential is steadily changing the alignment of forces in the international arena. The Soviet Union intends further to enhance in every way its constant growth and influence."]

The situation remains extremely serious. The current year, declared by the United Nations Organisation the International Year of Peace, cautions against complacency. The more belligerent circles, representing the egoistic interests of imperialism's military-industrial complex, have undermined the unique possibility to set about reducing nuclear arms upon stopping nuclear explosions. By committing the arms aggression against the Libyan people, they sharply heightened international tension. Preparation is under way to turn outer space into a source of unprecedented danger to the existence of civilization. People's rights and freedoms, and first of all their right to life, are being cynically trampled upon. [TASS 0655 GMT version reads: "The more belligerent circles, representing the egoistic interests of imperialist's military-industrial complex, have undermined the unique possibility to stop all nuclear explosions, committed armed aggression against the Libyan people and are creating hotbeds of tension. They are whipping up the arms race by spreading it to outer space. They cynically disregard the social rights and freedoms of people, first of all their right to life."]

The Soviet Union is well aware of its responsibility for the destiny of mankind. [TASS 0655 GMT version reads: "As a nuclear power the Soviet Union is well aware of its responsibility for the destiny of mankind."] We have set forth a programme of liquidating nuclear arms before the end of the century; we are ready at any moment to enter into negotiations on cessation of all tests of nuclear weapons; [TASS 0655 GMT version reads: "stated our readiness to sign at any moment a treaty banning all nuclear arms tests;"] came out with concrete initiatives directed at the speediest prohibition and destruction of chemical weapons; proposed to liquidate nuclear arms and substantially reduce conventional arms in Europe -- from the Atlantic to the Urals. We have undertaken a number of substantive unilateral steps of good will.

The Soviet foreign policy programme has absorbed quite a number of ideas and initiatives of the peaceloving public. Their implementation in practice depends in many ways on the public movements, trends and organisations themselves, on the ability of people of different ideological views to conduct a dialogue and reach mutual understanding on key issues of war and peace, and on their cooperation and concrete joint actions. [TASS 0655 GMT version reads: "Their implementation in practice now depends in many ways on the public movements, trends and organisations themselves, on ordinary people, on their readiness and ability to conduct a dialogue, to cooperate with one another, to resort to action."] I am convinced that the World Peace Council will further make its weighty contribution to this process.

Dear friends, I wish you successful and fruitful work". [single quotation mark as received] [TASS 0655 GMT version ends:

CPSU GENERAL SECRETARY'S REPLY TO FRG STUDENT ON FUTURE

LD231723 Moscow TASS in English 1707 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Bonn April 23 TASS -- Kerstin Vetter, tenth-form pupil, wrote a letter to the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev on behalf of a group of pupils from a school in the town of Landau (Rhineland-Pfalz). In her letter she asked him to share his thoughts and ideas about the roads of development of the world today and its future. Today the West German school children visited the Soviet Embassy in Bonn where they were given a reply from the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. It says:

"Dear Kerstin,

I have received your letter in which on behalf of your classmates you raise a very big question: What dreams and concerns do I link with the future -- in my country and in terms of general human relations.

The future does not appear to me to be a silent and dark figure grimly and fatally looming up. The future is knocking at the door of our daily life and its shoots are sprouting before our very eyes. It is being created today by human hands and the result which is called the future depends on the combination of our actions and efforts.

Today one may not, cannot agree to the presence of nuclear weapons on this planet. The truth, a very unpleasant truth, is that nuclear weapons, should it be put to use, can really rob all mankind of its future.

This is why my aspirations just as the aspirations of my colleagues in the country's leadership and the aspirations of all Soviet people are directed at achieving a nuclear-free world and, ultimately, a world without wars and without any weapons at all. This is not a utopia.

It is a utopia to hope to preserve the humanity while continuing the arms race which is spiralling and now threatens to spill into outer space. There exist the statistics showing the scopes of this race. But no statistics can reflect the ever growing "arsenal" of reason and good will, the arsenal of peace replenished by the aspirations of millions. We are convinced that it is capable of eliminating military arsenals that threaten humanity.

We in the Soviet Union are confident about tomorrow. We not simply predict our future but plan it, carefully calculating our material and intellectual resources, the potential inherent in our system. We take vigorous efforts that will enable us to reach to goals set. These goals were determined up to the year 1990 and throughout to the year 2000 by the 27th Congress of the Communist Party.

The point is qualitatively to improve and raise to an entirely new level the material, social, cultural and intellectual life of the Soviet man.

We are aware that it is impossible to build a better world for ourselves in accordance with our ideals while denying this to others. To exist, the states and peoples should learn to coexist. It is necessary to stamp out in the world community the vestiges of the past, such as hostility, hatred, and lack of understanding and rejection of the just rights and demands of any people, whether big or small. This goal can be achieved if we fight for it. May your motto be Goethe's words:

Only he deserves freedom and life who has to conquer them every day.

I was pleased, dear Kerstin, to receive your letter in Russian. Knowledge of each other's language is a means of mutual understanding and rapprochement between people in different countries.

I do not object to my reply being included in the book of polls about the future which you, judging by your letter, are compiling in your class.

With respects,

M. Gorbachev"

The school children from Landau warmly thanked for the reply. [as received] They said they had sent similar letters to President Ronald Reagan of the United States, to other politicians and also to coevals in many countries of the world. True, Reagan has not yet replied. At present they are looking for a publishing house that would agree to publish their book -- A poll about the future.

WESTERN POWERS HINDER ADOPTION OF UN RESOLUTION

[Kim Gerasimov report from the "International Diary" program presented by Igor Chirokov]

[Text] We have reported, comrades, that voting took place in the UN Security Council on a draft resolution condemning the armed attack by the United States on Libya.

My colleague, Kim Gerasimov, will report on this in more detail.

A draft resolution, which was proposed by a group of nonaligned states, has been put to a vote. Nine countries on the Council supported it: The Soviet Union, China -- these are, I remind you, permament members of the Council -- Bulgaria, China, the Congo, the United Arab Emirates, Madagascar, Thailand, and Trinidad and Tobago. One country, Venezuela, abstained. Those voting against were the United States, Britain, France, Australia, and Denmark. As the first three of these, as permament members of the Council, have the power of veto, the draft resolution was not adopted. By using the veto the Western powers not only hindered the adoption of the document, which expresses sympathy with the victims of aggression, but they also demonstrated their total contempt -- for the umpteenth time, incidentally -- for the opinion of the majority of mankind. It is precisely this majority that lives in those countries, former colonies and semicolonies, which constitutes the basis of the Nonaligned Movement. Contempt was shown for the opinion of those who were exploited by Western transnational corporations that shamelessly grew rich. The opinion of those who were robbed was disregarded by the system of imperialism which to a large extent solely depends on exploitation in order to survive.

The voting in the Security Council once again showed how deep the chasm between the United States and its NATO allies and the world of developing countries is. This is the first conclusion from the results of the voting.

The second conclusion concerns relations between the NATO countries themselves. Immediately after the attack by the U.S. air Force on Libyan cities, the majority of NATO countries, with the exception of Britain and Canada, hastened to disassociate themselves from this act, or even to condemn it. France and Spain refused, as you know comrades, to allow U.S. aircraft to fly across its airspace to bomb Libya. Many political figures in NATO countries condemned the U.S. actions.

In response, Washington used an old tactic, what is usually called arm-twisting. U.S. emissaries hastened to Europe; there began persuasion and, as one might suppose, open threats and, finally, the notorious Atlantic solidarity prevailed. All NATO countries that are members of the Security Council came out against the Nonaligned Movement. This is despite the fact that they support mutually profitable, trade, and economic relations with Libya and other Arab countries. The pressure by Washington, which wishes to teach an object lesson to developing countries, proved to be stronger than national interests.

The authoritative bourgeois French newspaper LE MONDE wrote a few days ago that Washington's decision to bomb Libya and the support for this action by London helped, and I quote the paper, to aggravate tension in the Mediterranean region. One cannot but agree with these words. Now, however, they can be fully applied also to those NATO countries, including France, which joined in the support for the U.S. anti-Libyan actions.

U.S. 'Isolated' in World

OW230755 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 22 Apr 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast; Yuriy Ulyanov commentary]

[Text] According to a report from New York, the United States, the United Kingdom, and France have used their veto in the UN Security Council to block the passage of a resolution condemning the armed U.S. attack on Libya. Our commentator:

[Ulyanov] Hello, comrades. We received the news from New York a few hours after it became known that 12 EEC countries in Luxembourg had adopted a series of discriminatory measures against Libya. What happend?

It appears that yesterday, in all European countries, government representatives, noted political fugures, and the bourgeois press in different ways -- some in mild, others in stronger terms -- condemned Washington's aggression. Only official London fully supported the course taken by the White House. Nor were political and public figures the only ones to condemn Washington. Here is some of the latest news.

Anti-American demonstrations took place in Frankfurt, Bremen, and Kiel. "American warmongers, get out of England" was the slogan of mass demonstrations in various regions of Great Britain. Protest demonstrations were held in West Berlin, Madrid, Barcelona, and Brussels. As a sign of protest, workers in Athens stopped work for 1 hour. Thirty thousand people participated in a protest meeting in Central Square in the U.S. city of San Francisco. Similar news is repeated on and on.

Under these circumstances, Washington began twisting the arms of its European allies, calling on them to show solidarity in the face of the terrible wave of international outrage. This was what Deputy Under Secretary of State Whitehead was concerned with during his recent visits to Brussels, Paris, Rome, London, and Bonn. However, the European Community refused to break political and diplomatic relations with Libya and reafirmed its negative attitude toward economic sanctions.

The United States found itself isolated in the international arena. Only the United Kingdom and France supported Washington by resorting to the use of their vetoes in the Security Council.

The debate preceding the vote, in which representatives of more than 40 countries and international organizations took part, showed in all clarity that the international community considers Washington to be the main culprit in heightening global tensions.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN ON ASIAN-PACIFIC COOPERATION

LD231710 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1545 GMT 23 Apr 86

The active development of economic, scientific, and technical relations and participation in the international division of labor are important ways of maintaining and strengthening peaceful good-neighborly relations between states and cooperating in the solving of national economic problems, he said. The Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000 provide for a considerable expansion of the USSR's foreign economic relations, including those with the countries of the Asian-Pacific region. This will be closely linked with the accelerated economic development of the regions of Siberia and the Far East, the active exploitation of the new railway lines of the Baykal-Amur Mainline system, the assimilation of rich oil-and-gas, coal, and other fields connected with power generation, and the development of new economic centers. All this will objectively facilitate an increase in the Soviet Union's role in the commercial and economic activities of the Asian-Pacific region.

Replying to journalists' qu4stions, V. Sukhin stressed that U.S. strategists, seeking to site ever newer kinds of nuclear weapons in the region, are trying to achieve the broad inclusion of that part of the world in the sphere of action of the star wars program. Space tracking and guidance stations that are part of the Spacetrack system are being built in Micronesia, Japan, the Philippines, and Australia. The realization of these ominous designs will increase by many times the danger of an outbreak of nuclear conflicts and will significantly decrease the security of the peoples living there.

The Soviet Union does not wish events to develop in this way, and it is precisely for this reason that it insists on the nonmilitarization of space, said the representative of the USSR Foreign Ministry.

The USSR proceeds from the view that the creation of nuclear-free zones in the Asian-Pacific region and the prevention of the militarization of the area would be a positive contribution to the joint search, along with all the countries of Asia, for a common, integrated approach to setting up a system for peace on the continent.

Speaking about the situation around Afghanistan, V. Sukhin said that the endless active interference from outside in the internal affairs of the sovereign DRA is continuing. Like any other revolution that is in the interests of its own people, the Afghan revolution is a victorious revolution. History cannot be reversed. No one will be able by force, cunning, murder, or interference to slow down social and economic progress.

[Moscow Television Service in Russian at 2112 GMT on 23 April carries a similar report on the Press Department briefing and adds the following: "Replying to a question about the consequences of Japan's joining the U.S. star wars program for building up an atmosphere of tension and instability in the region, the spokesman for the USSR Foreign Ministry's Press Department stressed: [Begin recording] [Unidentified spokesman] Our basic attitude toward this so-called Strategic Defense Initiative is well-known. We believe that in itself this so-called initiative and equally, the participation of other states in U.S. endeavors in this field, does not correspond to the interests of the American people, nor to those of any other people, including the Japanese. SUPSOV DELEGATION MEETS MEXICAN SENATE OFFICIAL

[TASS report under general headline: "End of IPU Conference"]

[Text] Mexico, 13 Apr -- The delegation of Soviet parliamentarians headed by A.E. Voss has had a meeting with A. Riva Palacios, chairman of the Mexican National Congress Senate grand commission. There was an exchange of opinions on questions of cooperation between the two countries' parliamentary groups. The head of the Soviet delegation informed the Mexican side of the USSR Supreme Soviet's activity and the content of the Soviet initiatives aimed at curbing the arms race, achieving disarmament, and safeguarding peace and international security.

The leader of the Senate, who is heading the Mexican delegation at the conference, was presented with the text of the Soviet Government statement on the new U.S. nuclear explosion.

A. Riva Palacios denounced this act of the Reagan administration and held it completely responsible for the consequences of the decision it has made. The moratorium on nuclear tests unilaterally declared by the USSR last summer, he stressed, has opened up fine opportunities for progress on the path toward the limitation and definitive elimination of nuclear weapons.

The talk took place in a friendly atmosphere. R. A. Sergeyev, USSR ambassador to Mexico, took part.

'INTERNATIONAL SITUATION: QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS'

LD210956 Moscow Maritime Service in Russian 2330 GMT 18 Apr 86

["International Situation -- Questions and Answers" program presented by Konstantin Patsyuk, not further identified, with TASS Military Affairs Observer Vladimir Bogachev, correspondent Yevgeniy Kachanov, International Affairs Journalist Eduard Kovalev, and Commentator Sergey Pravdin]

[Excerpts] [Patsyuk] Dear comrades, our program is based on your letters. The event with which I would like to open our program has not yet been reflected in your letters, of course. However, due to its importance it deserves special attention.

The event is the 11th SED Congress that is being held in Berlin and the speech delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. This speech at the forum of the GDR Communists, where the program for the country's further advance is being discussed, has aroused enormous interest among the congress delegates. As the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee has pointed out, our friends have large-scale yet workable projects, for they are based on important results achieved by the Republic.

When speaking about the international situation the orator stressed that the task of curbing the nuclear threat, blocking the aggressive strivings of imperialism, and maintaining and strengthening peace is as pressing as ever. The Soviet Union proposed a specific program for the total scrapping of nuclear arms which was supported vigorously by the allied socialist states and many world states. People have been given the hope that the political atmosphere will change for the better. Unfortunately, this hope is being seriously tested today because of Washington's actions. From the capital of Socialist GDR, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev addressed to all people of Western Europe an appeal not to believe the fabrications about the aggressiveness of the Soviet Union. Under no circumstances will our country ever start military actions against Western Europe, he stated, unless we and our allies become the object of an attack by NATO. The USSR has issued a new initiative related this time to conventional arms and armed forces. It proposes reaching an agreement on a considerable reduction in all components of the ground forces and tactical air forces of European states and also of the corresponding forces of the United States and Canada stationed in Europe.

One of our regular listeners, Pavel Andreyevich Tyukalov from Votkinsk, Udmurt ASSR, writes that peace on our planet has been attained at a heavy price on the battlefields of the Great Patriotic War and in unyielding combats with Hitlerite fascism. Comrade Tyukalov points out that the antinuclear movement is now gaining strength and growing in the world, and the participants of the movement are demanding that the arms race be curbed. What our country now proposes -- large-scale peace initiatives -- fully accords with the expectations of all people of goodwill.

The U.S. Administration takes the directly opposite, defiant stand, and blocks all our proposals. Lies, slander, deception, attempts at lecturing and even punishing entire countries and peoples -- such is the arsenal of means employed by the U.S. Administration in its foreign policy, writes the author.

Vasiliy Ivanovich Murashov from Gorkiy Oblast, Anna Ivanovna Kvartalnaya from the town of Bykhov and others condemn this dangerous course of Reagan's administration.

Comrades Lizgachev from Chkalovsk, Gorkiy Oblast, Tolstikov from Irkutsk Oblast, Arshikov from the town of Orel, Chebotarev from Kalach, Voronezh Oblast, Kovtun from Moscow, Bakeyev from perm Domnin from the town of Insar, Mordovan ASSR and many others write with indignation about the reckless action by Washington that interferes in the internal affairs of other countries, pursuing a policy of state terrorism and neoglobalism. On what grounds do they violate the territorial waters of sovereign states like Libya, as occured last month, the authors ask. And what about the recent aggressive actions of the United States against Libya and the barbarous bombings of towns, resulting in the deaths of many civilians? Soviet people together with the world community demand a halt to all military provocations against Libya. The crimes committed by the aggressors cannot be justified. Currently, when the United States has brought about an uneasy and even dangerous international situation, our country is undertaking tireless efforts to defuse the tension, curb the arms race, and banish nuclear arms from mankind.

What ought to be done to set the solution of the problem of nuclear arms limitation and reduction in motion? I address this question to Vladimir Ivanovich Bogachev, TASS Military Affairs Observer.

[Bogachev] In our country's opinion, the ban on nuclear explosions and an accord on the complete and comprehensive ban of nuclear arms testing could become the first, simple, and effective step in this direction. The halting of nuclear explosions would put an end to the development [sozdaniye] of new systems of mass destructive weapons and to the updating of old ones. As a result, nuclear arsenals would become obsolete and die out, the conditions of nuclear nonproliferation would be strengthened and the confidence among countries would be enhanced, this, in turn, beneficially influencing the whole climate in international relations. In short, a ban on nuclear explosions would make our planet a safer place.

[Patsyuk] We all know what stand the United States has adopted on this issue.

[Bogachev] The United States has set a course for achieving military superiority and flatly refuses to reach an accord on banning nuclear explosions or on a test moratorium for a start. The U.S. response to the USSR proposal to join the moratorium was another nuclear test in Nevada.

[Patsyuk] This impelled the Soviet Union to consider itself free of the unilateral moratorium.

[Bogachev] Unable to bring itself to declare publicly its claims to world supremacy and its course for the uncontrolled continuation of the arms race, Washington resorts to an awkward trust in words. As if mocking people's common sense, the Reagan administration maintains that the only reliable way to disarmament lies in increasing the U.S. nuclear arsenals. According to Washington, in order for nuclear arms to become obsolete they have to be modernized as a preliminary step, whereas to make them powerless, you see, the power and precision of U.S. nuclear ammunition have to be enhanced. Rather strange logic!

[Patsyuk] Perhaps no other U.S. Administration of the 20th century has resorted to such a shameless deception of Americans as the present one on the question of nuclear war.

[Bogachev] That is true indeed. A certain Colin Gray in an article in the U.S. Journal FOREIGN POLICY has been openly trying to prove that the United States can win a nuclear war. Exactly because of the offensive article, President Reagan has appointed Colin Gray his consultant on arms control. One could only imagine what kind of advice this apologist for nuclear war gives the U.S. President on problems of war and peace!

Occasionally, the United States is eager to swagger on the brink of the nuclear abyss and to blackmail sovereign states with the purpose of extracting political and economic concessions from them.

[Bogachev] Yes, and it is fairly in keeping, by the way, with the new U.S. concept of low-intensity wars. These U.S. actions follow from the Reagan doctrine of neoglobalism which stipulates unceremonious U.S. interference, including the use of force, in the internal affairs of independent states. Washington claims the right to punish entire states whose policy differs from its own.

In his speech at the SED Congress in Berlin, Comrade Gorbachev stated that the USSR and the socialist countries demonstrate their solidarity with Libya by word and by deed. They have warned of the serious responsibility the United States is assuming by undertaking armed aggression against an independent state and a UN member. I would like to stress, the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee said, that they must realize in Washington and European capitals that such actions cause direct damage also to the dialogue between the Soviet Union and the United States and between East and West as a whole.

[Bogachev] Specialists maintain that to limit the consequences of a nuclear war is as impossible as to limit the action of a burning match thrown into a powder keg. Our country proceeds from the conviction that even a demonstrative nuclear blast or a limited nuclear exchange will inevitably develop into an all-out nuclear disaster. I have a few words about the destructive capacities of nuclear weapons: The shock wave from nuclear explosions will turn cities of the states at war into gigantic heaps of debris and destroy their population. Light radiation will cause gigantic fires; soot containing radioactive soil particles will rise into the atmosphere and cover it with a veil impenetrable to the sun's rays, first in the Northern Hemisphere and then all of our planet, even those regions where there have been no nuclear explosions. The so-called 'nuclear winter' will set in, which can continue for a year or longer. The temperature of the earth will drop sharply and land cultivation will become impossible even in the tropics. Radioactive precipitation will fall from the atmosphere on the earth's surface for several years. All those people who manage to survive the exchange of nuclear blows will be exposed to lethal doses of radiation. In present conditions, the question is not only the confrontation of the two social systems but the choice between survival and mutual annihilation, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev stressed. That is why our country is making tireless efforts to reach an accord on excluding nuclear arms from mankind. Good sense must have the upper hand.

Justice has triumphed all the same, she exclaims and asks us to give our opinion on the lessons of the trial in Rome. We have invited today Eduard Kovalev, international affairs journalist, to our microphone.

[Kovalev] Konstantin Nikolayevich, I will answer with pleasure the listeners' questions on this provocative matter. It is known that a verdict of "not guilty" was passed on the Bulgarian citizens in Rome, and they have been proved to be entirely innocent in the attempt on Pope John Paul II. Despite efforts by slanderers and falsifiers, the court hearing confirmed, when confronted with obvious facts, that the accusation against Antonov and his two compatriots Vasilev and Ayvazov were based on Agca's false conjectures and groundless insinuations from the outset. At the same time, facts showing that Agca was incited to give false testimony were indisputably established. It was ascertained that while in custody, the terrorist was being informed on the various aspects of the case in order to substantiate the crumbling false accusations against the citizens of People's Bulgaria. It is noteworthy also that factual evidence for this case was actively distorted by the Western media with the deliberate intention of spreading antisocialist, anti-Bulgarian and anti-Soviet sentiment in the West. The court received numerous indications of Agca's contacts with U.S. and Italian secret services, with the Mafia, with representatives of various political forces in West European capitals and, finally, in the Vatican itself. And yet during the whole trial the stir about the Bulgarian connection did not subside and was used above all as a distracting maneuver to cover up the real secret links of Agca. We have fairly good reason to say today that many representatives of the Italian judiciary had no doubts, at any point of the trial, that the three Bulgarian defendants were completely innocent and not implicated in the attempt on the pope. Nevertheless, a social order had been issued, and was being carried out, to turn the case fabricated by special services into a noisy political trial directed against the People's Republic of Bulgaria and world socialism.

[Patsyuk] Some commentaries published in the Western press maintain the line that the wording of the acquittal of insufficient evidence supposedly is not equivalent to compete and unconditional acquittal, the only right conclusion that should have been drawn from the facts of the case. What can you say about this?

[Kovalev] To put if frankly, Konstantin Nikolayevich, the court has not been able to overcome its political prejudices and pressure from interested forces. The caustic judicial wording of acquitted for insufficient evidence is illogical and was introduced in the Italian legislation at the time of Mussolini's fascist regime. In this particular case, it has been used to cast at least some shadow of suspicion on Antonov, Vasilev, and Ayvazov. This move was made in the absence of evidence of any guilt of the slandered Bulgarian citizens, to save the somewhat damaged prestige of Italian justice, and to justify its actions in relation to such a prolonged and illegal detention of Antonov. When assessing the verdict, one has to keep in mind that in the opinion of acknowledged juridical authorities and to democratic legal practice, any grounds for somebody's acquittal are of equal value under the principle of presumption of innocence. One can rightfully assert that the verdict passed in Rome admits that neither Bulgaria nor its three slandered citizens have anything to do with the attempt on Pope John Paul II. The court has in fact acknowledged that the famous Bulgarian connection is a sheer fabrication and all accusations against Bulgaria are built along the lines of a premeditated and elaborate criminal design based on the calumny of a terrorist and convicted criminal who was manipulated from behind the scenes.

[Patsyuk] Eduard Vasilyevich, can this Antonov affair to regarded as closed and can the final word be written, so to speak?

They should be sought and punished. At the same time, one can without fear of error, already point to the forces that were prompting Agca and his possible accomplices to the crime and manipulating lies and calumnies in the press. The trial materials and many facts acquired in the course of independent inquiries by journalists and lawyers, both foreign and Soviet, expose these forces irrefutably. Let us name them. They are Western secret services, and the CIA first of all, the Italian special services SISMI [Intelligence and Military Security Service] and SISDE [Intelligence and Democratic Security Service], and the Israeli Mossad. They are political pressure groups linked closely to the imperialist military-industrial complex, the American New Right and such organizations of theirs as the notorious Heritage Foundation, Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies, Washington, Masonic circles in the United States and Italy, and numerous pro-Zionist groups and organizations in the United States and Israel.

It has been also proved that in fabricating the Bulgarian connection, Western services were helped by dark forces of the criminal world, such as Mafia and neofasicst terrorists. Finally, conservative, anticommunist circles in the Catholic Church itself, reactionaries, the so-called integrists opposing church reforms endorsed by the preceding popes among them, also proved to have had a hand in this case.

[Patsyuk] Some listeners ask: What if Agca went it alone, at his own risk, so to speak?

[Kovalev] Let us do some thinking together. Available materials clearly demonstrate that Agca could hardly prepare and commit the crime on his own, without assistance and participation of various political forces and criminal groups. The Grey Wolves brought up the terrorist and provided him with aid and cover, while the CIA, especially the extreme right, ultra-rightists within this department, and other Western special services, apparently led Agca along his whole criminal route and protected him from failure.

Meanwhile, ecclesiastic integrists, the Vatican's financial plutocracy, revanchist and neofascist groups in the FRG and Italy, freemasons as, for example, the P-2 lodge; and international Zionism, each of these forces separately and together were urging Agca and setting him toward the terrorist act, at the same time pursuing, of course, their own egotistical ends. This knot of criminal interests is yet to be untangled.

[Patsyuk] Azhgibkov, whom I have already mentioned, asks if it is posssible to bring charges against those who have slandered Antonov?

It is high time to start to expose and prosecute legally all those who organized this unprecedented political provocation and caused heavy moral and physical damage to innocent citizens of socialist Bulgaria. This is a demand of democratic progressive opinion and all unprejudiced people in the world.

PRAVDA REVIEW OF WEEK'S INTERNATIONAL EVENTS

PM211422 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 20 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Nikolay Bragin "International Review"]

[Text] Policy of Acceleration

The attention of the world public and press is at present focused on M.S. Gorbachev's speech at the 11th SED Congress that is being held in Berlin. This speech was perceived as further convincing confirmation of the Soviet Union's desire to achieve a fundamental turnabout in the acceleration of our country's socioeconomic development, the further strengthening of socialism's positions in the international arena, the curbing of imperialism's aggressive aspirations, and the deliverance of mankind from the threat of thermonuclear war.

"The socialist world," the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee declared, "is living through a particular, and one may say crucial, stage. History has firmly posed before us the need to make fuller use of the advantages of the new social system in order to accelerate scientific, technical, economic, and social progress and enrich the socialist way of life with new aspects. This will be decisively significant for the attractive force of socialism and the strengthening of its positions in the international arena. The task of curbing the nuclear threat, blocking imperialism's aggressive aspirations, and preserving and strengthening peace is more imperative than ever before."

The Soviet Union, together with the fraternal socialist countries, is creatively and innovatively approaching the solution of the tasks facing us regarding the present stage of historical development. An indication of this is provided by the results of the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, the decisions of the recently held CPCZ and BCP congresses, and the materials of the 11th SED Congress currently under way in Berlin. The GDR Communists comprehensively discussed the task facing them and mapped out paths for further progress in the building of socialism. The fact that a steady upsurge in the economic and social spheres has been ensured in the GDR for more than 15 years now, the congress noted, can be rightfully described as historical proof of the potential of real socialism. The growth of every socialist country's economic potential augments the might of the entire socialist community. This is why it is very imporant to comprehensively strengthen their cooperation and interaction.

Engaged in peaceful creative labor, the socialist countries see it as their paramount duty to do everything possible to improve the situation in the international arena and to halt the world's slide toward nuclear catastrophe. A realistic way to solve this problem was proposed by the Soviet Union in its program for the total liquidation of nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

Politicians, statesmen, and public figures in many countries, eminent scientists, members of the aktivs of antiwar movements, and millions of ordinary people all over the world recognize that the termination of nuclear explosions and the holding of talks to conclude an agreement banning all further nuclear weapon tests would be a specific practical step along the path of curbing the nuclear arms race. This is why there was such approval for the initiative of the Soviet Union, which announced the unilateral introduction of a moratorium on nuclear tests as of 6 August last year, and extended it until 31 March this year, and subsequently until the first nuclear explosion of the United States. The USSR called on the United States to follow its example and thus open the way for the solution of the problem of reducing nuclear arms and of disarmament. The world press was correct in reckoning that "historic opportunity" was being offered to proceed from words to deeds in the solution of a problem on which mankind's very existence depends.

But people in Washington turned a deaf ear to the demands by peace-loving forces. The Reagan administration also ignored the demand by the American people, who backed the moratorium idea.

To Halt the Slide Toward Catastrophe

The nuclear explosion conducted in Nevada on 10 April withered the shoots of hope nurtured by millions of people. According to U.S. press reports, another nuclear weapon test will be conducted at the very same testing ground in the future. It is quite easy to perceive that this will make the international situation even more tense.

This situation is being increasingly aggravated as a result of the White House having begun the implementation of the "star wars" program, which will lead to a new and uncontrollable spiral of the nuclear arms race.

The week's events confirm that not only the Washington champions of "star wars" but also their accomplices in Britain and the FRG are the subject of condemnation by the peace-loving public.

At present, people in the United States and beyond its borders are following with fully justified alarm yet another action, hostile to the cause of peace and devised by the Pentagon "hawks." We are talking about the intention to revise the foundations of the SALT II Treaty which, in the past, set certain limits to the parameters of strategic weapons of the United States and the Soviet Union. In breach of the limits enshrined in the SALT II Treaty, they are demanding a buildup of U.S. nuclear missile potential. A session chaired by President R. Reagan was held in the insistence of the U.S. Administration's most bellicose representatives in Washington on Thursday, 16 April, to make a decision on whether the United States ought to continue to observe the SALT II Treaty.

The session was accompanied by provocative noises about alleged "violations" of SALT II and other treaties by the Soviet Union, and this was needed, according to THE WASHINGTON POST, in order to justify "countermeasures." These measures envisage a buildup of submarine-launched missiles, expansion of the production of MX missiles, Minuteman III triple-charged missiles, and cruise missiles, and accelerated financing of work on yet another "new missile" -- the Midgetman. In other words, the "hawks" want Washington to take the path of abandoning the policy of "nonviolation of SALT II," a path fraught with serious consequences. The near future will show what actions the U.S. President will take. For the time being, as THE NEW YORK TIMES claims, the conference "made no decision."

On 15 April, 150 members of the House of Representatives sent President Reagan a letter demanding observance of the SALT II Treaty's provisions. Speaking in the Senate on 16 April, Democratic Senator J. Biden declared that a refusal to observe the treaty's provisions "will be detrimental to our own security."

Let me recall that, with a view to improving the situation in Europe and delivering it from the nightmare of the nuclear danger, the Soviet Union proposed that Soviet and U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles be removed from all European territory with the condition that the other NATO members -- Britain and France -- not build up their military potential. Now the very same governments that perceived the Soviet SS-20 missiles as the main danger for Western Europe declare that there must be no blocking of the path to buildup the number of British and French missiles and nuclear warheads. This is totally illogical. It lacks even the slightest mention of the principle of equality and equal security. Nor is there any logic in the policy of the FRG which proclaims its love for peace verbally while, in practice, allows on its territory cruise missiles and Pershings targeted on the East. Bonn not only zealously supported the U.S. SDI program, but even supplemented it with the European "star wars" alternative.

Nor have the FRG ruling circles abandoned revanchist calculations. This is a hopeless and dangerous policy. It would be in the interests of the FRG itself and of the improvement of the European climate that Bonn's policy should indeed pursue peaceful goals. This would also create a more firm basis for the development of that country's relations with the Soviet Union and the other socialist states.

The Soviet Union is prepared to develop increasingly broad relations with all its European partners on an equal basis, for mutual benefit, and for the sake of strengthening peace on the continent, and this was reaffirmed by the results of Swedish Prime Minister I. Carlsson's visit to Moscow this week.

When speaking about Europe, the Soviet Union perceives yet another major problem. Powerful armed forces, equipped with conventional weapons, confront each other on the continent. These are two groups of armed forces, each one some 3 million strong and having at their disposal the latest weapons. It is claimed in NATO countries that Western Europe apparently cannot give up nuclear weapons, including U.S. nuclear weapons, because in such an event it would feel less secure in the face of the Warsaw Pact countries' armed forces and conventional weapons. This argument is obviously false. "Never, and under no circumstances at all," the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee declared at the SED congress, "will our country initiate military actions against Western Europe unless we and our allies become the targets of attack by NATO! I repeat: Never!"

This stance by the USSR is confirmed by the new initiative, offering that agreements be reached on a significant reduction of all components of ground forces and tactical air forces of European states and the corresponding U.S. and Canadian forces stationed in Europe. Nuclear arms for operational-tactical purposes would be reduced simultaneously with conventional arms.

The Soviet Union is prepared to examine other constructive peace-loving initiatives.

The idea of curbing the arms race for weapons of mass destruction, of the need to display realism in the implementation of practical measures to terminate nuclear weapon explosions encounters support from a growing number of states as evidenced, for example, by the recent statement by Zhao Ziyang, premier of the PRC State Council, who confirmed his country's readiness to make its contribution to the solution of this problem and not to conduct nuclear tests in the atmosphere in the future.

State Terrorism

The bloody brigandage committed by the U.S. military in the southern Mediterranean this week will go down as a "black page" in U.S. history. On President Reagan's personal orders, U.S. Air Force and naval forces executed massive air raids on the Libyan cities of Tripoli and Banghazi and other centers on the night of 14-15 April, dropping hundreds of bombs and missiles on that country's population. The aggressors struck indiscriminately against military targets and residential quarters. Hundreds of civilians -- children, women, and old people -- fell victim to the American barbarians who have elevated the "laws of the jungle" to the status of state policy.

Hypocritically taking cover behind accusations of Libyan "complicity" in the bombing at a West Berlin discotheque, which resulted in 2 persons being killed and 230 injured, the White House chief declared that Washington's rapacious action was supposedly dictated by the need for U.S. "self-defense." According to THE WASHINGTON POST reports, the organizers of this bloody crime pursued far-reaching objectives. They calculated on "destabilizing" the situation in Libya, overthrowing the regime in that country with help from their agents, and assassinating its leader M. al-Qadhdhafi.

But the aggressors did not succeed in confusing world public opinion. Anger and indignation rolled over all continents in the last few days. The people were given an opportunity to see vividly who is who. Who it is that sows death and destruction for the sake of attaining his imperial goals. The "neoglobalism" preached by Washington appears in its most disgusting aspect, the aspect of state terrorism.

The White House was profoundly mistaken in imagining that aggression against an independent and sovereign UN member state would remain unpunished. In these difficult days for the Libyan people, the Soviet Union, together with the fraternal socialist countries, demonstrated its invariable support for the people of the Libyan Jamahiriyah. The Soviet Union gave assurances that it is fully determined to continue to honor the pledges it has given regarding the further strengthening of Libya's defense capability.

The reaction by honest people on earth to the barbaric act of state terrorism by the United States is unanimous: There is not and there cannot be any justification for U.S. aggression which poses a threat against universal peace.

Washington's design is an open secret -- to draw the world public's attention away from the Soviet Union's new peace initiatives and proposals, including those concerning the normalization of the situation in the Mediterranean and the transformation of that region into a zone of stable peace.

But the aggressor has clearly miscalculated. Only two governments -- those of Canada and Israel -- openly came out in its support, while Britain became an accomplice in the aggressive action. Angry protest against the bloody evil deeds by the agressors echoes everywhere -- not just in Europe, the Middle East, Asia, and Africa, but also in America itself. Washington's political defeat is evident. "The U.S. air raids on what the White House describes as Libyan 'terrorist centers' signify a most dramatic expansion of the policy of intervention which marks the 6th year of the Reagan presidency," London's THE GUARDIAN concludes.

It is understandable that Washington's adventurist actions, be they bomb explosions in Nevada or rapacious raids against Libya, cannot but cloud Soviet-U.S. relations. Under the prevailing circumstances, the U.S. Administration, in the Soviet Government's opinion, has at present made it impossible to hold the planned meeting between the foreign minister of the USSR and the U.S. The United States, Paris' LE MONDE correctly notes, bears responsibility for the fact that it "has again seriously complicated Soviet-U.S. relations."

The entire course of events in the international arena indicates that the USSR's policy is principled, honest, and open. It contains no traps. We offer the West not a clenched fist but an open hand; we are sincerely and keenly seeking ways toward mutual understanding, toward curbing the arms race, toward reliable security and lasting peace for all people. Our policy is dictated by profound humanism -- concern for mankind's survival. The future belongs to this policy.

REAGAN SPEECH DISCUSSES VISIT TO INDONESIA, JAPAN

LD232229 Moscow TASS in English 2114 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 23 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Shalnev reports:

President Reagan today delivered a speech in the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The White House stated that in that speech President Reagan had formulated the main themes and the agenda of his coming trip abroad which is to start next weekend. Reagan will visit Indonesia where he will meet foreign ministers of the ASEAN member countries, and Japan where he will take part in the Tokyo summit of the seven major capitalist countries.

It follows from President Reagan's speech that the main emphasis in his agenda will be placed on ensuring practical implementation of the so-called neoglobalism doctrine on all its directions. He will be, specifically, pressing for a concerted effort in "the battle against terrorism," by which, as is known, Washington means outright interference, also military interference, in the affairs of sovereign states. The President left no doubt that the recent piratic U.S. air strikes on residential quarters of Tripoli and Banghazi sets the example of how "the battle against terrorism" should be waged. That terror caused numerous casualties among the peaceful population.

"Unilateral response is not enough. Terrorism must be dealt with collectively. This undoubtedly will be a topic of discussion in Tokyo," said the head of the U.S. Administration, thus making it plain that he will be demanding from the allies not only the unconditional support but also participation in any future actions like the one that had been taken against Libya.

Moreover, it follows from the explanations made by Reagan's spokesman today that Washington expects from the allies a series of other political, economic and intelligence actions to eradicate "terrorism." The spokesman mentioned, specifically, introduction of economic sanctions against Libya by the allies and Libyan's deportation.

Making a recourse to high-flown style, Reagan spoke today about "a refreshing breeze" that is "felt across the face of mankind," about "winds of freedom" that "are blowing, clearing the air, opening the view of a new and wondrous horizon." But this bombastic style could not conceal a hard fact that proclaiming as "freedom fighters" inveterate terrorists whose hands are stained with blood of innocent people, the U.S. Administration will be stepping up the support for bandits and will be demanding the same from "friends and allies." Reagan's pronouncements show, for instance, that at the coming meetings with ministers of the ASEAN member countries on Bali, the U.S. Administration will raise the question of stepping up aid to bandits that raid Kampuchea.

Dwelling on financial, economic and commercial matters that will be discussed in Tokyo and on Bali, the President said many words in praise of the USA, presented it as a benefactor of developing countries. But the so-called "Baker plan" which, as the President's pronouncements show, he will be pushing through in Tokyo threatens to increase the dependence of developing countries, that have debts to the West, on transnational corporations that are, specifically, controlled by U.S. capital. Industrialised countries are also in for unpleasant surprises. President Reagan unambiguously declared that he will be insisting in Tokyo that the United States partners, major capitalist countries, should fully open their market to U.S. products, and made threats that the United States would toughen protectionist measures.

Commentaries on the President's speech made here point out that the President's agenda actually does not contain such matters of cardinal importance as questions of arms control.

Terrorism Key Topic

LD232230 Moscow TASS in English 1833 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 23 TASS -- TASS news analyst Vasiliy Kharkov writes:

The White House intends to make the problem of terrorism as Washington understands it one of the key topics at the forthcoming conference of the leaders of the "Big Seven," the seven major capitalist countries, due to open in Tokyo on May 4. This is illustrated by an interview given by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz to the Voice of America. He said that the USA would seek complete agreement from its allies on fighting "international terrorism" and added that the American delegation would insist on vigorous action.

The interview given by Shultz leaves no doubt that the U.S. Administration would like to use pressure to impose on the other participants in the Tokyo conference Washington's concept of terrorism, which leads to arbitrariness in international relations. It will be the 12th meeting of the "Big Seven" since the first such conference took place in Rambouillet near Paris in November 1975. Initially, the meetings of the leaders of the seven major capitalist countries were planned to discuss predominantly trade, economic and currency problems. But as time went on, political and even military-strategic problems began to dominate him.

The pretext of terrorism is merely a sign of the U.S. desire to arrogate to itself the right to punish whomever it pleases and to substitute jungle law for the principles of international intercourse. Charges of terrorism are now made not only against Libya but also against Nicaragua. Any other sovereign state, too, can become a target for armed violence under a similarly false pretext. Meanwhile, the U.N. Charter forbids the use of force against any member country of the international community.

State terrorism, institutionalized by the USA as official policy, is the most disguisting form of terrorism. Its barbarous character was recently demonstrated by bomb raids on the Libyan cities of Tripoli and Banghazi, in which Washington used advanced methods of destruction. It is a very dangerous course, especially in the nuclear age, when the equation mark has been put between the prevention of war and the survival of the human race. Washington would like to involve its partners from the "Big Seven" in this policy and to secure from them a blessing for its role of the self-styled arbiter of human destiny and for the use of force in international affairs.

U.S. ENDS NOTIFICATION OF FLIGHTS NEAR LIBYA

LD241118 Moscow TASS in English 1058 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 24 TASS -- U.S. Air Force fighter-bombers and spy aircraft are continuing flights in direct proximity to Libya. According to the ASSOCIATED PRESS, the flights marked an end to the practice of notifying international aviation authorities in advance of flight operations off the Libyan coast. Given last week's aerial bombardment of targets inside Libya, "we see no reason to worry about flight-control notices," the AP was told by administration official who agreed to discuss the matter if not identified.

OIL COMPANIES GRANTED 'LIMITED' LICENCES IN LIBYA

[Text] Washington April 23 TASS -- Spokesman for the U.S. Department of State Bernard Kalb announced the granting to five U.S. oil corporations of "limited" licences for the continuation of their operations in Libya.

As is known, early last January President Reagan announced the introduction of economic sanctions against Libya. In accordance with those sanctions, all U.S. companies and individual businessmen had to end their commercial operations in that country by February 1. Moreover, Washington demanded the same from its West European partners in the name of "Atlantic solidarity". Constantly whipping up anti-Libyan hysteria, the U.S. Administration a few days ago staged an armed attack on that Arab country, bombing Tripoli and Banghazi at night.

That piratic action has been condemned all over the world as an example of outright armed piracy and a manifestation of state terrorism in the spirit of Reagan's "neoglobalism" programme. This piratic action also could not but draw the attention to the fact of which they in Washington would prefer to keep mum: that despite Washington's announced sanctions, the business activity of U.S. oil companies continues in Libya. Thus, the CBS Television Company showed yesterday a reportage on this theme, in which it, specifically, noted that at the very moment when U.S. planes were bombing Libya, oil extracted by a U.S. petroleum company was being pumped into a tanker berthed at one of Libyan ports. The total assets of five U.S. petroleum companies that continue operating in Libya are estimated at two billion dollars.

Last year those companies -- the Occidental Petroleum, the Marathon Oil Company, the Continental Oil, Amerada Hess, Grace Petroleum -- accounted for actually half the amount of oil extracted in Libya. The U.S. Administration alleges that it had to take an armed action against Libya for the reason that West European countries had not shown the readiness to join in the U.S. economic sanctions, the CBS stated in the report. Meanwhile, the U.S. Administration itself, far from compelling its oil companies to leave Libya, extended their licences and thus sanctioned the continuation of their activity.

The announcement by the Department of State cannot but prompt attentive observers to draw the conclusion that in its fierce anti-Libyan campaign and insistent demands to the allies to curtail business ties with Libya Washington is guided not the least of all by its own selfseeking economic interests. Certain influential circles in the United States would obviously like to take the opportunity to undermine the positions of its West European competitors by depriving them of the access to quality Libyan oil and of the proceeds from mutually-advantageous commercial and economic ties with that Arab country.

PENTAGON ADMITS RAID CAUSED CIVILIAN CASUALTIES

LD240425 Moscow TASS in English 0742 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 23 TASS -- Only a week after the U.S. barbaric air raid of Tripoli and Banghazi, Libya, the Pentagon admitted at last that the bombing had brought about casualties among the civilian population and the destruction of civilian objects of that Arab country. Robert B. Simms, spokesman of the U.S. Defense Department, said at a press conference Tuesday that the U.S. admitted that damage had been inflicted to civilian areas and that it was possible that it had been partially inflicted by the U.S. forces. Simms's admission was obviously belated and at the same time highly cynical. According to the UPI news agency, the Reagan administration refuses to fully take upon itself the responsibility for numerous casualties among the civilian population of Libya and continues to allege that part of the devastation could be caused by the fire of Libyan anti-aircraft defense batteries.

COMMENTARY ON DAMAGE CAUSED BY U.S. RAID

[Report by correspondent Leonid Rassadin in Libya; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Here in Libya new facts about the monstrous crimes of the U.S. military have come to light. It has emerged that during the recent bandit raids, the U.S. Air Force used weapons of mass destruction banned by international conventions. With a large group of foreign journalists, our cameraman Aleksandr Arbuzov shot these sequences in the desert, 15 km from Banghazi, the second largest city in Libya. Here, far from centers of population, fragments of canister bombs collected in various places were brought together. Two heavy U.S. bombs were also brought here to be defused.

Having previously served as a correspondent in the Lebanon, I have frequently had occasion to see the terrible effects of use by the Israeli aggressors of canister and cluster bombs, also, incidentally, of U.S. manufacture. However, I had not seen any with interiors such as this, with fins at the bottom and a bell shape at the top. The Libyan military men explained that these infernal devices, though of small size, are especially for use against people. On striking a person, the finest needles and shots cause terrible suffering. The use by the United States of such monstrous weapons of mass destruction is tantamount to declaring a criminal war of terror on sovereign Libya.

The Tripoli municipal hospital: An 11-year-old boy named 'Abdul, wounded in the neck, has been brought here. On his way to school in the morning, he came across an unfamiliar reddish-gold object. A passerby sensed something wrong and tore the object from the child's hands. There was an explosion. The surgeons have done all they can to save the life of 23-year-old Khalid Muhammad Zakir. The operation, which lasted over 2 hours, proved extremely complex. The U.S. Administration bears the responsibility for the deed.

MUSCOVITES DEMONSTRATE AT U.S. EMBASSY

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Excerpt] Directly across from the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, there was a demonstration by young people to show solidarity with the Libyan people. Young Muscovites signed an appeal by the young people to stop U.S. aggression against Libya, as did the elderly and guests in the capital.

U.S. POLICY ON LIBYA LINKED TO NEVADA TEST BLAST

[Aleksandr Serikov commentary on the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] And so Washington has thrown down another challenge to mankind, despite the mass protests which have rolled through the countries of all continents, despite urgent appeals to reason made to the U.S. Administration, and in disregard of common sense, which suggests that any nuclear explosion is first and foremost a threat to life on earth.

The soil at the testing range in the state of Nevada has shuddered again, as has already happened twice this year. The United States carried out the previous explosion on 10 April, when the unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests introduced by our country was still in force. Perhaps by testing new explosive devices those in Washington want to test our patience; or is it a new attempt to teach mankind a lesson; by way of threats.

The United States has already undertaken such an attempt just a few days ago. Did not the U.S. President, in ordering bombs to be thrown on the peaceful districts of Libyan towns, want to intimidate all those peoples who like Libyans have chosen, or are getting ready to choose a path of development independent of U.S. dictate?

So the explosions in Libya and in Nevada are all part and parcel of the same thing: the result of Washington's policy to scorn world public opinion. These explosions serve as a sinister background against which the aim of the ruling group in the United States clearly reveals itself: placing the interests of the military-industry circles above the interests of all mankind.

WASHINGTON SAID TO CAUSE 'ANTI LIBYAN HYSTERIA'

LD240431 Moscow TASS in English 0724 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Paris April 23 TASS - Washington's piratic action against Libya is being accompanied by the heightening of anti-Libyan hysteria with a view to aggravating the situation around the sovereign nation and in the Mediterranean as a whole.

The American Administration is inciting panic among its own citizens by spreading the myth about Libya's involvement in "international terrorism."

The newspaper, LE MONDE, wrote yesterday about the unusual measures used by Washington under the pretext of "ensuring the safety" of American missions abroad. In Paris, for instance, American flags were removed from all American institutions, including the embassy, "not to attract attention of the terrorists." American authorities, in special instructions, were warning their citizens about possible terrorist acts against them. According to the newspaper, the Americans were now trying to conceal their nationality. They preferred not to talk English in the streets or read English-language newspapers. Many frightened Americans were hastily returning to the United States.

The U.S.-provoked or backed regional conflicts and crises constitute favourable grounds for international terrorism. In order to conceal that, the Washington administration is kindling psychosis, sowing panic and intimidating its own citizens whose dignity and honour could best be protected by Washington's prudence in international affairs.

LIBYAN RAID EQUATED WITH 'INTERNATIONAL BANDITRY'

[V. Mikheyev "International Commentary": "Covering the Traces"]

[Text] The fear of being cast in the role of defendant is pushing Washington into fueling still further the atmosphere of chauvinist paranoia in the country and, to that end, cynically arguing that the United States has taught Libya a "lesson" and that it intends to continue talking to it in the "language of strength."

The pilots who stole up on the Libyan cities are now being lauded as "national heroes." In the corridors of power they are extolling the "right" which the United States has conferred upon itself of delivering "warning" strikes against states which it considers "terrorist," as National Security Council Directive No. 138 puts it.

For domestic consumption, apparently, international banditry packaged in this form -- tried out not so long ago on Grenada -- retains its appeal for many Americans. For the world public, however, this disguise is yet more evidence of foul play. It is no accident that the export version of the vindication of this overt act of aggression against a sovereign state is founded on the thesis that the United States was, after all, acting in the interests of... "self defense." The pretext it used was an explosion in the West Berlin La Belle Discotheque 5 April, in which one U.S. serviceman died.

It is well known that Libya firmly dissociated itself from that terrorist act. The commission investigating the circumstances of the explosion in West Berlin found no evidence of its involvement in that event. Nevertheless, the deadly cargo labeled "Made in USA" has already rained down on peaceful districts of Libyan cities. Whose hands bear the blood of what was done? In this situation Washington dares not abandon its interpretation of the events or its chosen causus belli. And it is embarking on attempts to cover its traces with new fabrications.

This time a U.S. State Department spokesman stated that the Soviet Union was apparently "informed in advance" about proposed actions against "U.S. interests." It was even proposed to the Soviet Union, it turns out, that it cooperate with the United States in preventing a possible terrorist action. Had the Soviet side responded positively, the spokesman claimed, the tragedy in the West Berlin discotheque would not have occurred and, consequently (?), the United States would not have had to attack Libya.

A number of questions spring to mind immediately. At a meeting with Soviet representatives Washington's envoys did not cite a single concrete fact but limited themselves to reiterating their "suspicions" which were hardly distinguishable from the previous propaganda cliches about the "Libyan threat" -- why was that? If, as the U.S. officials claim, they had information about an attack in preparation, why did they not prevent it themselves and why did they not take security measures to protect their servicemen against the potential danger? And how does all this tally with the U.S. press reports that the "joint bombing raid by the Air Force and Navy was planned months ahead"?

You cannot help thinking back to 1981 when the United States used every opportunity to cite the "Libyan threat" because it needed to justify the presence of its "Rapid Deployment Force" in the Near East and to justify its military activity in the region as a whole. Immediately searches were mounted in the U.S. capital to find the Libyan "terrorists" plotting to kill "our leader," as the newspaper headlines screamed. The conjectures, which had a quite definite author, were presented in the form of banner headlines, and they had no room for the facts which subsequently came to light: namely, that the terrorists who featured on the official organs secret lists were members of a militant anti-Libyan organization. Then in 1983, as the NEW STATESMAN wrote, another Libyan threat was "discovered," this time against Sudan -- such an insignificant threat that the Sudanese and Egyptian intelligence services knew nothing about it. Secretary of State George Shultz was consequently able to strike a pose and announce the Al-Qadhdhafi has "again been curbed" after the show of U.S. resolve.

The State Department's present ruse, which it wants to use to somehow link the Soviet Union to the inevitability of the U.S. bandit attack on Libya, is similar in vein to the claims of "self-defense." Symbolically, this language has much in common with the classic example of hypocrisy heard during the Vietnam aggression when a U.S. major said about Ben Tre village, which had been burned to the ground: "To save that village we have to destroy it."

No, diplomatic maneuvers and propaganda subterfuges will not help those who have covered themselves with the blood of innocent casualties. A crime remains a crime in any language.

LIBYA MERELY 'REGIONAL OBJECTIVE' OF U.S. POLICY

PM231253 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 22 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Article by Yu. Vandura: "Model For 'Neoglobalism'"]

[Text] The latest issue of the influential foreign policy journal FOREIGN AFFAIRS characterized the "Reagan doctrine" as a "dog whose bark is worse than its bite." But on the night of 14-15 April 1986 the hound was once again, after Grenada, let off the chain and set on Libya. For the sake of what?

In the West a considerable number of lances have been broken over this question. Some claim that the Reagan administration seriously intended to stop "Libyan terrorism" by bombing residential areas (supposing there is any proof of Tripoli's involvement in terrorist actions of recent months or supposing there is evidence of no participation in these actions by the American special services). Others suppose that the F-111s and carrier-based aircraft of the U.S. 6th Fleet were not aiming at innocent targets but at the residence of Al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan Jamahiriyah. And others are convinced that the bombs were generally hurled not at specific targets but with the aim of "inspiring the opposition to revolt" against the present government. And there are still other opinions...

But behind all this speculation -- encouraged, incidentally, by Washington itself -- the main point is overlooked: The United States committed an open act of aggression, in no way provoked or justified, against a sovereign state. It committed this act in violation of the UN Charter. Committed it solely because the foreign policy of this state is not to the liking of the White House and because the ideals of the Libyan people do not fit the rigid American stereotyped ideas of the world and mankind.

In this connection the question arises: Is it really only Libyan foreign policy that arouses attacks of bitter irritation in Washington? Is it really only the Libyan people who do not wish to accept the "American way of life" as model? One must not delude oneself: Libya is just one of the targets of the present administration's aggression. It is no accident that the "Reagan doctrine" is also known as "neoglobalism."

"Neo" or not, the type of action taken by the White House against an independent North African power is nothing other than an example of the conduct envisaged by Washington today on a global scale. Consequently, what American military force did in Libya yesterday could be done tomorrow to any other state. Because it is precisely aggression that constitutes the very basis of "neoglobalism" and this aggression is directed against everyone and everything Washington may suspect of an inclination to live according to its own ideas, ideas that do not coincide with the "ideals" of the White House.

These ideals are today well known. "The Reagan doctrine envisages going on the offensive. It supports attempts to get back regions controlled by Communists," S. Rosenfeld, deputy editor of THE WASHINGTON POST states. "Theoretically it has an all-embracing scope."

It was not today and not even yesterday that the United States began "enveloping" the world in its idea, an idea clothed in military uniform. Let us recall Grenada -- once a sovereign state, but now an island populated by people but ruled (from Washington) by puppets. Let us recall. . . However, what is the point of calling on the memory for help, when American "neoglobalism" shows itself every day in Angola and Nicaragua, in Cambodia and Afghanistan? Libya is merely a "regional objective" of Washington's ambitions. And what happened with this country could at any moment be repeated thousands, tens of thousands of kilometres from the North African coast: for the White House, Libya is not simply a target of "neoglobalism" but also a model on which the mechanism of the United States' relations with the outside world can be worked out.

LIBYAN ATTACK MORE U.S. 'NEOGLOBALISM'

LD232325 Moscow TASS in English 1840 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 23 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Setunskiy reports: Washington is striving to use its bandit raid on Libya to whip up further the chauvinist hysteria, to condition the public to new armed sorties abroad in the framework of Reagan's "neoglobalism" doctrine.

The propaganda effort to justify a piratic raid on Libya has been thoroughly planned in advance and is coordinated. At the bid of official Washington, the biggest newspapers of the USA, radio and television rehash the Pentagon's propaganda thesis that a strike of "surgical precision" has been dealt at Libya, that it was "retaliation" for alleged terroristic acts.

"Shaping the public opinion", rigging facts, the mass media present the matters in such a way as if almost entire America hails bombing stikes at Tripoli and Banghazi.

But as more details come to light about the consequences of the anti-Libyan aggression, the killing of innocent peaceful Libyan citizens, among them women and children, by U.S. bombs and destruction of residential quarters, some U.S. observers start to declare that the attack on Libya had nothing in common with "combatting terrorism" and pursued quite different aims: to intimidate developing countries that conduct an independent policy, to bring into play the U.S. military might to overthrow a government that does not suit Washington. This was noted, specifically, by BOSTON GLOBE newspaper.

Its commentary clearly expresses the thought that the aggression against Libya was the try-out of the implementation of the "neoglobalism" doctrine. And the newspaper notes that new U.S. bellicosity is concentrated not only on Libya, but on the whole of the Third World, on Angola and Kampuchea, on Nicaragua and Afghanistan.

Despite the chauvinist hysteria and vicious anti-Libyan allegations by Washington, ever more ordinary Americans come to see the truth. The slogans that are chanted these days by participants in mass protest in the USA show that the crimes committed and the policy of state terrorism cannot be whitewashed even with the recourse to most blatant lies.

U.S. FOREIGN POLICY BASED ON 'LAW OF JUNGLE'

[Text] Moscow April 23 TASS -- TASS news analyst Valentin Vasilets writes:

If one is to judge by warlike statements made these days in Washington, the bandit terrorist action against Libya is not viewed on the banks of the Potomac as an isolated episode but as one of the steps in the escalation of the policy of aggression and expansion, to which the present U.S. Administration does not stop vowing its allegiance. It is in place to draw special attention in this connection to the recent statements by President Reagan. Speaking to members of the "Heritage Foundation", an extreme right-wing organisation, he said that the United States would not tolerate a new Libya on its doorstep. His warning that the meaning of last week's events should not remain unclear smacks of still greater imperial arrogance.

There is nothing for Washington to worry about on this score. The banditry won the appraisal which it deserves across the world. It is clear that Washington's latest threat is addressed directly to Nicaragua, against which it does not rule out a military action modelled after the attack on Libya. But the meaning of the threatening tirade goes farther. The President of the great power actually states that none of the states can consider itself secure if in Washington they deem its policy to be unacceptable.

Herein lies the essence of the policy of neoglobalism proclaimed in Washington as a guiding doctrine. There is not a single region now where the U.S. Administration fails to interfere in the sovereign affairs of other states. In Angola, Afghanistan, Chad, El Salvador, the Middle East and elsewhere the United States works not on settling conflicts but on how to lend them a more acute character and use them its own ends.

There is nothing new in this. Suffice it to recall the Pentagaon's promise to "bomb Vietnam into the stone age". What is new is transition to vigorously provoking conflicts, to attempts to kindle a fire where there is no any at present. This was the case with Grenada. This was the case with Libya. Now the President states that the list is not confined to this.

Washington's course of provoking regional conflicts, which has assumed distinct outlines, is perilous to the whole world. When the great power, a member of the U.N. Security Council, is guided in its conduct by the law of the jungle rather than norms of international law, security of everyone is thus called in question. Unlike the fabricated "Libyan threat", Washington's actions constitute a real threat to world peace. The laws of the jungle have never been considered as acceptable in the civilized world and in the nuclear age of ours they are mortally dangerous to mankind's existence. Do they in Washington give a thought that in ordering a lift-off of dozens of F-111 bombers for a regular punitive action, they possibly step on the road leading to a precipice.

INTERNATIONAL LAW TRAMPLED ON BY U.S. LIBYAN RAID

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- TASS political news analyst Boris Shabayev writes:

It is of course difficult but possible to imagine how uncomfortable the present U.S. Administration feels in the pillory under a squall of indignation roused around the world by the U.S. piratic attack on Libya.

This is why Washington is leaning over backwards to wriggle its way out, evade responsibility for what was committed, and to muddy waters, so to say.

Not the last place in those contrivances is occupied by attempts, through piling one lie upon another, to caluminate those who sided and is siding with the victim of the piratic raid on Libya. With this end in view "versions," which are designed to cast aspersions upon the Soviet Union's clear-cut stand with regard to the United States' criminal aggression, are being offered one after another to mass media. Among such versions are also 'expressive' statements to the effect that the Soviet Union knew in advance that the action was being prepared. It is not difficult to guess what kind of "conclusions" Washington thereby urges one to draw.

Truly, whom Jupiter wishes to punish, he first deprives of reason. And together with it, of elementary logic. Well, who did not know that Washington was busy feverishly preparing for an armed action against Libya? Newspaper headlines of almost the whole world were full of reports on the subject. And not for one day or two but throughout the current year, for beginning from January the Pentagon has held five series of provocative military exercises off Libyan shores, and on the night of March 24 to 25 held a "dress rehearsal" of the April raid -- a missile strike was delivered against Libyan territory.

It must be noted, incidentally, that that took place almost two weeks before the blast in the West Berlin discotheque, which was used as a pretext for the bombing of Tripoli and Banghazi. It was also at that time that the Soviet Union most resolutely condemned the U.S. aggressive actions and demand that an end to them be put and stated that it had been and remained on the side of Libya in her just struggle for her freedom and independence. The United States did not listen to the warning, just as it did not reckon with the opinion of most of its allies which were being manipulated as zealously as unsuccessfully, counting out London, by Vernon Walters, special emissary of the White House.

Not only the Soviet Union and Libya but the entire world as well knew about dangerous, adventuristic plans of the White House. It was not fortuitous that precisely at a time when the President's ominous order to scramble aircraft with bombs and missiles for a strike against Libya was being transmitted through the U.S. military communication channels, the U.N. Security Council was meeting in New York to discuss ways to eliminate tension which developed in the Mediterranean through the fault of the U.S. Administration.

The bandit raid was made in full conformity with the laws of the 'genre': under the cover of night darkness and at zero altitude in order to evade Libyan air defence radars. The United States expected to take Libyan air defense gunners by surprise, and miscalculated. The participants in the piratic raid themselves later on complained about the unexpected-to-them density of anti-aircraft fire. Libyan Air Defense gunners were on the look-out, which is confirmed by the losses sustained by the raiders. Some of them did not risk to approach the Pentagon-planned targets and turned back together with their death-carrying payload.

Such are facts. They show how crudely the advocates of "neoglobalism" across the ocean act. As crudely as Washington's entire host which tramples upon the very principles of international law and order.

XINHUA COMMENTARY DECRIES U.S., ISRAELI ARAB POLICY

LD222353 Moscow TASS in English 2036 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing April 22 TASS -- Actions of the United States against Libya, Israel's aggressive anti-Arab policy carried out with U.S. active support, are the primary causes of the breeding ground of terrorism, runs a commentary that has been distributed by the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY.

Conflicts in the Middle East most of all affected the Arab people of Palestine and Arab states. Their struggle in different forms for native land and national dignity is fair and it cannot be identified with terrorism.

It is necessary above all, XINHUA stresses, to stop the Israeli aggression and expansion, to resolve the Palestinian issues through peaceful means. Sabre rattling, encroachment on sovereignty of other countries and attempts to overthrowing legitimate governments under the pretext of struggle against terrorism, the commentary runs, heighten the existing contradictions and deteriorate the international situation.

ROYAL NAVY SHIPS TO VISIT SHANGHAI IN JULY

PM141325 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 10 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[TASS report: "Regarding an Upcoming Visit"]

[Text] THE WASHINGTON POST, referring to information received from its correspondent in Beijing, reports that according to a PRC Foreign Ministry spokesman, China has granted permission for Royal Navy ships to visit Shanghai in July this year.

The newspaper notes that official Chinese circles have reaffirmed the PRC's stance banning Chinese port calls by nuclear-armed ships.

As is known, last year the United States and China failed to come to an agreement on a Shanghai port call by U.S. Navy ships because the United States refused to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons abaord these ships. The British position is similar in that they have not issued any conformation or denial on this subject.

U.S. ADMIRAL MEETS WITH CHINESE MILITARY LEADERS

LD110840 Moscow TASS in English 0732 GMT 11 April 86

[Text] Tokyo April 11 TASS -- KYODO TSUSHIN reports with reference to U.S. sources in Peking that Admiral James Watkins, chief in the Office of Naval Operations, arrives today in the People's Republic of China for a visit. Watkins will hold talks with Liu Huaqin, commander of the Navy of the People's Republic of China, and other Chinese military leaders.

KYODO TSUSHIN recalls that in 1984 China gave its consent to those visits. However, later they were postponed for an indefinite period because Washington refused to give a guarantee that there were no nuclear weapons on board the ships that were to call at Chinese ports.

STABLE ECONOMIC RELATIONS IN FAR EAST EMPHASIZED

[Mulatov commentary]

[Text] It has been reported that the Soviet Union and China have agreed to hold industrial exhibitions in each other's country this year. A Chinese industrial exhibition will be held in Moscow in July and August; a similar Soviet exhibition will be held in Beijing in December. The Soviet Union will exhibit a few thousand products, including its newest technical items and equipment that Chinese industrial enterprises will use. It has also been reported that during China's current 5-year plan, the Soviet Union will help build 7 new projects and renovate 17 existing enterprises, which include energy, machine-building, and coal enterprises. The following is a commentary by station observer Mulatov on the above report:

Developing mutually beneficial economic ties and expanding bilateral trade between the Soviet Union and China is no doubt commercially significant, but practice has proven that expansion of economic cooperation will lead to a stabilization of political relations between our two countries; this in turn is beneficial to the international atmosphere. The people of our two countries are concerned about political relations. With a tradition of friendship and good-neighborliness between them, the Chinese and Soviet people have carried out comprehensive cooperation in the fields of socialist construction, economy, and politics.

Listeners, the Soviet Union holds that it is very important to consolidate good-neighborliness in the Far East and develop mutual understanding and trust among the countries in this region. They also include Japan, the biggest capitalist country. By the way, the 10th joint meeting of the Soviet-Japanese Economic Cooperation Committee and the Japanese-Soviet Economic Cooperation Committee is being held in Moscow. In his congratulatory message to the meeting, Soviet Premier Ryzhkov stressed that the Soviet Union attaches great importance to strengthening true good-neighborliness and mutual trust with Japan, its neighbor in the Far East. He pointed out that promoting mutual trust among countries with different social systems is especially important at this time when the world is faced with the danger of a nuclear war.

Listeners, some of you may ask, "What is the difference between the Soviet Union's policy on capitalist Japan and that on socialist China?" With China and other socialist countries, the Soviet Union pursues a policy of actively offering aid. What does this mean? The basic principles of such a policy were explicitly expounded in the CPSU Program adopted at the recent 27th CPSU Congress. In the chapter on cooperation with socialist countries, the program points out that the CPSU will strive to consolidate firm, comradely relations and comprehensive cooperation between the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. The CPSU's point of departure is that unity among socialist countries accords with the interest of all nations and is beneficial to peace and the success of socialism.

In its relations with capitalist countries, including Japan, the Soviet Union adheres to Lenin's principle of peaceful coexistence with countries with different social systems. The Soviet Union is pursuing a policy of developing broad, long-term, and stable ties with other countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

In conclusion, it should be pointed out that the developing economic ties between the Soviet Union, socialist China, and capitalist Japan are very important in bringing about a stable atmosphere of good-neighborliness and cooperation in the entire Far East.

QUALITY CONTROL SYSTEM EYED FOR PRC LIGHT INDUSTRY

PM171348 Moscow EKONOMICHESKAYA GAZETA in Russian No 15, Apr 86 (Signed to Press 3 Apr 86) p 23

[TASS report: "PRC: Light Industry's Difficulties"]

[Text] The newspaper RENMIN RIBAO reports that 7,000 light industry enterprises were remodeled in China during the last 5-year plan period. The newspaper notes that some enterprises failed to ensure even simple reproduction during the pervious period because of technical obsolescence and lack of local resources to overcome it.

About 17 billion yuan were appropriated for the needs of the sector's retooling in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period; equipment worth a total of $2 billion was imported. As a result of the measures that have been taken, 80 percent of output is now produced by remodeled factories, and production of a number of new products has been started up. Exports of light industry commodities have increased by 75 percent.

At the same time, the newspaper writes, the overwhelming majority of the sector's existing 70,000 enterprises are small. They cannot satisfy the fast-growing purchasing power of the population. The Chinese press notes that an 8-percent increase in the output of light industry products has been planned for this year. Nonetheless, a certain gap will remain between demand and supply. The establishment of an output quality control system is envisaged.

PRAVDA NOTES IMPORTANT ECONOMIC LINKS WITH GDR

[Dispatch by own correspondent Yu. Kazmyn and M. Podklyuchnikov: "GDR Working People Greet Party Forum in Worthy Fashion: Solid Bonds"]

[Excerpt] The Republic is advancing confidently. The annual increase in national income, for example, has been 4.4 percent on average, and in 1985 it was even 4.8 percent. These figures are primarily accounted for by the consistent introduction of the achievements of scientific and technical progress. Hence, too, the high indicators for labor productivity growth: up 8.4 percent in 1985.

A careful attitude toward raw and semifinished materials, energy, and manpower has also played a considerable part in the success. The slogan "Giving resources back to the state is a contribution to national income" was coined during competition. Action followed the word: Working people have already given back to the state resources worth many billions of marks.

In carrying out the 10th SED Congress' decisions much has also been done to renew equipment: At present roughly one-third of the equipment in the Republic's industrial enterprises is under 5 years old.

The level of automation has been stepped up. The number of industrial robots quadrupled during the 5-year plan, and microelectronics is undergoing active development.

In recent months new terms generated by scientific and technical progress, such as "system for the automated design, planning, and control of production," have become current in the GDR. Each such system consists of a computer equipped with numerous peripherals and complex software. It considerably speeds up the creation of new products and saves the time of designers and engineers. There are already around 1,000 automated planning and control systems in the country, with the result that more than 5,000 new products, methods, and techniques were introduced into industry in 1985.

It is natural when complex tasks are being tackled that not everything will always go without a hitch. The SED Central Committee recently held a seminar for the general directors of combines and Central Committee party organizers. It was not just to discuss successes and achievements, it also impartially discussed shortcomings. Some combines were told they must ensure that the scientific and technical groundwork is laid down more quickly and that production is rationalized at a faster rate. Concern for an economic return on the scientific and technical achievements introduced and reliance on highly efficient technology were defined as the prime political duty of production managers.

GDR working people are aware that cooperation with the USSR and the other CEMA countries serves as an important catalyst of scientific and technical progress and economic growth for the Republic. At every combine and enterprise we have visited recently there has been discussion about ties with our Soviet partners, our close cooperation, and joint development work. There are many successes here. At the same time, it can be seen that there are quite considerable reserves -- it emerges that parallel development work has needlessly been carried out in both countries or it turns out that a problem could have been solved more quickly or that someone's sluggishness has been holding things up...

Without close cooperation with the Soviet Union, our interlocutors observed, further successful progress is inconceivable. The course of comprehensively speeding up socioeconomic development approved by the 27th CPSU Congress is by common opinion of enormous significance not just for the USSR but for the GDR and the entire socialist community.

SED CONGRESS SPEECHES SUPPORT SOVIET STANCE

[Special correspondents Ye. Grigoryev, Yu. Kazmin, and M. Podklyuchnikov dispatch; "Strengthening the Republic and Peace"]

[Excerpts] Berlin, 19 Apr -- Man has been and remains the decisive force of economic, scientific, and technical progress. Determining the prospects of the Republic's development in 1986-1990 and in the more distant future at the 11th SED Congress, which is continuing its work here, the GDR Communists are focusing their attention on concern for the people's well-being. This policy encounters ardent response among the masses, which is also reflected in the remarkable achievements by urban and rural working people and enables the SED to confidently lead the country forward along the path of buidling the developed socialist society.

Congress delegates and the Republic's working people unanimously approve the GDR's foreign policy, implemented in total unity with USSR and the other fraternal countries. The participants in the forum were profoundly impressed by the speech by the head of the CPSU delegation. In their speeches both yesterday and today, congress delegates and foreign guests express support for the USSR's line in international affairs.

They note the exceptional importance of the new specific Soviet initiative, put forward here in Berlin and aimed at ensuring peace and peoples' security. "The USSR proposes a substantial reduction of conventional armed forces in Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals" -- this is the headline running right across the front page of today's NEUES DEUTSCHLAND. The newspaper carries the full text of M.S. Gorbachev's speech at the 11th SED Congress.

The report by the SED Central Committee to the 11th congress sets new goals for the accelerated development of the republic's national economy in the 5-year plan period and, in the longer term, through the year 2000. Delegates note that this intense program is realistic and realizable in all aspects. It fully accords with the experience accumulated by labor collectives as regards accelerated development and the broad intensification of production processes on the basis of the modern achievements of science science and technology, advanced manufacturing processes, microelectronics, and robotics.

POLISH OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON FRIENDSHIP TREATY

LD220247 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0530 GMT 21 Apr 86

[Text] Today the 41st anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Friendship and Mutual Assistance in Postwar Cooperation between the USSR and the Polish Peoples Republic is being marked. We go over to our Warsaw correspondent Vasiliy Lesovik:

With the signing of this treaty on 21 April 1945, Poland acquired a faithful and reliable political and economic ally. The whole history of postwar Poland is an uninterrupted chain of clear confirmations of this. The whole of the country's fundamental industrial capabilities were reborn out of the ruins of war, and reached a modern level thanks to the USSR's economic assistance. In the difficult period of the first half of the 1980's Poland managed to withstand the political and economic aggression of the forces of imperialism, and the internal counterrevolution thanks to assistance from the countries of socialism, above all the USSR.

The solidarity and unity of action of the fraternal countries has been a reliable guarantee to Poland in overcoming problems and in its entry onto the path of stable economic development. Poland is once again becoming a fitting economic partner among the countries of the socialist community. This is what Wladyslaw Gwiazda, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Polish People's Republic said in an interview in connection with the anniversary of the treaty:

[Begin recording in Polish with superimposed Russian translation] Today, new forms and directions of cooperation are developing between our countries. The long-term program for scientific and technical and economic cooperation up to the year 2000 between the Polish People's Republic and the USSR is the foundation for the further dynamic development of cooperation, along with the comprehensive program for scientific and technical progress. For example, in the current 5-year period our trade turnover already increased by 32 percent in comparison with the previous 5-year period, and reached R74 billion.

New forms of cooperation have also developed: the setting up of joint enterprises, scientific research centers for the design and production of products. Just as 41 years ago when the treaty was signed, so now Poland's paths of development are indissolubly linked with socialism, with the opportunity it faces with the USSR. This remains a good reference point for all our policies at present and in the future. [end recording]

GREECE WILL NOT APPLY ANTI-LIBYA SANCTIONS

LD230237 Moscow TASS in English 2308 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Athens April 22 TASS -- Greece now has no intentions of applying to Libya the sanctions endorsed by the Council of Ministers of the European Communities in Luxembourg. This was said by spokesman for the Greek Government M. Papaioannou. Greece has very serious reservations about these measures, says the government statement. Such measures might be considered only if there are weighty proofs of a country's implications in terroristic acts. There are no such proofs so far, the statement says. The Greek Government condemns the raid of the U.S. planes on Libya. It holds that it is only through talks that the conflict in the Mediterranean can be settled, M. Papaioannou declared.

Papandreou Remarks

LD240207 Moscow TASS in English 1712 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Athens April 23 TASS -- The EEC countries have not been given a shred of evidence of Libya's involvement in recent acts of terrorism, Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou stated. Addressing the Parliament of the country, the Greek head of government said that the country so far had no intention of introducing sanctions against Libya that has been approved by the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community. Greece denounces the raid of the U.S. Air Force on Libya, Papandreou said.

AUSTRIA REFUSES TO EXPEL LIBYAN DIPLOMATS

LD231925 Moscow TASS in English 1837 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Paris April 23 TASS -- Austria refused to follow EEC member countries which adopted a number of discriminatory measures against Libya, the federal chancellor of the Austrian Republic, Fred Sinowatz, told a press conference in Strasbourg, where he attended a session of the Council of Europe's Parliamentary Assembly. The Austrian Government, he said, was convinced that Libyans were not involved in the terrorist act at Vienna's Schwechat Airport in December last year. Therefore, Austria was not going to expel Libyan diplomats from the country.

THATCHER BACKS U.S. CLUSTER-BOMB USE IN LIBYA

LD231102 Moscow TASS in English 0950 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] London, April 22 TASS -- Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has supported the use by Washington in its aggression against Libya of weapons specially designated for killing people rather than hitting military targets. Responding to a question in Parliament on the British Government's attitude to the use by the U.S. aviation of the so-called cluster bombs against Libya's civilian population, Thatcher said that it was up to the United States to choose weapons ensuring the hitting of the necessary targets. The prime minister's attention to the use by the United States of cluster bombs against the Libyan civilian population was drawn by Labour Deputy Tam Dalyell. He said, in part, that the facts made public refute the allegations that the attack on Libya was designed to destroy military facilities in Libyan territory. The MP stressed that cluster bombs were not used to this end. The aggression, in which the British Government acted as a direct accomplice, killed dozens of innocent Libyan citizens and injured more than a hundred.

'ANTI-TERRORIST PSYCHOSIS' DEVELOPS IN UK

[Text] London April 23 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Pakhomov reports:

There are soldiers with submachine guns, hundreds of policemen and plainclothes agents in the check-in, luggage reception and waiting halls of the airport. People in long queues fidget, afraid of missing their domestic and international flights, as security staff and airline personnel go with a fine comb through the passengers' clothes and carry-on luggage. This is the picture of London's Heathrow Airport, one of the largest in the world. The NEWS OF THE WORLD newspaper ran a cartoon showing a line of passengers going out to embark upon their plane empty-handed and stark naked; a notice at the check-in counter reads that luggage and clothes are not permitted. All these "emergency precautions" have been introduced by the authorities under the pretext of "preventing acts of terrorism" following Washington's act of aggression against Libya with the complicity and assistance of Britain. Official propaganda is holding forth on "threats" allegedly made to British and American citizens and on "acts of terrorism" presumably hatched against them. This "anti-terrorist psychosis" has grown especially since an attempt was made last week to carry an explosive device aboard a Boeing-747 of the Israeli El Al Airline.

It is not yet known anything about the links of the criminal who tried to use his unwitting girlfriend to blow up the airliner -- if he had any links at all. Life in Britain today is characterized by the runaway growth of crime, including crimes which involve violence and acts of terrorism. This particular incident, however, is being used by London to fan up anti-Libyan psychosis in the country to "justify" the actions of the United States and the British Government, which are being condemned by the overwhelming majority of the Britons, and also to "prepare the ground" for possible new bandit attacks on Libya. The Elder Forest-86 Air Force exercises with the participation of U.S., British and other NATO warplanes and fresh "hawkish" statements made by Washington are a grim reminder of such possibilities.

The newspaper MORNING STAR gave a principled appraisal of the anti-Libyan campaign that is being whipped up in the USA and Britain. The allegations about the involvement of Libya in international terrorism, the newspaper said editorially, are absolutely at odds with political realities. The policy of state terrorism toward Libya, the newspaper stresses, is being pursued by the United States, whose act of aggression against that country, a major anti-imperialist force, is escalating the threat to world peace and forcefully demonstrates the true purpose of U.S. bases in Britain.

KOMAROV VISITS BRITAIN, DISCUSSES TRADE

LD240312 Moscow TASS in English 2003 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 23 TASS -- The state of and prospects for the development of commercial and economic cooperation between the Soviet Union and Great Britain were discussed during a meeting held today by USSR First Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade Nikolay Komarov and Great Britain's Secretary of State for Energy Peter Walker. Despite the change in the conditions of trade in connection with the fall of the prices of oil the Soviet Union will not give up its principled line at the development of commercial and economic relations with Western countries, including Great Britain, on the basis of equality, mutual advantage and non-discrimination, Nikolay Komarov said.

The USSR is prepared to develop business ties with Great Britain on the basis of the recently adopted new programme of the economic and industrial cooperation between the two countries for 1986-1990, said Nikolay Komarov. The sides agreed that energy is one of the spheres where substantial widening of bilateral cooperation is possible. There are prospects for cooperation in such areas as the creation of new kinds of engines, new energy conserving technologies, and the development of alternative sources of energy, Nikolay Komarov said. The development of bilateral business ties would be promoted if Great Britain dropped restrictions it applies in trade and crediting, said the USSR first deputy minister of foreign trade.

LUNKOV HAILS ITALIAN ROLE IN LIBYAN AFFAIR

PM231411 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 20 Apr 86 p 20

[Unattributed report: "Lunkov: 'Italy's Decisions Reasonable'"]

[Text] Naples -- The Italian Government's conduct in the Libyan affair has been "praised" by Soviet Ambassador to Italy Nikolay Lunkov in an interview to be published today by the Neapolitan daily IL MATTINO. "Craxi and Andreotti," he says, "tried to find a reasonable compromise to prevent the situation from getting out of hand." Having denied "any link between Moscow and the centers of terrorism," Lunkov goes on to denounce U.S. "state terrorism" against the Tripoli government, "which had denied any responsibility in the anti-American attacks." According to the Soviet ambassador, the U.S. attack signified "a blow to the European countries" as well as "a renewed attitude of defiance toward the Soviet Union."

Lunkov also stresses "the prudence and caution" of the Soviet authorities, "which want," he says, "good relations both with Europe and with the United States, particularly in the Mediterranean: The United States is 10,000 km away, whereas we are very close, because the Mediterranean and the Black Sea are part of the same region." Next, Lunkov says that the United States has created a very serious, explosive situation," in the Mediterranean. Having stated that "the Washington authorities confronted their allies with a predetermined decision," he reasserts "the Kremlin's willingness and desire to resolve the situation of conflict and to proceed along the peaceful path of negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament." "But," Lunkov concludes, "the United States is responding to the nuclear moratorium with defiance, with a dozen nuclear experiments, and with provocations in the Black Sea, Central America, and Libya."

ITALY SAID TO BE 'REAL U.S. AIRCRAFT CARRIER'

[From "The World Today" program presented by Igor Kudrin]

[Text] Under the heading, "NATO Has Nothing To Do With It -- Italy Is Full of U.S. Bases," L'UNITA carries an article saying in part that Italy is the Mediterranean country with the largest number of bases and foreign military forces on its territory. There are about 60 bases. In every NATO base there is a part belonging exclusively to the United States. Moreover, there are possibly even more U.S. sites. For example, the United States has at its exclusive disposal sites on Sardinia and at a number of air bases. Tens of villages have communications, information, and control terminals for U.S. Air Force military systems.

Italy thus has become a real U.S. aircraft carrier, a second Saratoga, whether it wants it or not. It only remains for me to add, comrades, that six U.S. vessels have returned to the Bay of Naples after being away for a month. In particular, the aircraft carrier Coral Sea is there after playing an important role in the aggression against Libya. By the way, the Italian fleet is prepared for major joint NATO maneuvers in the Mediterranean.

FRG GREENS PARTY DELEGATION VISITS MOSCOW

Meets Yeltsin

PM231540 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Talks at Moscow CPSU Gorkom"]

[Text] On 17 April B.N. Yeltsin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of Moscow CPSU Gorkom, received a delegation of the Green Party (FRG) comprising L. Beckmann, J. Dittfurth, and R. Trampert, its cochairman, and N. Kostede, member of the party's board. During the talks the guests were informed in detail about the work of the Moscow City party organization and all the capital's working people in implementing the 27th CPSU Congress decisions in the economic, social, and spiritual spheres. The talks were held in a friendly atmosphere.

Press Conference

[TASS report: "At the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Center"]

[Text] The Green Party (FRG) delegation which is visiting our country has held a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists. The delegation comprises L. Beckmann, J. Dittfurth, and R. Trampert, cochairman of the party, and N. Kostede, member of the board. The guests rated the results of the visit to the USSR highly, noting that the meetings and conversations with Soviet leaders, parliamentarians, representatives of the Soviet public, and scientists had been constructive and interesting and demonstrated a joint desire for mutual understanding on a wide range of questions.

L. Beckmann stressed that the Green Party fully supports the USSR's foreign policy initiatives contained in the 15 January statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and confirmed and subsequently developed at the 27th CPSU Congress. The Soviet proposals, the guest noted, taken together with the moratorium imposed on nuclear explosions, have for the first time provided an opportunity to begin a realistic and specific process of disarmament. It is regrettable that the United States and its allies did not give a positive response to those Soviet initiatives. The USSR's proposals on medium-range missiles are of special significance for us and we believe that the government of the FRG and other Western European countries should support them.

The Green Party representatives sharply criticized the unconcealed U.S. aggression against Libya. This was a bandit attack and an act of state terrorism, L. Beckmann stated. The Libyan events have shown for all to see that the United States is not only preparing wars but is also prepared to wage them. On the question of the FRG Government's decision to take part in the U.S. "star wars" plans, he stated that the U.S. SDI program is not a program for eliminating the nuclear threats but for enhancing and increasing it. The Green Party representatives noted that contacts with the CPSU are of great interest to them and that they intend to develop them.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON EVENTS IN LIBYA AFTER RAID

Shevardnadze Confirms Support

LD231634 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1600 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 23 Apr (TASS) -- Today, Eduard Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of foreign affairs, received Muhammad Sha'ban, secretary of the People's Committee of the People's Bureau of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah in the USSR, at his request. Muhammad Sha'ban handed a message to the Soviet leadership from Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution.

During the conversation they discussed the situation around Libya that has developed as a result of the U.S. armed aggression. It was noted that the barbaric attack on a sovereign Arab state -- the Libyan Jamahiriyah -- creates a real threat to the escalation of tension not only in the Mediterranean area but also far beyond its confines, and has a negative influence on the international climate as a whole.

Eduard Shevardnadze confirmed the USSR's solidarity with the friendly Libyan people in their struggle against the aggressive intrigues of the forces of imperialism.

Muhammad Sha'ban, on behalf of the Libyan leadership, expressed deep gratitude for the USSR's principled position.

Al-Qadhdhafi Speaks With Press

LD231816 Moscow TASS in English 1810 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 23 TASS -- TASS correspondents Vladimir Bogachev and Georgiy Shelenkov report:

The leader of the Libyan revolution Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi received here a group of Soviet journalists. During the conversation Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi expressed deep satisfaction with the Soviet Union's position on the events in the southern Mediterranean and stressed that in his speeches the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev had not only resolutely condemned the aggressor that attacked Libya but also seriously warned it.

We think highly of the proposals made by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev on the withdrawal of the Soviet and U.S. Navies from the Mediterranean, Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi said. But the American imperialists have brushed aside these constructive proposals. They did so in pursuit of the goals of their hegemonistic policy and acting at one with Zionist Israel in a bid to exert pressure on the Mediterranean countries, including the Arab ones.

We call upon the whole world to support the initiatives of the Soviet Union, which stated its readiness to withdraw its naval ships from the Mediterranean if the United States did the same.

We think that in the course of its aggression against Libya the leader of the Libyan revolution continued, the United States was training military cooperation with the NATO countries for possible operations on a larger scale.

Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi stressed that Libya had a possibility to make a strike at the U.S. 6th Fleet and NATO bases in southern Europe but decided against it. He said that, soberly assessing its responsibility for the cause of peace and responding to calls by different states as well as international and mass organizations, the revolutionary leadership of Libya decided not to allow an escalation of military activities which could broaden the conflict.

"We want to defeat imperialism through our courageous resistance, without being guided by a desire for revenge," Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi said. "By defending our land, we fight against imperialism which threatens all progressive forces of the world."

The leader of the Libyan revolution noted the provocative nature of the naval exercises now conducted by fleets of NATO countries with the United States at the head.

We appeal to the international public and our friends in the socialist camp to follow closely the development of events and display vigilance. We must create a broad front of peoples treasuring the ideals of peace and freedom in alliance with socialist countries headed by the USSR in order to counteract imperialism and neonazism.

The United States and Britain do not deserve to be permanent members of the United Nations Security Council because membership in that body obliges to protect peace but not to engage in armed aggressions.

Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi suggested that the United Nations headquarters be immediately transferred from the United States to Switzerland.

We will continue to offer staunch resistance to American imperialism, the Libyan leader stressed. Let us recall Vietnam. The heroic resistance of the Vietnamese and their struggle against American imperialism demonstrated to the whole world that freedom-loving people could not be defeated. If the American aggression continues. Libya may become another Vietnam for the USA. Washington should learn the lesson of the past.

Answering the question about the actions of the Libyan Armed Forces during the raids of the U.S. Air Force, Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi said: In launching their act of aggression against the Jamahiriyah, the Americans hoped for surprise. But their hopes failed. The Libyan forces were on their guard and met the enemy with strong fire, preventing the American pilots from hitting sites targeted in advance.

After U.S. air strikes at Libya's peaceful cities and villages, Reagan is called the killer of children, Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi said in conclusion. And Reagan deserves being thus called. The President of the United States declares against a just solution of the Palestinian problem, against the settlement in the southern Africa and northern Ireland. He supports the policy of terrorism which Israel conducts on occupied Arab lands. By his actions, Reagan compels to resort to violence the peoples against whom he practices the policy of state terrorism himself.

"No provocations of the U.S. military will compel us abandon the struggle against imperialism, the effort to rally the Arabs on a progressive basis, withdraw support from the peoples fighting for their just cause," the leader of the Libyan revolution said.

On behalf of the Libyan people, Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi expressed gratitude to the Soviet mass media that condemned resolutely the U.S. aggression, exposed real intentions of U.S. imperialism and called the attention of the world public to the United States piratic policy with regard to Libya.

Major Terrorist Act Planned

LD232124 Moscow TASS in English 2123 GMT 23 Apr 86

["Libyan Spokesman on Act of Provocation Prepared" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Tripoli April 23 TASS -- The information and culture secretary of the General People's Council of the Libyan Jamahiriyah, Al-Fayturi, told journalists that according to information supplied to Libya by friendly countries, including European ones, the CIA and the Israeli secret service, Mossad, were planning a major act of terrorism similar to the discotheque explosion in West Berlin. That action, according to the secretary, would be imputed to Libya to create another pretext for attacking the country. Libya, the secretary stressed, is warning world public opinion against the dangerous consequences of such an act of provocation.

U.S., Italy Accused

["U.S., Italian Secret Services Behind Terrorist Acts" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Kuwait April 23 TASS -- The Libyan Jamahiriyah has accused the USA's and Italy's secret services of engineering terroristic operations and planning to hold Libya responsible for them, Kuwait's news agency, KUNA, reported quoting a statement released by the Libyan People's Bureau in Rome (Embassy of the Libyan Jamahiriyah).

The statement said that those operations were aimed at undermining solidarity of people throughout the world with Libya, which fell victim to Washington's aggression. The U.S. CIA, it was pointed out in the document, undertook moves to undermine traditional relations of friendship between Italy and Libya. Using its agents, it, in particular, planned to stage an assassination attempt on the life of a West [word indistinct] ambassador in Italy.

Libyan Accused of Conspiracy

[Text] Rome Arpil 22 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksey Golayev reprots:

American secret services are trying to impute to Libya organization in 1985 of a conspriacy to assassinate the ambassadors of USA, Egypt and Saudi Arabia in Rome. Former employee of Libya's embassy in Italy Muhammad Fayturi was arrested there two days ago, in line with that slander. He is accused of having a hand in the conspiracy.

Libya's embassy in Italy distributed here today a statement, firmly refuting the very possibility of Muhammad Fayturi's involvement in the conspiracy to assassinate the ambassadors.

The statement stresses that former citizen of Libya Rajeb Baghdug [spelling as received] who was arrested in February 1985 in Italy for illegal possession of arms, earlier fled from People's Jamahiriyah. He is a doubled-dyed counterrevolutionary.

As is clear from press reports, M. Fayturi was arrested on the basis of Rajeb Baghdug's testimony. M. Mayturi, after completing his work at Libya's embassy in Italy, stayed here as an expert of a Libyan financial firm.

The statement of Libya's embassy in Italy points to the direct link between U.S. barbarous air raids on Libyan towns and the provocation against Libya in Italy. The Reagan administration, the statement says, was unable to find any serious proofs for its slanderous declarations on Libya's "involvement" in international terrorism and is now trying to fabricate a new "case" to justify its bandit raids. The aim of that operation, devised by the U.S. CIA and some elements, hostile to People's Jamahiriyah, is to mislead the world public opinion and to find a pretext for continued aggression against Libya, the statement stressed.

The embassy stated that Rajeb Baghdug is a CIA agent. He was recruited by the U.S. espionage agency in Paris late in 1984, the statement stresses. He was given precise instructions from the CIA and the task to try to return to Libya to organize "the fifth column" there. As to Baghdug's stay in Italy, the authors of the statement point to a certain coordination of actions between that CIA agent and Italian secret services. Suffice it to say that after the arrest and his testimony he was "temporarily released" and is now "under care" of investigation bodies.

NATO Maneuvers Cause Alarm

LD232340 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Leonid Rassadin report from Tripoli]

[Text] Today I visited again the densely populated district of Ben Ashur, which was barbarically bombed by the U.S. Air Force. Work to clear the debris continues. The municipal authorities are making great efforts to help residents of the Ben Ashur district.

At the same time, here in Tripoli they cannot fail to take note of the fact that an unbridled anti-Libyan campaign continues in Washington and a number of Western European countries. Libyans are, in particular, expressing indignation at the expulsion of a group of Libyan citizens from Britain without any cause. And, of course, the greatest alarm is aroused by the provocative NATO maneuvers in the Mediterranean. In this regard, it is not being ruled out that the United States is preparing for the next gangster-like foray against the Libyan Jamahiriyah.

Soviet Position Praised

LD231732 Moscow TASS in English 1709 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 23 TASS -- Talking to journalists in the Libyan capital, the Information and Culture Secretary of Libya's General People's Committee Al-Fayturi urged them to tell the truth about everything they saw in the Libyan Jamahiriyah during these days of trial for the Libyan people. By pursuing a policy of aggression towards Libya, he said, American imperialsim is subverting the foundations of world peace and grossly trampling the commonly recognized norms of international law. The Libyan people, the secretary stressed, think highly of the position of the friendly Soviet Union, which resolutely condemned the gory actions of the American aggressor and warned it.

The Libyan spokesman reiterated that Libya welcomed the Soviet peace initiatives, including those related to the Mediterranean.

SOVIET, PDRY TRADE UNIONS ISSUE STATEMENT

PM231150 Moscow TRUD in Russian 17 Apr 86 p 3

["Joint Statement of the AUCCTU and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen General Confederation of Workers Trade Unions"]

[Text] A delegation of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen [PDRY] General Confederation of Workers Trade Unions Preparatory Committee headed by confederation Chairman Rajih Salih Naji, has been on a friendly working visit to the USSR at the AUCCTU's invitation.

During the visit the delegation held talks with a Soviet trade union delegation headed by AUCCTU Chairman S.A. Shalayev. The talks proceeded in an atmosphere of cordiality and mutual understanding.

AUCCTU representatives, the joint statement says, informed the delegation in detail about the 27th CPSU Congress' decisions aimed at accelerating the country's socioeconomic development, the concept of providing comprehensive international security system put forward by the congress, and the trade union organizations' role and tasks in implementing the 27th CPSU Congress' decisions practically.

The leaders of the General Confederation of Workers Trade Unions, for their part, explained the origins and causes of the tragic events of 13 January and talked about the process of normalizing the situation in the country, which is being carried out successfully under the leadership of the Yemen Socialist Party based on the principles of devotion to the ideals of scientific socialism and proletarian internationalism.

On behalf of Soviet trade unions the delegation expressed their solidarity and support for Democratic Yemen's working people in overcoming the consequences of the events of 13 January and their wishes for all-around success in strengthening and further increasing the Yemeni working class' revolutionary gains along the path of socialist orientation.

The sides expressed deep concern over the grave danger of war looming over the world created by the unrestrained nuclear missile arms race unleashed by the U.S. Administration and its desire to spread it to outer space, as well as the growing aggressiveness of the forces of imperialism, racism, Zionism, and reaction. The doctrine of "neoglobalism" proclaimed by U.S. imperialism and the strong-arm tactics employed by it in international relations are fraught with the grave danger of a world nuclear catastrophe.

Deeply concerned at the destiny of peace, the AUCCTU and the General Confederation of Workers Trade Unions attach crucial significance to implementing the large-scale program proposed by the Soviet Union for the phased abolition of nuclear and other kinds of weapons of mass destruction by the end of the 20th century. They fervently welcome the Soviet initiatives in implementing this task, in particular, on ending nuclear tests and preventing the militarization of outer space.

Participants in the talks resolutely condemned the aggressive course of imperialist forces, the continuing pressure on progressive Arab countries, the preparation for military aggression against Nicaragua, and the escalating interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan and Angola.

They indignantly castigated the U.S. Administration's glaring act of armed aggression against sovereign Libya and resolutely demanded an end to the policy of banditry and blackmail against independent developing countries upholding the path of autonomous development.

They confirmed their full support for the struggle for a just and comprehensive Near East settlement on the basis of ensuring the Palestinian people's legitimate rights and creating an independent state on their own national territory.

Representatives of the AUCCTU and the General Confederation of Workers Trade Unions castigated the system of apartheid and colonial oppression in southern Africa and confirmed their solidarity with African working people's courageous struggle. They support the proposal to turn the Indian Ocean into a peace zone.

The sides consider that in the present, tense international situation it is the prime duty of the organized working class and the entire world trade union movement to step up in every possible way the struggle to prevent mankind's nuclear destruction and restore the world to the path of peaceful coexistence and cooperation among the peoples.

The AUCCTU and the General Confederation of Workers Trade Unions expressed satisfaction at the fraternal relations successfully developing between them on the basis of the long-term Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation signed in December 1982 and confirmed their desire to further strengthen and expand them.

The sides attach great significance to improving their collaboration in the international arena and within the framework of the WFTU and the ILO. They stressed the importance of actively participating in the work of the 11th World Trade Union Congress to be held in Berlin in September 1986.

POLYAKOV DELINEATES SOVIET OUTLOOK ON MIDEAST

PM221410 Cairo AL-AHALI in Arabic 16 Apr 86 pp 2, 10

[Report on unattributed interview with Vladimir Polyakov, chief of the USSR Foreign Ministry's Near East Department, in Cairo; date not given]

[Text] In an interview a few hours before he left Cairo, Polyakov said:

The aim of my tour was to exchange views with the officials in Damascus, Amman, and Cairo on developments in the region, means of solving the Middle East problem, and bilateral relations between the Soviet Union and Syria, Jordan, and Egypt. There can be no doubt that these meetings were useful and provided a real opportunity for an exchange of views on future prospects and all important issues.

I explained the Soviet Union's position on all issues of interest to the peoples of the region, especially the question of the Israeli occupation of Arab territories, the Palestinian question, and the search for practical ways of promoting a just, lasting, and comprehensive settlement that would establish peace in the Middle East and guarantee the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and to an independent Palestinian state, and that would liberate all the terrorists occupied by Israel in 1967 and provide security and peace for the states of the region. These are the principles and foundations contained in the Soviet proposals of July 1984.

The Soviet Union believes the way to achieve such a solution is through an international conference attended by all concerned parties especially the PLO, which is the Palestinian people's sole legitimate representative -- on an equal footing with all other participating states. The conference should be held under the supervision of the United Nations and the co-chairmanship of the Soviet Union and the United States. Participation by the five permament members [of the UN Security Council] would depend on the circumstances under which the conference is held and on their ability to contribute to progress toward the conference's objectives.

The Soviet Union believes that when it convenes the conference will form a number of ad hoc committees within it, but the basic general issues will remain the responsibility of the conference as a whole. We will submit to the conference the Soviet proposals that we consider to be constructive, balanced, and in the interest of all the peoples and states of the region. As the Arabs know, these proposals take into consideration and are in full harmony with the basic principles of the Fes and Casablanca Arab summit resolutions.

We in the Soviet Union believe that settlement of the Middle East question requires collective efforts and should be comprehensive. Unilateral and partial solutions are in the interest of Israel and the United States and against the interests of the Arabs and the Palestinians. The concept offered by the United States and Israel would turn the conference into a mere cover for separate settlements with each Arab state taken in isolation and the conference would just crown such settlements. The serious implication of this U.S.-Israeli approach is that the United States and Israel would succeed in imposing the solution they want on the Arab states against Arab and Palestinian interests. We reject this concept of an international conference.

The Soviet Union has no selfish aims and no tendentious self-interests in the Middle East. The Arabs' 30 to 40 years of experience with us has confirmed the Soviet Union's good intentions and has confirmed that the Soviet Union is a friend of the Arabs and defends their rights. Our proposals for the settlement of the Middle East conflict have been approved by all the Arab sides as well as the PLO.

Only Israel and the United States have rejected them because they see the Soviet proposals as a solid barrier against the separate deals they want to impose on the peoples and governments of the region.

There is a fundamental principle -- which we believe in -- in our foreign policy. That principle is that international and regional problems and conflicts could and should be settled by peaceful means taking into consideration the interests of the parties concerned. We know that Syria and the PLO both want an international conference.

This principle and our relentless efforts to solve problems by peaceful means does not take anything away from any Arab state's right to self-defense against any military aggression and right to liberate its territory from foreign occupation by any available means especially in circumstances when Israel persists in its aggressive expansionist policy toward the neighboring Arab states and the Palentinian people.

Our atttitude toward the PLO is clear and unambiguous. We strongly believe in the unity of the Palestinian national liberation movement within the PLO and we are against any split or division within Palestinian ranks. The unity of the Palestinian revolution's factions is a fundamental and important force against imperialism. We have said and are still saying that divisions in Palestinian ranks and differences between the Palestinian groups serve neither the general Arab interests nor the Palestinian interests. They only serve the interests of Israel and imperialism.

During our meetings with Yasir 'Arafat and the Palestinian leaderships we firmly emphasized the importance of overcoming differences and uniting on the basis of anti-imperialist struggle. As everyone knows, the Soviet Union is in contact with all the main Palestinian organizations and we are resolutely trying, through these contacts, to convince them of the dangers resulting from their disunity and of the damage caused to their national interests as a consequence of that.

We very much hope that the Palestinians will, in adherence to their national interests, succeed in surmounting their differences because unless they unite their ranks and their struggle, the main objective of the Palestinian people -- which is setting up an independent Palestinian state and fulfilling the right of self-determination and the other legitimate rights of the Palestinian people -- cannot be achieved.

We have regarded the Amman agreement as an unsound step because it does not help the achievement of a just and comprehensive peaceful settlement. The United States has exploited the Amman agreement to impose the U.S.-Israeli solution on the peoples of the region. The Amman agreement did not meet with the approval of all the Palestinians. It caused more division and destroyed Palestinian unity. It also aroused fears in many Arab states, many of whom did not support the agreement because it ran contrary to the proposals unanimously approved by the Arabs at the Fes summit conference.

The events that occurred in the year following the signing of the agreement show that there were no positive results.

The Soviet Union has condemned the aggressive U.S. policies and moves in the Middle East, especially the recent moves against the Libyan Jamahiriyah. There can be no doubt that the recent U.S. moves against Libya prove that the Reagan administration is of an aggressive nature and that it is trying to impose its hegemony on the region and the world and to fight all national liberation movements and resist liberation of nations.

The United States uses the 6th Fleet not only to exert pressure on Libya but also to put pressure on and commit aggression against Syria, Lebanon, Egypt, and all the Mediterranean states.

It is the iron fist with which Reagan threatens other states. The Soviet Union most firmly condemns this aggressive policy.

General Secretary Gorbachev has proposed that the U.S. and Soviet fleets be withdrawn from the Mditerranean and that talks be held with a view to turning the region into a peaceful region remote from U.S. pressures and military threats. The United States, however, immediately rejected these proposals. Before that, the Reagan administration rejected all of the Soviet initiatives for the promotion of world peace. It rejected Gorbachev's proposals announced on 15 January 1986 calling for the liquidation of nuclear weapons by the year 2000 to rid the world of the threat of a nuclear catastrophe. It also rejected a proposal to end the arms race and a proposal for the nonmilitarization of space.

We want outer space to be a source of solar energy in the interest of the whole world including the Soviet and Egyptian peoples without nuclear-tipped missiles flying around in it. We call for an end to massive spending on instruments of total destruction. We urge that this wealth be saved and used to help the states of the world achieve progress and development.

USSR-Egyptian bilateral relations are not a transient or new phenomenon. They have technical foundations that were strengthened and consolidated in the days of national leader Jamal 'Abd al-Nasir. We cooperated in all fields in the interests of the Egyptian and Soviet peoples. That cooperation helped promote peace and security in the region. We are not responsible for the damage done to our bilateral relations under Al-Sadat's reign.

At present President Husni Mubarek is pursuing a policy aimed at developing relations of friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union. We on our part welcome that and are completely ready for accord with Egypt in the fields of trade, economic, and cultural exchanges and political dialogue; we are fully prepared to help solve the Egyptian people's development problems. At present we exchange official delegations and visits. President Mubarak and Comrade Gorbachev exchange messages. Our trade relations are improving and we are about to develop our cooperation and economic relations.

There is a reasonable level of relations at present. They are being developed and the obstacles and difficulties and accumulations dating back to Al-Sadat's reign are gradually being surmounted. We believe that this is in the interest of both countries and peoples.

CIA 'PLAN' TO ATTACK U.S. MISSIONS, BLAME LIBYA

LD240416 Moscow TASS in English 0911 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Managua April 23 TASS -- According to a statement of the Nicaraguan committee of solidarity with peoples of the world circulated here, the bandit U.S. air raids of the Libyan cities and the debate in the U.S. Congress over the allocation of another millions of dollars for Somozista mercenaries are both characterized by cynicism and a brazen disregard for the basic norms of international law and human morale.

Alejandro Serrano, head of the Supreme Court of Nicaragua, said in a conversation with journalists that the Reagan administration was grossly trampling underfoot the existing international laws. He emphasized that U.S. terroristic actions against Libya and Nicaragua put in jeopardy universal peace.

The NUEVA NICARAGUA NEWS AGENCY has exposed the intention of the U.S. secret services to organize attacks on U.S. diplomatic missions in Central American countries and ascribe them to some 'Libyan terrorists' who are allegedly based on the Nicaraguan territory.

According to NUEVA NICARAGUA, the purpose of the criminal plan of the CIA is to 'justify' the financing of the terrorist Somozista groups and direct armed actions of the U.S. military against Nicaragua.

'CABANAS-86' TO CENTER ON 'SPECIAL OPERATIONS'

LD241004 Moscow TASS in English 0711 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Havana April 24 TASS -- According to Arthur Scop, spokesman of the U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa, the second stage of the American-Honduran military exercise codenamed "Cabanas-86" which is scheduled for the beginning of May will be devoted to 'special operations'.

In the military exercise, the next in turn, due to be held close to the border with revolutionary Nicaragua 2,000 U.S. officers and men will take part, including "Green Berets" of the 82nd Airborne Division which gained ill fame during the U.S. armed aggression against Grenada.

Captain Pena, representative of the General Staff of the Honduran Army, admitted, in his turn, that during the second stage of the "Cabanas-86" military exercise U.S. soldiers would train so-called 'anti-guerrilla' operations in the Departments of Olancho, Gracias-a-Dios and Paraiso.

Yevtushenko Criticizes Curbs on Personal Opinion

PM231006 Moscow SOVETSKAYA KULTURA in Russian 15 Apr 86 p 3

[Article by USSR State Prize Winner Yevgeniy Yevtushenko under the rubric "Direct Speech": "Personal Opinion" — first five paragraphs are SOVETSKAYA KULTURA introduction]

[Text] "Direct speech" in the Russian language denotes someone's statement cited verbatim in a report. However, on inaugurating our new rubric, we attach a different meaning to this term.

The 27th CPSU Congress set tasks of enormous historical importance to the party and the people. These tasks presuppose dynamic acceleration of society's socioeconomic and cultural development; active reorientation of people's social conscience; further improvement of socialist democracy; and struggle against inertia, indifference, bureaucracy, and other extant negative phenomena. This party policy, elaborated by the congress, encounters nationwide support by Soviet people.

Support both in words and in deeds. We are living at a time when even words — opportune and weighty, concentrating the spirit of the time — become a social or civic action. The words by our contemporary, having accepted with his mind and heart the party's large-scale designs as his personal cause. Particularly the authoritative word by masters of literature and art, called upon to express most convincingly the mood of the masses at crucial stages of the country's destiny.

Our new rubric is an invitation to speak out directly — without beating around the bush, as people say — on the most burning questions and problems of the day, be they economic or social, cultural or moral, to speak out about everything that prevents us from unleashing at full strength the might of the human factor for the sake of fulfilling the party program. We invite "Direct speech" by painters and party workers, veterans and our young contemporaries, educationists, scientific workers, economic leaders, workers, and kolkhoz members — all who think and act in the interests of the country, who daily devote their experience, knowledge, talent, and work to the nationwide cause of accelerating society's socioeconomic development.

The new rubric is being inaugurated by Yevgeniy Yevtushenko. [end introduction]

The terms "the people" and "mankind" connote to us primarily individuals. Not only famous ones, however, because famous people are by no means always the best representatives of their people and of mankind.

Sometimes personal opinion costs dearly. But there can be no individuals without a correct personal opinion, nor can there be a people without individuals. Personal opinion evolves into the opinion of the people when it marches boldly in defiance of timorous and compromising depersonalization. Personal opinion evolves into the opinion of the people when it is based on concern for the people rather than on self-centered egoism. Inward-oriented personal opinion is self-destructive. Personal opinion creates an individual when it is fearlessly expressed for the sake of others. Such personal opinion ceases to be purely personal and becomes the voice of all others. Provided only, of course, that people do not attempt to stifle all other opinions by their personal opinion. The fresh wind of publicity also means creative freedom, but not in its narrow, literary meaning; it means creative freedom for the whole people, including literature. Today's fresh wind comprises personal opinions, the breath of the multitude of people who constitute the people. But, in order to ensure that this fresh wind of personal opinion is not constrained by officialdom's paper clips, there must be no acceptance of any forms of depersonalization.

A tactlessly distorted quotation from Nekrasov — "You may not be a sportsman, but you must be a citizen!" — was being flaunted above a small rayon stadium somewhere in the north. People used to decorate — and still do — the blank walls of new buildings with paintings depicting deformed gigantic figures with fresh pseudo-optimistic expressions on their faces, holding unrealistically large sheaves or hammers in their hands. At best, such "agitation" is ignored; at worst, however, it is counterproductive, generating derisive skepticism and even cynicism at times. The time has come to replace the cosmetic embellishment of reality with the businesslike solution of real problems. This is now the main direction of our life. Some orators, attempting in the old-fashioned way to insinuate overtones of flattery in the businesslike atmosphere, are deservedly called to order. People making importunate appeals "to the top" in connection with issues which can, given elementary independence, be resolved at other levels, run against the fair and firm advice "not to load everything on the government's back" but to find solutions by themselves. The constructive-critical approach, the condemnation of exaggeration and showiness, and the development of democratic publicity — these are encouraging signs of the new time. Publicity is out of the question without the precious right of unpunishable personal opinion.

If personal opinion is mistaken, it can and must be corrected by collective opinion, but without crude administrative methods, without suppression — by means of conclusive comradely conviction. But the collective opinion of the people does not exist without the right to personal opinion. The opinion of the people is not a circular released "from the top," but actually the sum total of personal opinions. This idea was brilliantly expressed in the past by Andrey Platonov: "Without me, the people is incomplete."

There were times when the exaggeration of the role of one single individual was encouraged, while the roles of all others were reduced to those of the lamentably notorious "cogs." One single opinion, and often incompetent at that, regulated not only domestic and foreign policy but also biology, linguistics, cybernetics, music, and literature. Other personal opinions, even if they were the opinions of leading specialists in the spheres in question, were ignored and at times even punishable as opinions that were supposedly opposed to "the opinion of the people." The linkup of one single opinion with the levers for the implementation of ideas and the exclusion of many other important opinions from these levers resulted in quite a few errors; and the price which we still have to pay today is the lagging behind in a number of sectors of science and production. It is hardly likely that all these tragic errors were ill intentioned. But the subjective volitional "This is how it must be done!" has no moral right to take the form of an order unless it has been preceded by the interrogative "How should it be done?" addressed to the millions of opinions of the people.

As far as Lenin was concerned, his contacts with peasants' petitioners, with Putilov Plant workers , with Red Guards, and with Maksim Gorkiy were not a play at democracy covering up volitional actions predetermined by him. Educated by Nekrasov's "Reflections at the Main Entrance," Lenin left the door of the first socialist state in the world open to the multifaceted personal opinions of the people. Only such an open door is the door to true socialism. Giving the memorable triune advice to our young people — "Learn, learn, and learn..." — Lenin not only taught but himself also learned constantly from reality, unafraid to courageously admit his mistakes and alter his initial decisions. Lenin was one of the very few in history to set an example of a professional politician who never elevated his personal opinion above the opinion of the wisest of advisers — reality. When foreign correspondents persistently asked: "Will the New Economic Policy last a long time?", Lenin invariably answered that life would show. This was the source of the strength of his opinion — principled but flexible, adapting to life itself instead of lopping off life's legs to squeeze it into the Procrustean bed of an opinion that is unchangeable and ossified once and for all. Intolerance and highly uncomplimentary sharpness in intraparty discussions were combined in Lenin with administrative tolerance and respect for personal opinion, even when he either did not share it or shared it only partially. He keenly valued all the best qualities of his comrades who opposed him and, while criticizing them, he nonetheless posted them to those sectors of the civil war or of construction where these best qualities could be displayed. The Bolsheviks achieved victory in the civil war precisely because their slogan — "Peace to the peoples! Land to the peasants!" — was based on millions of personal opinions which became the opinion of the people.

Stalin's famous address to the people at the most dangerous period of the Great Patriotic War had a somewhat unexpected and human beginning — "Brothers and sisters" — and it touched the multitude of hearts that still suffered from so many unhealed wounds inflicted by undeserved losses and insults. The opinion that "The enemy will be routed, victory will be ours" was not just a personal opinion at the time — it was the opinion of the people. The fusion of the state and the people — therein lies the secret of that great victory. Following the victory, however, the opinion of yesterday's "brothers and sisters" seemed to become immaterial. Had the peasants been asked their personal opinion at the time, they would have said that family grain must not be appropriated just for the sake of plan showiness, that domestic livestock must not be seized, and that payment must not be based on working days earned only on paper because all this would undermine our agriculture which had already suffered much. But they were not asked for their personal opinions. Had our readers and music lovers been asked for their personal opinions, they would have said that accusations of antipopular attitude [nenarodnost] must not be leveled either against Anna Akhmatova, who during the war wrote "Our clocks have struck the hour of courage, and courage will not desert us," or against Shostakovich whose Leningrad Symphony became a universal symbol of our motherland's invincibility. But they were not asked for their personal opinions.

Very much is being done now, although far from everything, to swiftly boost our agriculture and the living standards of our grain-growers; both Akhmatova and Shostakovich are recognized as Soviet classics by the whole people. But have we the right to forget the bitter lessons taught by history, which has proved the pernicious nature of any gap between opinion "from the top" and the opinion of the people? These bitter lessons should by no means lead us to historical nihilism, to the erasure of all our great victories, be they in building or in war, achieved by us against all odds, even in the most difficult years. The newborn socialism did not have at hand any ready-made manual according to which it could build itself. Our socialism is the actual living manual from which we must not tear either the heroic pages of victories or the tragic pages of losses and mistakes, because otherwise neither we nor the future generations will be able to learn from this manual.

People exuding creative energy, based on specific knowledge of the people's needs, are today taking up leadership positions in our country's rayons, oblasts, and republics. The tasks that have been assigned to them regarding scientific and production intensification cannot be solved without intensification of the importance of personal opinions, of the opinion of the people. The radical economic reforms which are undertaken or are still to come must be bolstered by revolutionary practicality, a practicality which is flexible in the Leninist fashion and which is impossible without the wings of spirituality. There will be no development of economic thinking without the development of thinking as such. Bold transforming solutions cannot be implemented under conditions of moral unpreparedness for radical transformations, or of cowardice because cowardice creates an impassable quagmire in the path of even the most valuable initiatives. There is no doubt that our new leadership wants to do everything to help the people live better. But the people must also help the leadership both by their labor and by the frank openness of their personal opinions, expressed not for the sake of effect but for the sake of the common cause which cannot be split between opinion "from above" and opinion "from below." The "suppose-something-goes-wrong-ers" threaten us that publicity could turn into anarchy. But even when our state, in its early days, was surrounded on all sides by 14 hostile powers while being internally torn by civil war and devastation, Lenin was not afraid to speak with utmost frankness and most sharply about bureaucracy, about communist arrogance (komchvanstvo), about speculators and bribe-takers, thus seizing from the enemies of socialism their favorite opportunity to take advantage of our own silence. Truth coming from a friend is medicine; coming from evil hands, it is poison. Now that our state has matured and grown stronger, we must be even less afraid of our own critically frank personal opinions because this frankness is a sign of our maturity and strength, while the smoothing over of sharp corners is a sign of weakness. The fear of "losing face" by the "suppose-something-goes-wrong-ers" more often than not results precisely in losing face. Public silence is a covert form of anarchy. Nothing can be more harmful than people voting obediently, with their formally raised hands driven not by the commandment of their hearts and reason but by inertia. Such formal voting later takes the form of willing or unwilling sabotage of the very resolutions for which they have just voted. Of course, publicity must not be an end in itself. Publicity must not be transformed into a public platform for people who have nothing to say. We are not advocating publicity for garrulous nonsense, but rather for ideas which can be transformed into energetic actions.

We have already, in a relative brief period of time, done much for the development of publicity — working people's letters and reports covering party conferences and production meetings offer more gripping reading matter, with their Bolshevik poignancy standing out in comparison with many toothless pseudocivic scribblings. The assertive development of statements emanating from the public at large at times overtakes our professional publicists in terms of civic boldness. Leaders not only criticize workers within their apparatus, but at times courageously subject themselves to self-criticism, and this is what one would like to hear from the mouths of some of our writers who are churning out their boring impersonal novels which are at odds with the demands of the time. We have already learned to speak openly about many of today's most urgent problems, although not about all of them. But publicity with regard to the present is now greater than publicity with regard to the past. In order to boldly resolve today's problems, we must not be timid about our own history, which contains the roots of today's problems.

In contrast with the calls for civic boldness and truthfulness, we have constant opposition by the "suppose-something-goes-wrong-ers" who are striving to level, smooth over, and reduce to a common denominator the views concerning many historical phenomena and today's life. Using all possible means to prevent writers, directors, painters, scientists, and workers from expressing their personal opinions, these hopelessly obsolete dinosaurs of sham custodianship nonetheless attempt to elevate their own personal opinions above all others. If a technical commission makes a negative decision on the design of a new aircraft and yet the aircraft, regardless of this decision, is nevertheless produced and flies to the glory of our motherland, then such a technical commission must not remain immune to public and moral control. The time has come to make it part of our practice that people who have blocked the path of valuable inventions or have prevented the publication of literary works, the presentation of plays and movies, or the exhibition of paintings which have subsequently gained recognition by the whole people, must be adjudged incompetent.

One writer who served as a frontline soldier and, together with other writers, resolutely supported my poem "Taboo" [Fuku] when attempts were being made to block it, told me some very important comradely words: "Of course, I perceive some historical facts in a different fashion.... Both of us, however, are entitled to express our different opinions because they are both based on shared love for the motherland; I am bound to defend your right, while you are bound to defend mine...." It cannot be said more precisely or more simply. This concept must be fundamental not only in the practice of our publishing houses but also in the practice of the democratic development of publicity as a whole.

The Soviet leader who speaks from a world platform for the sake of delivering mankind from nuclear catastrophe; the party congress delegates who delivered businesslike and energetic speeches embodying millions of opinions of the people instead of formal eulogies; the metal-worker who takes the floor at a meeting on the spur of the moment and impartially speaks the workers' truth in the face of bosses who uneasily shrug their shoulders; the milkmaid who has forgotten the slip of paper handed to her and whose every single word comes from the long-suffered peasant's heart; the scientist who fights a principled battle against pseudo-scientific concepts which fetter advanced thinking; the writer who expresses profound concern over the fate of northern rivers from the platform of the congress of Russian literati — we are all equal and responsible to history, and our personal opinions flow together, like rivers, into the single opinion of the people.

The great power of personal opinion is the lever of collective democracy. But personal opinions are not just words.

Our struggle for peace and the fruits of our labor — wheat ears laden with tomorrow's grain, streams of milk tinkling into pails, beautiful bridges, great scientific discoveries, truthful books, and fascinating shows — must also be part of our personal opinions, fused into the single opinion of the people who wish happiness and peace not only for themselves but also for the whole of mankind.

Council of Ministers Reviews Productivity Indicators

PM221510 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 2

[TASS report: "At the USSR Council of Ministers"]

[Text] A USSR Council of Ministers session was held on 18 April to examine the results of the fulfillment of the State Plan for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR and USSR State Budget in the first quarter of 1986.

Proceeding on the basis of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, the USSR Council of Ministers demanded that USSR ministries and departments and union republics' councils of ministers carry out all the necessary measures to consistently and steadily implement the congress decisions, the principles of the Central Committee Political Report to the congress, and the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR in 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000.

Having discussed the reports by N.V. Talyzin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and chairman of the USSR Gosplan, and B.I. Gostev, USSR minister of finance, on the national economic performance in the first quarter of this year, the USSR Council of Ministers noted that as a result of widespread socialist competition and a high degree of creative activity by labor collectives on the implementation of the congress decisions and the implementation of measures to establish order and discipline, the development rate has increased, economic efficiency has improved, and measures are being carried out to improve the people's well-being.

The increase in industrial production in the first quarter of 1986 was 6.7 percent compared with the first quarter of 1985 (the annual plan is 4.3 percent). The plan for the sale of industrial output was fulfilled by 102 percent and all union republics and industrial ministries fulfilled it, with the exception of the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry. Positive advances have taken place in key industrial sectors, above all in machine building, metallurgy, and the gas industry. The results of the economic activity of industrial associations and enterprises operating in the new management conditions are higher than in industry as a whole.

Working people in agriculture have basically completed preparations for spring sowing and have embarked on fieldwork. Livestock wintering is coming to a close in better conditions than last year, and public-sector livestock raising productivity has improved. Purchases of livestock and poultry increased by 7.6 percent compared with the first quarter of 1985 and purchases of milk and eggs increased by 6 percent, which made it possible to improve supplies of foodstuffs for the population.

Existing enterprises are being reconstructed and retooled on a larger scale.

Railroad transport operations improved. Some 35.7 million metric tons of freight were shipped in excess of the plan.

Labor productivity in industry increased by 6.3 percent compared with an annual plan of 4.1 percent. Some 94 percent of the increase in industrial output and the entire increase in railroad transport shipments were due to improved labor productivity and there was an increase in profits.

Implementation of the social program of the 12th 5-Year Plan began. The average monthly pay of workers and employees in the first quarter of 1986 was 3 percent up on the first quarter of 1985, retail trade turnover (not counting sales of alcoholic drinks, which have been substantially reduced) increased by 8.6 percent, and sales of consumer services to the population increased by 7.5 percent. A large number of apartment blocks, hospitals, and children's preschool establishments were constructed on the basis of state capital investments.

At the same time, the USSR Council of Ministers noted that certain national economic sectors and a number of associations, enterprises, and organizations have been slow to restructure their activity in the light of the new demands and operated below their potential in the first quarter of 1986. The overall plan for the sale of products was overfulfilled, but the plan taking into account delivery contract pledges was underfulfilled by R2.1 billion. The biggest lag was at associations and enterprises of the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry, the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry, and fruit and vegetable farming enterprises of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee. A number of USSR ministries and departments and union republican councils of ministers failed to fulfill plans on new equipment and are responsible for a considerable lag in the construction of social and cultural facilities.

The USSR State Budget was fulfilled in the first quarter of 1986 by 96.9 percent for income and by 96 percent for expenditure.

The USSR Council of Ministers made it incumbent on ministers, leaders of USSR departments, and union republics' councils of ministers to adopt, on the basis of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, effective measures to consolidate and develop the positive results achieved by the national economy in the first quarter of 1986, to ensure steady, smooth work by subordinate associations, enterprises, and organizations, and to unconditionally fulfill and overfulfill plan targets and socialist pledges for 1986 in order to take a considerable practical step forward this year in the implementation of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions and lay a strong foundation for fulfillment of the 12th 5-Year Plan targets.

The main effort should be directed toward accelerating scientific and technical progress, introducing advanced technology, updating production capital, ensuring a fundamental advance in improving output quality, and creating conditions for taking national economic sectors to the highest frontiers of science and technology. It is necessary to tighten up economy measures, ensure rational utilization of all resources, increase cadres' responsibility for the job in hand, and improve work on switching associations and enterprises to the new management conditions.

The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee and union republican councils of ministers were told to adopt all the requisite measures to carry out high-quality spring fieldwork at the right time, to make wide use of intensive techniques in agricultural production, to make rational use of the material and technical resources allocated to agriculture, and to ensure prompt preparations for harvesting and reception and processing of products.

There was acute criticism of the unsatisfactory state of affairs in capital construction. Ministers, leaders of USSR departments, and union republican councils of ministers were told to examine the entire range of questions connected with improving construction production efficiency, fundamentally improving the quality of construction, and concentrating capital investments and to adopt effective measures.

In order to satisfy growing demand for the requisite range of high-quality consumer goods and to expand the services sphere, USSR ministries and departments and union republican councils of ministers were told to ensure the unconditional fulfillment of the relevant plan targets.

CPSU Central Committee Politburo Members G.A. Aliyev, V.I. Vorotnikov, and L.N. Zaykov and CPSU Central Committee Secretary A.P. Biryukova participated in the USSR Council of Ministers session work.

The session was addressed by N.I. Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

Ministries' 'Disregard' for Pollution Cited

PM181449 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 18 Apr 86 p 2

[TASS report: "Concern for Nature"]

[Text] On 16 April a routine session of the USSR Council of Ministers Presidium commission on environmental conservation and the rational use of natural resources was held.

The commission examined the question of the state and measures for the improvement of the appraisal of plans for the construction and reconstruction of national economy projects and of the ecological appraisal of new equipment, technology, and materials with respect to meeting the demands of nature conservation legislation. It was noted that many ministries and departments are failing to pay due attention to these questions. The plans for the construction and reconstruction of production projects often include manufacturing processes which fail to meet nature conservation requirements. The irrational use of land is allowed. Because of these shortcomings the USSR Gosstroy expert review carrying out a selective check on plans submitted by ministries and departments returns a considerable proportion of these plans for completion. Insufficient account is taken of demands for environmental conservation and the rational use of natural resources during the revision and elaboration of all-union and departmental norms for technological planning.

The commission instructed the USSR Gosstroy, USSR ministries and departments, and union republic councils of ministers to ensure a fundamental improvement in the appraisal of planning documents for the construction and reconstruction of national economy projects with respect to the observance of the requirements of nature consvervation legislation. The State Committee for Science and Technology, the USSR Gosstroy, the USSR Ministry of Health, the USSR Ministry of Land Reclamation and Water Resources, and the State Committee for Hydrometeorology and Environmental Control in conjunction with other interested ministries and departments of the USSR and union republic councils of ministers have been instructed to prepare proposals on the procedure for carrying out the ecological appraisal of new equipment, technology, and materials.

According to the reports from the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification, the USSR Ministry of the Coal Industry, and the Pavlodar Oblispolkom, there has been an examination of the question of measures taken to conserve the environment and to make rational use of the natural resources in the region of the Ekibastuz fuel and energy complex. The commission drew the attention of the leadership of the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification and the USSR Ministry of the Coal Industry to the disregard they have displayed for the requirements of nature conservation legislation at the enterprises under their jurisdiction in the Ekibastuz region. These enterprises allow considerable pollution of the air and water expanses and are undertaking in an unsatisfactory manner the construction and operation of nature conservation projects.

The commission has obliged the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification and the USSR Ministry of the Coal Industry to take exhaustive steps to meet the demands of legislation on nature conservation at the enterprises under their jurisdiction in the Ekibastuz fuel and energy complex, and the Pavlodar Oblispolkom has been instructed to step up its monitoring of the activity of these enterprises with respect to nature conservation.

There was also an examination of the technical standard of the dust and gas purification equipment produced by the Ministry of Chemical and Petroleum Machine Building and measures to improve it. Many types of this equipment no fail to meet the best world models in terms of their level of automation and metal-intensiveness, reliability, and other indicators. Insufficient attention is paid to the development of equipment for decontaminating discharge into the atmosphere from gaseous and liquid substances. The USSR Ministry of the Chemical Industry and the USSR Ministry of Light Industry are failing to ensure the development and production of industrial filter materials and textiles with increased heat-resistant properties, which is also delaying the creation of highly effective filters.

The commission instructed the Ministry of Chemical and Petroleum Machine Building and other interested ministries and departments to ensure the development and production in 1986-1990 of equipment for decontaminating discharge into the atmosphere with the extensive use of scientific and technical achievements.

The commission examined the question of developing scientific research in the field of bird protection and the practical use of its results.

The commission session was chaired by V.S. Murakhovskiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

Ministries Criticized for Slow Construction

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Excerpt] In Kazakhstan, health care and children's establishments built with subbotnik money really have been commissioned. However, here are figures given to our reporter by (Yuriy Aleksandrovich Romashikhin), head of the USSR Ministry of Health Capital Construction Planning Directorate.

The plan for the construction of medical establishments using subbotnik money was fulfilled by 53 percent in that republic in 1985. Not commissioned according to the plan were: a 130-bed maternity hospital in Dzhambul with an prenatal clinic capable of dealing with 360 visits a shift, a 120-bed maternity hospital in Kokchetav Oblast, and a rayon hospital in the settlement of Egindybulak, in Karaganda Oblast.

Things are no better in certain other union republics. In Uzbekistan, for example, the plan for commissioning health care establishments built with subbotnik money was 69 percent fulfilled; in Moldavia it was 78 percent fulfilled; and in Georgia it was only 9 percent fulfilled. In the view of the USSR Ministry of Health, this situation is explained by insufficient attention to the construction of health care projects on the part of the contractors — the USSR Ministry of Construction, the Ministry of Industrial Construction, and the Ministry of Construction of Heavy Industry Enterprises. Sometimes, the customers are also to blame. Construction sites are not always allocated in a timely manner and paperwork is not done on time; there are disruptions in equipment supplies.

The following facts are proof that such situations are not a natural state of affairs, that they rest on the consciences of individual organizations and people: in eight union republics, the plan for the construction of establishments with subbotnik money are being fulfilled and overfulfilled. In Turkmenistan, for example, they were 179 percent fulfilled last year, 109 percent fulfilled in the Ukraine, and 100 percent fulfilled in Azerbaijan, Latvia, Lithuania, and Tajikistan.

["Information Report on the 12th Komsomol Central Committee Plenum"]

[Excerpts] The 12th Komsomol Central Committee Plenum was held in Moscow on 12 April. It examined the following question:

1. On the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and Komsomol organizations' tasks in fulfilling its decisions.

The Komsomol Central Committee plenum noted that the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, the businesslike mood set by the congress, and the atmosphere of party principle, exactingness, and bolshevik truth met with the ardent approval of all Komsomol members and of the country's younger generation. The provisions adopted by the congress on increasing the Komsomol's role as Soviet youth's own social and political organization and the CPSU's combat reserve and reliable assistant and on expanding Komsomol organizations' rights in running state and social affairs were seen by young men and women as further convincing evidence of the party's constant concern.

A resolution adopted by the plenum made it incumbent on Komsomol committees to ensure vigorous actions by Komsomol organizations in the struggle for the unconditional fulfillment of every line of the congress decisions.

The paramount task is to help young men and women to thoroughly grasp the novelty and scale of the 27th CPSU Congress guidelines, to organize consistent study by the Komsomol and young people of the party forum's documents and materials, and to define the exact role of all Komsomol organizations and members in the implementation of the outlined plans. Special attention was paid to the need to instill in young men and women a scientific world outlook, high standards, and a responsible attitude toward labor in every area, and to couple organization and political work with vigorous actions to mobilize young working people to fulfill the targets for 1986 and for the 5-year plan as a whole.

Komsomol committees are called upon to resolutely reorganize the style of their activity and to work hard to make Komsomol work a process of exploration, something young people will find interesting and familiar, something that is bound up with young people's needs in production, traning, and everyday life, and in the utilization of free time.

The plenum approved the Komsomol Central Committee's basic guidelines for its activity and the practical measures to fulfill the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, improve young people's communist education, and increase their contribution to the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development.

Muslim-Zade was relieved of the post of candidate member of the Komsomol Central Committee Bureau in connection with his transfer to party work.

[TASS report: "Overcoming Laggardness"]

[Text] An extended session of the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry Collegium and the Presidium of the Petroleum and Gas Industry Workers Trade Union Central Committee was held in Moscow on 12 April to discuss the tasks of oilmen's collectives in implementing the 27th CPSU Congress decisions.

A report was delivered by V.A. Dinkov, minister of the petroleum industry. A detailed discussion took place at the session of the oilmen's substantial responsibility for the lag which has arisen in petroleum extraction, and the need was stressed to mobilize all available reserves to bring the sector speedily up to the planned standard of work and ensure the unconditional fulfillment of targets for 1986 and the 12th 5-Year Plan as a whole.

To this end it is necessary to ensure the accelerated commissioning of new oil deposits in Western Siberia and Kazakhstan, to improve the utilization of the stock of oil wells, and to modernize gas-lift equipment and other oilfield equipment more rapidly, in conjunction with the machine building workers.

Demichev Addresses Academy of Arts Session

PM171214 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Apr 86
First Edition p 3

[TASS report: "The Tasks of Socialist Culture"]

[Text] The civic duty of workers in our country's multinational culture is to create works worthy of the party and people's innovative deeds and to satisfy more fully the working people's spiritual demands. This was declared by participants in the 42d session of the USSR Academy of Arts that was held in Moscow on 16 April.

A report "The 27th CPSU Congress and the Tasks of Socialist Culture" was delivered by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of culture.

The CPSU Central Committee Political Report and the other documents of the congress, which became a major historical event both in our country's domestic life and in international life, he said, provide a profound analysis of the contemporary situation in the world and define the strategic tasks of Soviet society's socioeconomic, political, and spiritual development. The congress examined specific features of the contemporary world's development, the processes determining the aggravation of the general crisis of capitalism, and the danger for all mankind stemming from imperialism's desire to translate the rivalry between the two systems into the language of military antagonism. The barbaric air raid carried out by the United States against Libya's capital, Tripoli, and the city of Banghazi is an expression of the concept of "new globalism." However, the forces of reaction will not succeed in halting the main trend in mankind's progressive development that, in the 20th century, is determined by revolutions of liberation inaugurated by Great October, by the development of world socialism.

The role of workers in culture and art, of the entire spiritual culture of socialism is now growing more than ever before, the speaker stressed. The question is how to make the cultural factor an effective accelerator of economic, social, and spiritual progress. Under contemporary conditions, when more than 155 million people in our country have completed their higher or secondary education, the sphere of culture is called upon to supply the broadest masses of working people with the latest scientific and technical information, to elevate man's spiritual requirements, to nurture a healthy moral climate, and to establish new Soviet traditions.

The party's social policy is becoming increasingly specific and differentiated. The work of figures of multinational socialist culture must become correspondingly more specific, more purposeful, and more differentiated.

The main task of cultural policy is to open broad vistas for the revelation of people's abilities and to make their life spiritually rich and multifaceted.

Unfortunately, fundamental changes still have not occurred in the organization of people's free time. Here it is necessary to utilize most actively the opportunities offered by the holding of the All-Union Festival of People's Creativity devoted to the 70th anniversary of October.

Our society's moral health and its spiritual climate are largely determined by the state of affairs in literature and art. Hence, the lofty demands made by the party of creative activity.

To overcome inertia and stagnation and to proceed from life — these are the absolute conditions for enhancing the efficiency of cultural workers' labor.

The Soviet creative intelligentsia, the speaker noted, strives to be an active assistant for the party in its struggle to establish a truly innovative style in work and to cleanse our society of everything that hinders the acceleration of our progress.

An active process of closing the gap between art and the people's life is in progress at the contemporary stage. There is a broad response to painters' work at 5-year plan construction sites, on kolkhozes and sovkhozes, and in units of the Soviet Army and Navy. Nevertheless, a serious improvement is needed in exhibition work and the television and cinematography media are still inadequately used to propagandize art.

P.N. Demichev expressed confidence that workers in Soviet culture will spare no energy in solving the tasks set by the party.

Vorotnikov Chairs RSFSR Council of Ministers Meeting

PM181352 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 16 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 3

[Report by unidentified IZVESTIYA special correspondent: "At the RSFSR Council of Ministers"]

[Text] At a routine session the RSFSR Council of Ministers Presidium examined the question of the work of the "Zavodoukovskoye" experimental-production farm of the northern trans-Urals agricultural scientific research institute in the improvement of production efficiency.

It was noted that the collective of this large farm, working in the complex conditions of northern Tyumen, has managed to achieve high and steady harvests of grain and other agricultural crops and to increase livestock productivity.

During the past 5-year plan the grain crop averaged 40.8 quintals per hectare here, or 150 percent more than the average oblast indicator. The crop of corn for silage was quite high — 504 quintals per hectare. The high standard of feeding and balanced protein feed rations made it possible to obtain an average milk yield of 4,122 kg from the herd of 2,000 cows. This is 1,910 kg higher than the Tyumen Oblast average.

The high productivity of crop farms and livestock units has made it possible to greatly exceed the plans for the sale of all crop and livestock products to the state, including the sale of high-yield grain crop seeds and pedigree livestock.

All this has had a beneficial effect on the farm's economy. In the last 5-year plan the average annual profit exceeded R5 million and the level of profitability in all farm activity was 76 percent.

Such high indicators are the direct result of the persistent assimilation of a scientifically validated system of farm management and skillful work with the land. They are the result of the collective's great efforts in the qualitative transformation of the dairy herd, the introduction of a whole range of scientific achievements and advanced experience, and thoughtful work in cadre training and retraining.

Wishing to respond by their actions to the 27th party congress decisions, the farm's collective elaborated additional measures for the intensification of crop cultivation and livestock raising based on the introduction of the achievements of scientific and technical progress so that in the next few years the average grain crop yield will reach the peak of 55 quintals per hectare and milk yield will reach 5,500 kg per cow.

Approving the work of this pacemaking farm in the Transurals, the Presidium instructed the RSFSR State Agro-Industrial Committee and regional branches of the V.I. Lenin All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences to ensure the wide-scale study, propagandization, and introduction of its advanced experience on other kolkhozes and sovkhozes in the light of their specific conditions.

The Presidium also examined the question of the work done by Krasnoyarsk Kray's Evenkiy Autonomous Okrug Ispolkom in carrying out the general education and vocational school reform and some other questions of the republic's economic and cultural building, and took the corresponding decisions.

The session was chaired by V.I. Vorotnikov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers.

Vorotnikov Addresses RSFSR Consumer Goods Forum

PM231352 [Editorial Report] Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian on 15 April in its First Edition publishes on page 2 a 2,000-word report by M. Nikolayev and Ye. Khokhlov entitled "The Way to the Consumer." The authors review a recent RSFSR conference which discussed the need to further increase consumer goods production and improve services. They write in conclusion:

"Addressing the conference, V.I. Vorotnikov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the RSFSR Council of Ministers, emphasized that the elaboration of the new economic machinery is now virtually complete. Financial autonomy will be introduced into the life of light industry collectives on a broad scale. The number of indicators planned from above is to be sharply reduced. Work will be based mainly on orders from trade, and the results of economic activity will depend entirely on the product mix and output quality. This will force enterprises to compete with each other in the struggle to gain consumers and to seek to produce better quality goods than the next enterprise."

[Summary] The USSR Central Statistical Administration said that as of 21 April, spring crops covered an area of more than 26 million hectares over the country as a whole. IZVESTIYA Report

[V. Gavrichkin "Agricultural Review": "Work the Land Creatively"]

[Excerpt] Spring is flying by this year. For almost all of last week it was warm in most regions and even hot in places. The soil quickly "came into proper condition." By Sunday 13 April, for instance, the northern limit of the resumption of vegetation in winter grain crops, other crops, and grasses lay approximately along a line joining Vilnius, Vitebsk, Ryazan, Ulyanovsk, Kuybyshev, and Uralsk. Plant vegetation started a week earlier than usual here. In the Ukraine and the North Caucasus the early start was more noticeable. Winter crops there formed stems 15-20 days faster than usual and green lines of spring barley shoots appeared in the fields.

The early spring has predetermined the scope and pace of field work. Crop farmers in the Central Chernozem oblasts have already begun field work. The machine operators of Volgograd and Tula Oblasts and the southern oblasts of the Belorussian SSR have used their equipment selectively, mainly on fields with light soil.

The rain and sharp drop in temperature that have recently affected areas as far as the Caucasus have complicated, but not stopped, the work. Work everywhere is proceeding in line with the spring sowing schedule.

Here are a few figures from the first RSFSR Central Statistical Administration summary. By Monday, 14 April spring crops together with resown winter crops totaled 4,857,000 hectares. Last year's figure during the same period was 1,471,000 hectares.

Farms Urged To Balance Fodder, Grain Production

[Valeriy Golubev commentary from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] By the end of the 5-year plan, it is planned to gather a gross grain harvest of between 250 million and 255 million tons. In order to achieve this, the average yield around the country must be increased by 5 quintals per hectare. Here is an agricultural review on the problems of grain growing by our commentator Valeriy Golubev.

Hello comrades! With each day that goes by the spring is expanding the frontiers of the sown area. Just now there is a great deal of work not only in the fields but also for the planning and economic services of the farms. Stable plans for grain sales to the state are being laid and areas for sowing are being defined more precisely. This work is proceeding under conditions where the economic independence of kolkhozes and sovkhozes is being expanded, as was decided at the 27th party congress.

But this is what is giving rise to concern: the first preliminary plan drafts which are arriving from the farms at USSR Gosagroprom [State Agro-Industrial Committee] show a tendency toward reductions in the area sown to grain. This is how things stand in Volgograd, Rostov, Voronezh, and Omsk Oblasts as well as in the Ukrainian SSR and even Kazakhstan, which is one of the basic regions producing high-quality food wheat. There are even reductions in the grain growing areas envisaged by zonal science-based farming systems. For example, this year they have been reduced in the country by 3 million hectares. The main reason is expansion of fodder production; but surely that should not be at the expense of arable land. The fodder base must be strengthened primarily through increasing the productivity of meadows and pastures in these areas where it is unjustifiably low.

A question arises: What are such farms, rayons, oblasts, and republics hoping for? It is understood that if there are problems with growing grain, then the state will help out. Let's be frank: many economic planners still live by this sort of scrounging mentality, although the CPSU Central Committee decision on the restructuring of the economic mechanism of the agro-industrial complex says unambiguously that where plans for grain procurement are not fulfilled there will be a corresponding reduction in the amount of forage grain issued from state reserves.

As you can see, freedom of planning must be seen primarily as a task involving reaching self-sufficiency in food and forage grain and all the more so since optimum conditions have now been created for farmers to increase yields. Large quantities of material resources have been channeled into the introduction of intensive technologies.

Agricultural Supplies Body Session Held

[Report by A. Popov: "Deliveries on Schedule; From All-Union Operational Staff Session"]

[Text] A routine session of the all-union operational staff for material and technical supplies to the agro-industrial complex has been held. The session was opened by A.P. Lyapchenkov, deputy chairman of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee [Gosagroprom]. In his speech he stressed that the course of spring field work depends directly on the timely and full provision of farms with machinery and spare parts and fuel and lubricants and other resources. The operational reports submitted to the staff session attest that the majority of industrial enterprises are delivering equipment, units, and components to the kolkhozes and sovkhozes within the set deadlines. At the same time some plants are lagging behind in fulfilling the countryside's orders.

Particularly large complaints were leveled against the Frunze Truck Assembly Plant, the Kutaissi Truck Plant, and the Caspian Machine Building Plant of the USSR Ministry of the Automotive Industry, which owe trucks and trailers to the countryside. The Krasnoyarsk Trailer Plant is greatly in arrears to the countryside.

"A serious situation has taken shape with regard to the delivery of diesel fuel," V.V. Belchenko, deputy chairman of the RSFSR Gosagroprom, said at the session. "As of 14 April only 88 percent of the norm had been delivered to the republic's kolkhozes and sovkhozes. And for Krasnodar Kray, where field work is at its height, the figure was only 74 percent. Deliveries to Orel Oblast were 62 percent of the norm and to Volgograd Oblast, 68 percent. Many oblasts are short of gasoline. The schedule for deliveries to Krasnodar Kray has been only 86-percent fulfilled and to Stavropol Kray, 70 percent."

The session participants examined the progress of the repair of feed procurement equipment. It was noted that all enterprises of the Ministry of Machine Building for Animal Husbandry and Feed Production that produce spare parts for feed harvesting equipment completely fulfilled the deliveries plan for the first quarter for all indicators.

In the intermission between sessions we asked E.S. Mirakov, deputy minister of machine building for animal husbandry and feed production, to describe the measures which are being taken to improve the servicing of machinery in operation.

Some 45 backup centers have been created for the guaranteed servicing of feed harvesting combines and we are planning another 30. There is a reserve stock of spare parts. We are paying special attention to improving the qualifications of cadres working on complicated machinery. Some 11,000 machine operators have been to classes on regulating and tuning machinery parts [rabochiye organy mashin]. Regional conferences of specialists have been held. Specific measures have been outlined to satisfy the countryside's demand for machinery for animal husbandry and feed production and to improve its quality and reliability.

The question of the lag in deliveries of industrial rubber items by enterprises of the USSR Ministry of the Petroleum Refining and Petrochemical Industry was also raised at the staff session. The farms are experiencing a particular deficit of chassis seals [karkasnyye salniki] and v-belts. Their delivery is being held up by the collectives of the Barnaul, Leningrad, Volga, and Karaganda industrial rubber articles plants.

Those taking part in the session demanded that the representatives of the ministries and departments concerned eliminate as rapidly as possible the delay in deliveries of essential material and technical supplies to the countryside.

Responsible workers of the CPSU Central Committee, USSR Council of Ministers, and USSR People's Control Committee and representatives of ministries and departments took part in the staff session.

Academician on Progress of 'Intercosmos' Program

LD230534 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0725 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 22 Apr (TASS) — The international space research program Intercosmos has an exclusively peaceful character. It is of great practical importance for development of various branches of the national economy of the socialist countries. This was to told a CEMA Secretariat correspondent by Academician Vladimir Kotelnikov, chairman of the Council for International Cooperation in the Field of Research Into and Use of Space ("Intercosmos") at the USSR Academy of Sciences. Joint work within the framework of this program is currently being carried out by scientists and specialists of Bulgaria, Hungary, Vietnam, The GDR, the Republic of Cuba, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Soviet Union, and Czechoslovakia.

Research, the academician said, is being implemented in five main directions: space physics including material studies [materialovedeniye], communication, and sounding of the earth by means of air-space aids.

The peaceful, constructive orientation of pioneering [osvoyeniye] of near-earth space, the Soviet scientist goes on to say, also has been shown by the creation in 1971 of the international organization and system of space communications "Intersputnik" which ensures transmission of television programs, telephone calls, and other kinds of information.

Along with applied national economy programs, scientists give great attention to basic research. The matter concerns first and foremost the great international project "Venus — Halley's Comet." Scientists and specialist from six socialist countries — USSR, Bulgaria, Hungary, GDR, Poland, and Czechoslovakia — as well as from Austria, France and the FRG, took part in it. In December 1984, with the aim of implementing this project, two automatic Vega stations were launched. In June 1985 they successfully completed the assignments of the first stage, to study Venus. Measurements were carried out in the planet's cloud layer. These confirmed data previously received and provided new information about the chemical composition of the clouds.

In conducting research into the atmosphere of Venus, for the first time ever a fundamentally new experiment was carried out in making aerostatic probes into Venus' atmosphere, thus making it possible to obtain data on the unusual circulation of the atmosphere of Venus.

Continuing their flight, the Vega stations entered the coma of Halley's Comet on 6 and 9 March, and passed its core at a distance of 8,000-9,000 km. For the first time, large-scale images were obtained, measurements of temperature and other physical-chemical characteristics were conducted, an analysis of the chemical composition of the comet's gas and dust components was completed, and magnetic fields and physical processes were studied.

Scientists and specialists from the socialist countries are now preparing the new "Fobos" project, said Vladimir Kotelnikov. Its aim is research of the sun, the interplanetary environment, the planet Mars, and its satellite Phobos.

Science Committee Chief on Computers, Automation

LD220915 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Interview with Guriy Marchuk, chairman of the State Committee for Science and Technology, by Tatyana Komarova, on Soviet Science Day; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] [Komarova] To judge by all events, computerization and automation are in the forefront of current scientific and technical problems. If this is so, are we ready for this in terms of production and in terms of the psychological and everyday implications?

[Marchuk] You are quite right that computerization is a phenomenon on a huge scale. And in fact, we now speak about automation in the broad sense, about robotization and introduction and use — wide use — of computer technology. Because automation not only gives the opportunity of raising labor productivity, it in fact changes radically the whole question of quality. Instead of a natural experiment one can carry it out as a mathematical experiment and choose the optimum variants for most complex structures. This...

[Komarova interrupts] To what extent are we prepared for that?

[Marchuk] Well, in order to bring computers into wide use in our lives, we must cross the psychological barrier. But life requires that, and for this reason I believe that computer education is one of the most important components for a truly broad development to take place in scientific and technical progress in all areas.

U.S. USING CHARGES OF SOVIET VIOLATIONS AS 'COVER'

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- Follows commentary by Vladimir Chernyshev, a TASS military news analyst:

The U.S. Administration has staged a fresh farce, pretending that it wishes to "seek council" from its allies and maybe even to "heed" their opinion. Perhaps, there is "awareness" in Washington that after the aggression against soverign Libya launched in open disregard of the views and interests of the same allies, the aggression, which set off a storm of indignation and hurt the feelings of people among their camp, the time has now come to do something in the manner befitting an "ally".

The scenario deals this time with the Salt-2 treaty. The title roles are performed by Paul Nitze, ambassador at large in the field of arms control, who appears in the West European scene, and Edward Rowney, special adviser to the President and secretary of state, who was sent on a mission to the countries of the Far East. They are quite worthy actors. Yet, at times, they "let the cat out of the bang". Thus, for example, Nitze said in a "DER SPIEGEL" interview that of great importance was not arms control, but the nuclear threat. In translation into the language of the policy of "neoglobalism", this means that the main thing is to have an opportunity to threaten other states and peoples with nuclear weapons, using them as a "big stick".

Yet Paul Nitze was not reprimanded in Washington for that, since the President himself made prior to that an even more tell-tale statement to the effect that it can be argued, should an argument arise in general, only what weapons the USA needed and what weapons it did not need, but by no means whether the USA should renounce weapons for the sake of treaties and agreements.

This is the "clue" for the farce to be staged in the capitals of allies by the Washington emissaries. For a start they were told to sweeten the pill, by saying that President Reagan had decided "on a preliminary basis" not to violate a single provision of the SALT-2 treaty in May this year, when the eighth nuclear-powered missile carrying submarine "Nevada" of the "Trident" system will start on running trials. The United States is disassembling two old sulbmarines of the Poseidon type not to excel the limit set by the treaty for the launchers of MIRVed missiles.

Yet the main point is not that "spoonful of honey". In the first place, the emissaries are to warn the allies that the current decision, as was also the case in June 1985, is a single act. As the newspaper "NEW YORK TIMES" said, this autumn the USA will again examine the question whether it is expedient to observe the limitations imposed by the SALT-2 treaty, since in November-December the outfitting of bombers carrying cruise missiles will take the USA above the limit set by the treaty for MIRV'ed missiles and bombers carrying cruise missiles.

The allies of Washington should have no illusions as to the fact that as soon as some or other provision of the treaty becomes an obstacle to the programmes drawn up in the USA, for the creation and buildup of strategic weapons, it will be "amputated".

This "approach" to the contractual-legal basis of the limitation and reduction of arms has been explicitly spelled out by Caspar Weinberger, U.S. secretary of defence, who said that America's interests are nowhere carved in stone and that judgement of the vital interests will sometimes depend on the circumstances of a specific instance. The need to win takes firmness and determination on the part of America, he said. So, Washington's allies should firmly "learn" that the USA is set for "victory" and does not intend to limit in any way the freedom of the choice of methods to achieve that aim.

They would be well advised to realise another thing too: No matter what the advice may be, no matter what the allies may insist on, the U.S. Administration will act as it chooses. Could they have forgotten the principles of the current U.S. Administration? The same Pentagon chief has openly spelled out another "postulate" of Washington, by saying that the USA can no longer deceive itself by the idea that its commitments to the allies are based on the altruistic wish to protect their freedom. In real fact, the protection of their freedom is simply the protection of America's own freedom on forward lines. He could not be more frank. This is a formula according to which they are going to do whatever they wish, to act as they choose. That is precisely why the allies are informed now that the limits envisaged by the SALT-2 treaty may be exceeded in the future, should weighty military reasons for that appear. Indeed, there are no "altruists" among the current U.S. Administration.

And, at last, the Washington emissaries are "bringing to the attention" of the allies that the USSR has allegedly more than once violated the provisions of the treaty. Why should they have repeated these lies now? The answer to that question is contained in another element of Washington's "instructions: The USA intends to take appropriate measures. The U.S. leadership, which ordered the Pentagon last June to broaden the programme for a modernisation of the U.S. strategic force, is again trying to use a false pretext for further building up the arms race. Trying to camouflage its own violations of the provisions of the treaty, the U.S. Administration is picturing them as measures allegedly taken "in response" to some mythical violations by the USSR.

The U.S. leadership has to stage all kinds of shows as a cover for its actions aimed at creeping out of treaties and agreements. This protective cover is designed as a blind not only for the allies, but also for the United States public which realises the danger of this policy. The SALT-2 treaty is far from being ideal, but if the restrictions imposed by it are broken, the arms race will further spiral, absorbing with no useful purpose new billions of dollars and increasing the danger hanging over mankind, the newspaper PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER said editorially.

FIRST STAGE OF 1986 DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE ENDS

LD241748 Moscow TASS in English 1642 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Geneva, April 24 TASS -- The first stage of this year's session of the Geneva disarmament conference ended here today. The Soviet Union's major initiatives, from the programme of the total liquidation of nuclear and other weapons of mass annihilation by the year 2000, outlined in Mikhail Gorbachev's January 15 statement this year, to the new proposals on banning chemical weapons, that were just submitted to the conference and open the road to drafting a relevant international convention, were in the center of attention.

This constructive course was received with support by the delegations of other socialist countries and non-aligned states. But even this time the conference failed to achieve substantial progress in solving disarmament questions through the fault of the United States and other NATO countries.

The session will resume its work on June 10.

U.S. 'To Blame' For Deadlock

LD241953 Moscow TASS in English 1840 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Geneva April 24 TASS -- TASS correspondent Yevgeniy Korzhev reports: The first part of the session of this year's disarmament conference has wound up its work today.

A characteristic feature of many speeches, especially at the beginning of the session, was the hope expressed for a positive change and reaching practical progress in the resolution of questions pertaining to the limitation of arms and to disarmament in the light of the important accords reached at the Soviet-American summit meeting last November. The statement by Mikhail Gorbachev of January 15 containing a summary of the comprehensive disarmament program up to the year of 2000 has produced a tremendous impression here.

The USSR's decision to prolong the unilateral moratorium on conducting nuclear explosions, the idea to create a comprehensive international security system, which was put forward at the 27th congress, the recent Soviet initiative on a cut in conventional weapons, the new proposals tabled here on ensuring the immunity of artificial earth satellites and prohibiting satellite-killer systems and on banning chemical weapons have met with a positive response in the conference circles.

Summing up the results of the work done over the three months, Viktor Israelyan, who heads the Soviet delegation, expressed regret that the U.S. side had responded to all of these initiatives with nuclear explosions in Nevada, stepping up the anti-Soviet campaign, blocking the Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons, unfolding the "star wars" program and at last the impudent bandit attack against Libya, which is fraught with a serious deterioration of the international situation.

The USA is also to blame for the deadlock at the conference, for lack of any substantial progress in the resolution of the issues under discussion at the conference.

The persistent demand for putting an end to marking time and for intensifying the discussion of top priority issues rang out in the statements by many other delegations, including those of some Western countries.

The conference has approved today the mandate of the committee on the question of preventing the arms race in outer space. Luvsandorijiyin Bayart, representative of the Mongolian People's Republic, has been elected chairman of the new auxiliary body of the conference.

Our conference will resolve in session on June 10.

LD240509 Moscow TASS in English 1619 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Geneva April 23 TASS -- A regular session of the Soviet-U.S. Standing Consultative Commission ended here today. The commission had been set up to promote the implementation of aims and provisions of the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems and the interim agreement on certain measures pertaining to strategic offensive arms limitation that were concluded between the USSR and the USA on May 26, 1972 and the agreement on the measures to lessen the danger of an outbreak of nuclear war concluded between the two countries on September 30, 1971.

WPC SESSION STATEMENT CONDEMNS U.S. AIR RAID

LD241537 Moscow TASS in English 1420 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 24 TASS -- The session of the World Peace Council condemns Libya's barbarous bombing of the U.S. aviation during which 170 peaceful people were killed or wounded. This is said in a statement adopted today by the session of the World Peace council under way here.

The session urges all peoples of the world to rally against the U.S. policy of state terrorism and armed intervention which undermines constructive efforts for the ensurance of international security.

The World Peace Council expresses solidarity with the people of the Libyan Jamahiriyah in its struggle against the United States aggressive actions, in the just struggle for independence, sovereignty and peace.

Bulgarian Leader Speaks

LD241835 Moscow TASS in English 1620 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 24 TASS -- "In our nuclear age the safeguarding and consolidation of peace is the main problem faced by all peoples", said general secretary of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, president of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, Todor Zhivkov. He spoke today at the session of the World Peace Council that opened here.

"We are all threatened with nuclear catastrophe and our common task is to remove that threat", the Bulgarian leader said. "Certain circles of imperialism and international reaction have no wish to face realities of the world of today. They continue whipping up the arms race, stockpiling weapons of mass destruction. They are prepared to go to any lengths to impose their will on the peoples and to achieve world supremacy. Barbarous bombings of peaceful Libyan cities, subversive actions against Nicaragua, the increase of the aid to bandits from UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] in Angola, the backing of South African racists and other such actions show the reactionary essence of this policy."

"The Soviet initiative of January 15 of this year aimed at ridding the world of weapons of mass destruction received broad support in the world," Todor Zhivkov said. "The 27th CPSU Congress has developed and enriched it with the concept of creating an all-embracing system of international security. This is also the aim of the latest Soviet proposal for considerable reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces of European states and also of the corresponding forces of the USA and Canada stationed in Europe".

"The common concern presupposes and requires the common responsibility and joint efforts for safeguarding and consolidating peace. Socialist Bulgaria will continue vigorously conducting the peaceful policy. Safeguarding of universal peace is our supreme goal, the manifestation of humanism and high moral standards of our ideology and our system", the Bulgarian leader said.

Zhukov Addresses

[Text] Sofia April 24 TASS -- "It is now clear to all that the stepping up of the struggle for the prevention of nuclear war whose risk is increasing, is now needed as never before", said the head of the Soviet delegation Yuriy Zhukov, speaking here at the session of the World Peace Council (WPC) that opened today. "The Soviet peace movement, the Soviet Peace Committee received with satisfaction the news that the WPC leadership has decided to devote this session to a thorough and businesslike discussion of the state of and prospects for the movement's activity in conditions of a new, extremely difficult international situation", he said. "The message from Mikhail Gorbachev, read out here, the speech by Todor Zhivkov and a thorough report by Romesh Chandra, suggest to us the ideas which will help us solve the burning problems facing the WPC".

The speaker pointed to special danger for peace posed by nuclear explosions in Nevada, brazen acts of armed aggression of the U.S. Navy and Air Force against sovereign Libya, by the openly publicized preparation for the invasion of Nicaragua by U.S. forces, the further intensification of the undeclared wars with the use of hired gangs armed with up-to-date U.S. military equipment, against Angola and Afghanistan, the stepping up of Israel's bloody terror in Lebanon, Israel's atrocities on occupied lands of the Arab people of Palestine.

"All this requires the stepping up of mass actions of peace champions, the rallying of all anti-war forces, the enhancement of the effectivity of their joint or parallel actions", Yuriy Zhukov went on.

"As to the Soviet peace movement, we shall start in a few days the action of many millions in the framework of the week of the struggle for universal security to be held in May", the speaker said. "Their priority slogans will be the struggle for an end to nuclear testing, for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons by the year 2000, for the destruction of all U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe and for turning Europe into a nuclear-free zone, for the prevention of the militarisation of space and also mass actions in support of the peoples that became victims to undeclared wars and outright aggression on the part of the USA".

The Soviet delegation supported the considerations expressed by the speaker and advanced a number of concrete proposals whose aim is to upgrade the activity of the World Peace Council so that it should be in keeping with the present international situation.

UN DELEGATE DUBININ NOTES CRITICISM OF U.S. AIR RAID

LD242327 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Report by New York correspondent Vadim Lobachenko and interview with Yu.V. Dubinin, USSR permanent representative to the United Nations; date and place not given -- from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The 41st anniversary of the San Francisco conference on the United Nations is in April. At that conference the UN Charter was drawn up. However, the United States, which was a signatory to the Charter, has again and not for the first time embarked on gross violations of all the main provisions of the Charter, including the clause on renunciation of the threat of force and its use in world affairs.

At a meeting of the Security Council at UN headquarters in New York, the U.S. pirate action against Libya was appraised as a direct challenge to the absolute majority of UN member-countries.

[Begin recording][Dubinin] More than 40 states had their say, and all the representatives of these states, apart from the representatives of the United States, naturally, and Britain, the U.S. accomplice, emphatically condemned the bandit raids by U.S aircraft on Libyan towns.

In this respect, it was emphasized that U.S. aggression against Libya harbors a threat to international peace not only in the Mediterranean area but also throughout the entire world.

Carrying out the instructions of the Soviet leadership, the USSR delegation at the Security Council resolutely demanded that U.S. aggression against Libya be halted and that the UN Security Council adopt all necessary measures against a repetition of this kind of action by the United States. A group of nonaligned states submitted a draft resolution for the Security Council's consideration condemning the United States and demanding that it cease using the threat of force or force itself. In the vote, the nonaligned states' draft resolution gathered a majority -- namely, nine votes. Unfortunately it was not adopted, since the United States and its Western allies vetoed this draft resolution. They thereby demonstrated their disregard for the UN Charter and for the will of the world's peoples. [end recording]

NONALIGNED DELEGATION SEEKS UN MEETING ON LIBYA

LD241120 Moscow TASS in English 0916 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 24 TASS -- TASS correspondent Sergey Baybakov report:

Foreign Miniters of India, Cuba, Senegal, Yugoslavia and permanent representatives of Ghana and Congo to the United Nations visited the president of the United Nations Security Council and asked him on behalf of the nonaligned countries to call a session of the Council in order to discuss the consequences of the U.S. bombing raid on Libya.

They also met with the United Natons secretary general and discussed with him the situation in the central Mediterranean. The ministers handed over the Javier Perez de Cuellar the text of the communique passed by the extraordinary meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the nonaligned countries in New Delhi April 15.

The document strongly condemned the bombing of Libyan cities and expressed serious concern of the nonaligned countries over U.S. actions in the Mediterranean Sea -- the actions fraught with a threat to peace.

It is our firm conviction that peace in the Mediterranean region cannot be based on the policy of intervention, interference and intimidation, Bal Ram Bhagat, minister of external affairs of India, told newsmen after the meeting. The U.S. action all the more deserves to be condemned, because the United States as a permanent member of the Security Council bears responsibility for maintaining international peace and stability and for observing the United Nations Charter.

It was officially announced here that the United Nations Security Council would meet in the second half of the day Thursday and continue the discussion of the situation that had taken shape in the central Mediterranean in the wake of the U.S. armed aggression against Libya. Last Friday the United States, Great Britain and France resorted to a triple veto in the Security Council to prevent it from passing a resolution denouncing the bandit action of the United States.

It is expected that Thursday's session of the U.N. Security Council will hear speeches of foreign ministers of four countries who visited Tripoli on the instructions of the Coordinating Bureau of the Nonaligned Movement.

While in the Libyan capital they saw the effects of the barbaric raid which had taken lives of the civilian population.

Delegation Head Remarks

LD250736 Moscow TASS in English 0716 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 25 TASS — By TASS correspondent Vyacheslav Chernyshev:

The non-aligned countries strongly condemn the U.S. aggression against Libya's independence and territorial integrity, Bali Ram Bhagat, head of the special non-aligned delegation and minister for external relations of India, has told a meeting of the U.N. Security Council.

Nothing could justify the massive use of force against a sovereign state in violation of the aims and principles of the U.N. Charter, he said. The Non-Aligned Movement was alarmed by the developments in the Mediterranean that were fraught with a serious threat to peace and security not only in that region, but also all over the world.

'A. al-Turayki, Libya's permanent representative to the U.N. expressed gratitude to the international community on behalf of the Libyan people for its support and solidarity with Libya that was subjected to a treacherous attack.

He drew U.N. attention to the fresh U.S. threats and preparation of more provocations and aggression against Arab countries by the American-Israeli partners.

Western countries, first of all the United States and Britain, were unable to give up the claims to special rights to political and intellectual hegemony and the imposition of their criteria to judge the behavior of others, the meeting was told by Clovis Maksud, permanent observer of the League of Arab States at the U.N.

The Security Council meeting has shown again that the international community unconditionally condemns the banking on rude military force and interference in the affairs of sovereign countries, rather than one reason and responsibility. It backs the peoples' legitimate right to freedom, independence and human dignity, and to defence from aggression.

[Text] New York April 25 TASS -- The non-aligned countries persistently demand that the Security Council fulfil its obligations and adopt measures to prevent the repetition of aggression similar to the U.S. attack on Libya, an action that deserves the sternest condemnation, Raif Dizdarevic, Yugoslavia's federal secretary for foreign affairs, has pointed out in his address to the U.N. Security Council.

If one reconciled with the aggression against Libya, he said, more acts of aggression, more victims would inevitably follow.

A special non-aligned mission visited Libya and saw there mutilated men, women and children, residential areas turned into ruins, suffering of innocent people. Precisely they were targets of the bombing, Dizdarevic pointed out.

U.S. Delegate Warns Nonaligned

LD250645 Moscow TASS in English 0631 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 25 TASS -- Walters, U.S. chief delegate to the U.N. was incensed by the wrathful condemnation of the U.S. aggression against Libya by members of a special delegation of non-aligned countries during a Security Council meeting. he attacked with rudeness, unprecedented for the U.N. both individual non-aligned states and the movement as a whole. Switching from the diplomatic to profane language, he openly threatened the Non-Aligned Movement that the USA "will not forget" statements by members of the special delegation at the Security Council.

U.S. USES FRG IN CARRYING OUT 'STATE TERRORISM'

LD231321 Moscow TASS in English 1428 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Bonn April 23 TASS -- TASS correspondent Sergey Sosnovskiy reports:

The territory of West Germany was involved in the planning and implementation of the U.S. pirate act against sovereign Libya, the newspaper FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU wrote today. The U.S. General Bernard Rcgers, commander-in-chief of the U.S. Army in Europe, not only planned but also guided the action against Libya staying in his headquarters in Stuttgart. According to the newspaper, he himself admitted it when talking with a group of West German journalists in the Belgian headquarters of NATO last week.

According to the newspaper, apprehension is growing that the "double function" of the U.S. general -- supreme commander-in-chief of the Allied Armed Forces of NATO in Europe and commander of the U.S. Army -- can result in serious foreign political difficulties in case of the repetition of such actions.

It follows from the article that it was not the first time that the U.S. used the territory of West Germany for carrying through its pirate actions in various parts of the world. Thus, B. Rogers controlled from West Germany operations of the U.S. military against Lebanon in 1984, because the whole of the Mediterranean region 'falls within the sphere of his competence'.

The newspaper UNSERE ZEIT recalls with concern that while U.S. warplanes were bombing peaceful cities in Libya, units of U.S. first-strike "Pershing-2 nuclear missiles deployed in West Germany were placed on high alert."

According to UNSERE ZEIT, it shows how widely the U.S. can use the territory of West Germany as a place d'armes for its policy of state terrorism. The newspaper pointed out that, perhaps, the time had come to seriously consider the problem of West Germany's sovereignty and to ask oneself whether the FRG Government had become merely an executor of the orders of the U.S. Administration.

U.S., UK REJECT NEW SOVIET PEACE INITIATIVES

OW242354 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1045 GMT 22 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Igor Kudrin]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger recently held a press conference in Washington at which he was asked, above all else, to comment on the new Soviet peace initiatives. We must regard any Russian plans on changing the structure of forces in Europe with great caution, the Pentagon chief said. Do not forget that they have an overwhelming advantage and when they speak about reducing armed forces and weapons, they are, above all, pursuing the goal of pushing the United States out of Europe, and away from supporting NATO.

At a time when other politicians are calling for studying in detail and weighing the Soviet proposals and supporting the USSR's readiness for constructive dialogue, here all is being dismissed without even a second thought.

Apparently, in order to show that NATO is as unified as ever, members of NATO are holding military maneuvers one after another -- multilateral, bilateral, with or without U.S. participation. Yesterday, 10 countries began the "Elder Forest 86" maneuvers. The aim -- listen to this -- is to perfect defenses in case of an attack by Warsaw Pact countries. Nearly a hundred F-111 bombers, including those that took part in the recent attack on Libya, will take off from bases in the United Kingdom.

Today the NATO "Bold Game" maneuvers will begin. They will be held in the North Sea as well as near the coasts of Denmark and Norway. Ships and planes belonging to Denmark, the FRG, Norway, and the United Kingdom will take part. On 24 April the United States, the United Kingdom, Italy, and Turkey will begin maneuvers in the Mediterranean. All modern components of naval warfare will take part, including ships, planes, submarines, and helicopters.

The Conservative government intends to obediently follow the aggressive intentions of Washington, contrary to the opinion of the majority of Britons. This is the only way to interpret the words Thatcher, head of the Tory cabinet, made in an interview on British television. Discussing the possibility of further attacks by the United States on Libya, the prime minister declared that she has not the slightest doubt regarding allowing the use of U.S. bases for bombing forays on Libyan territory. According to London, Margaret Thatcher said U.K. involvement in this aggression was in no way a mistake. If needed, the government is prepared to again give permission for a similar raid by U.S. bombers based in Britain.

The representatives of the German Democratic Republic, Poland and Czechoslovakia stressed the great importance of the Soviet proposal for strengthening peace and international security.

BOVIN CRITICIZES OPPOSITION TO NUCLEAR TEST BAN

LD202307 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 20 Apr 86

[From the "International Panorama" program, presented by Aleksandr Bovin; Ruehe remarks in German, with superimposed translation]

[Text] One of our concrete proposals aimed precisely at halting the slide toward nuclear disaster is a ban on nuclear weapons tests. Real possibilities for reaching agreement objectively exist. Only one thing stands in the way, the stubborn unwillingness of the White House to negotiate. What do the U.S. allies think in this connection?

[Correspondent Vladimir Kondratyev -- identified from screen caption] We are in the office of Volker Ruehe, deputy chairman of the CDU-CSU faction in the Bundestag. In his party, the Christian Democrats, he is known as a foreign policy expert, and particularly regarding security problems. What does he think about the Soviet nuclear moratorium?

[Ruehe] Ultimately we need an agreement banning nuclear tests, but this cannot be achieved all at once. There is no sense in implementing a freeze on tests for some particular period of international development that has been chosen arbitrarily and is not of long duration. We, therefore, are in favor of talks on both sides. Time is necessary for reflection. There should not be any automatic carrying out of test series by one side or the other. Intermediate solutions are needed. For example, it would be possible to agree on a lower power for warhead devices, on limiting explosions. In pursuing the aim of ending nuclear tests we will not forget that this will not lead to the disappearance of any of the existing nuclear arms. We must also, therefore, pay attention to talks on disarmament and strive to move both these problems forward in an energetic way.

And I would welcome it if, once the American series is completed -- and certainly during the summit meeting -- if this subject could be discussed and if, as a result, it were possible to find a way out of the automatic commencement of test series and also a way to link this issue with disarmament talks. After all, one cannot achieve what one wants in a single step. Besides, it would be important to agree to technical conditions necessary for the verification of nuclear tests. Time must not be wasted, and over the next few months both sides must begin intensive talks about this.

[Kondratyev] Do you not believe that the conducting of test series by the United States at a time when the Soviet Union is not doing so contradicts the idea of a ban on nuclear explosions?

[Ruehe] The Soviet Union completed its series of explosions earlier, and it would be a good thing if it did not now begin a new one. At this moment there is no sense in dwelling on individual tests. Both sides have carried out several hundred of them. The Unitd States and the Soviet Union must, through limiting the number of explosions, move toward the ultimate goal. One must not, therefore, display maximalism. I repeat: One step here is not enough, the more so in view of the fact that monitoring methods do not exist. It would be of value for the talks if the Soviet Union actively took part in developing technical means for seismic monitoring. Confidence is created where accords can be verified. If one of the sides has doubts about whether or not the other side is keeping to the agreements that have been concluded, then distrust is thereby strengthened and that is undesireable.

[Bovin] Once again we see a contrast: Look how precisely and clearly people talk on the street, and how indeterminate and streamlined are the thoughts of the professional politician. Of course, in principle, Mr Ruehe is in favor of ending tests. But then the brakes in the form of conditions are applied. It cannot be done at once. There has to be time for discussion. Intermediate solutions are needed. The condition is laid down that there has to be talk about verification.

Generally speaking, of course, all this is correct. But this is the point: that to start with you have to sit down at the negotiating table and start discussing all these questions. This is what we are proposing. This is what the Americans do not want. This is indeed the main point that the Bonn politician is doing his best to politely avoid. What is more, in defending Washington's position Mr Ruehe, in my view, is more of an American than the Americans themselves. At any rate, he uses the arguments that the Americans would appear to have overcome: It was in the past that they used to move this way and that, talking about monitoring, about the need to think through and once again think through things. Now they are not deceiving; they state directly that they need to continue tests because they want to develop [sozdavat] new weapons and want to be sure of the reliability of the old ones. That is what it is all about.

They draw up this kind of figure: To start, we have to agree on reducing nuclear armaments, and then later on ending tests. It is turning everything upside down. What is the point of ending nuclear tests? It is precisely this, in order to create more favorable conditions for talks on reducing armaments. If either side is going to be capable of improving nuclear weapons and developing new types of varieties of it, if each of the sides is going to gradually lose its confidence in the reliability of the weapons that already exist, then all this is going to urge an accord and stimulate the search for some kind of mutually acceptable compromise. That is our logic. But for the Americans here, too, the possibility of increasing their strength outweighs all logic. They have already carried out 2 explosions this year, and according to what people are writing they intend to carry out another 12 explosions. Well, so to speak, a nuclear salvo against a new summit meeting. However, I would like to stress that we need this meeting no more than Washington does and if they think otherwise in the White House then they are making a mistake.

And I would welcome it if, once the American series is completed -- and certainly during the summit meeting -- if this subject could be discussed and if, as a result, it were possible to find a way out of the automatic commencement of test series and also a way to link this issue with disarmament talks. After all, one cannot achieve what one wants in a single step. Besides, it would be important to agree to technical conditions necessary for the verification of nuclear tests. These actions by Washington exacerbate tense as it is the situation in the world, the delegates to the forum stressed.

PROPOSAL ON PROFESSIONAL ATHELETES IN OLYMPICS PROTESTED

HK231448 Hong Kong AFP in English 1420 GMT 23 Apr 86

[By Shigemi Sato]

[Excerpts] Seoul, April 23 (AFP) -- The Soviet Union dealt the proposed Olympic athletes' code a possible fatal blow here Wednesday at the general assembly of the Association of National Olympic Committees (ANOC).

Only a few delegates spoke in favour of the code, designed to allow professional sportsmen and women into the Olympics, and the meeting deferred a final decision until a working party have studied alternative ideal for changes to the eligibility rules.

However, Marat Gramov, president of the Soviet Olympic Committee, had other ideas and unleashed a 25-minute tirade against the code and various other developments in sport.

The code would lead to "violence and commercialism" and would negate "our Olympic rights," he said.

Gramov branded some IOC [International Olympic Committee] members as "advertising agents" who wanted to transform the Olympics into a "big show."

Gramov, whose government takes top Soviet athletes under its wing, proposed establishment of a committee to study the consequences of the proposed changes.

COMMENTARY ON UPCOMING TOKYO SUMMIT

Reagan Speech Viewed

LD241734 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1135 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, 24 Apr (TASS) — President Reagan made a speech to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in which he formulated the main themes and agenda for the forthcoming routine Annual Economic Conference in Tokyo of heads of state and government of the seven leading capitalist states.

It follows from the President's speech that the U.S. Administration intends to concentrate most of its efforts on ensuring the practical realization in all directions of the notorious "doctrine of neoglobalism," which provides for crude interference in the affairs of other countries and a diktat of force on the international arena. With this aim in mind, Washington plans to achieve in particular the coordination of the Western countries' efforts under the pretext of "a struggle against terrorism," which, as is known, is used beyond the ocean to disguise policies of armed piracy and state terrorism. The President left no doubt about the fact that the recent bandit raids by the U.S. Air Force on residential areas of Tripoli and Banghazi, which led to many victims among the peaceful population, served as a "model" of how the policy of neoglobalism should be carried out. But, Reagan emphasized, "unilateral actions are not enough. It must be tackled jointly and this will be discussed in Tokyo." Reagan will try to pull together an international coalition against Libya and other countries whom the administration accuses of terrorist activities -- this was CBS television's comment on the President's words.

Later, when answering questions from a group of journalists at the White House, Reagan again launched into attack after attack on Libya, declaring that, if that country's government does not change its policies "we shall act once more." At the same time, overstepping all bounds and, evidently, without thinking about the consequences for the United States, he threatened military action against other countries in the Middle East whose policies do not suit Washington. When asked directly whether he meant Syria and Iran, countries that the U.S. State Department has long regarded as being among those "encouraging terrorism," Reagan replied, "yes."

Seeking to dispel the unfavorable impression that the unrestrained militarist pronouncements by the head of a superpower had made on international opinion, the White House immediately endeavored to "correct" the President. A White House spokesman who preferred to remain anonymous told journalists that the President as he put it, really meant that the United States would be obliged to resort to military force only as an "extreme measure," after all other means of resolving disputes had been exhausted. However, this awkward maneuver did not come off. Under persistent questioning by journalists, he was forced to admit Reagan made no such qualifications during the interview.

Observers draw attention to the fact that there was no mention found on the agenda drawn up by Reagan for the Tokyo conference for an issue as central and vital to world destiny [diya sudeb mira] as the problem of arms control. The President only touched on this crucial question in passing when baldly mentioning Washington's desire for peace.

Turning to financial, economic, and trade matters, which will be discussed in Tokyo, the President tried to depict the United States as an altruistic benefactor of the developing countries. He did his best to sell the administration's so-called "Baker plan," which, on the pretext of providing debtor-countries with emergency aid, aims to further enslave the developing states and interfere in their internal affairs.

The "Baker plan" has already been condemned by a number of developing countries as a neocolonial tool aimed at destroying their social and economic gains, binding them even more closely to the West's economic machine as a source of resources and cheap labor satisfying the selfish interests of Western capital and multinational — above all, U.S. corporations. As is well known, the developing countries debt burden to the West amounts to $1 trillion. For many debtor countries, interest payments alone exceed export earnings, which means that their debt continues to grow.

Judging by the speech, Washington intends to put pressure on its industrially developed partners. As Reagan unambiguously stated, in Tokyo he will insist that the other members of the "seven" open their markets to U.S. products, and will threaten otherwise to tighten up protectionist measures affecting their exports to the United States.

Baker Plan Criticized

LD241802 Moscow TASS in English 1543 GMT 23 Apr 86

["A Good Deed With Burglary" -- TASS identifier]

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- TASS News Analyst Ivan Ablamov writes:

U.S. President Ronald Reagan, presenting the United States in the role of "benefactor" of the young developing countries, on Wednesday stated an intention to put through the so-called Baker plan at the forthcoming meeting of the 'big seven' in Tokyo. It must be recalled that the plan envisages the allocation in the course of three years of 29,000 million dollars by commercial banks at loans to 15 developing countries which have run into the highest debts.

If one compares this "good deed" with the extent of the plunder of the countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America by the United States and by other leading capitalist powers, the cynicism with which Washington is painting a rosy picture of the U.S. neocolonialist policy is striking. Let us turn to facts. In 1985 alone Western commercial banks gained a net profit of 22,000 million dollars from operations in the developing countries, which incidentally is approximately equal to loans under the Baker plan. Within the same year, 134,500 million dollars were remitted from the newly-free countries to the West as a result of the payment of the monstrous trillions-worth external indebtedness by them and of interest on it. In the period of 1975 to 1985 the developing countries paid a total of 900,000 million dollars to Western "financial benefactors" in repayments of debts and of interest on them. There is no doubt as to who helps whom in actual fact. As was admitted in the latest report of the World Bank, in 1985 the West and, first of all, the United States, pumped 22,000 million dollars more from the developing countries than they have invested in their economies over the same period.

Added to this should be the plunder of the developing countries by U.S. and other TNC's [transnational corporations] which gain in the 'Third World' an average of 2.5 and quite often much more dollars on each vested dollar. The plunder has also the form of inequitable trade. Over the past decade the prices of raw materials from the developing countries went down approximately by half while the cost of industrial import from the USA and other Western countries sharply grew. Even food was included in the sphere of profiteering. For example, African countries now pay for food 14 percent more to the West than a year ago.

As a result of plunder by the United States and other Western powers in 1981-1984 the average annual economic growth rate in Latin America as a whole was nil. Annual GNP increment in Africa is only 0.7 percent, and per capita incomes over there shrink.

This time Washington, speculating on the Baker plan and other financial projects, is presenting the case as if the United States takes care of the "economic growth" of the 'Third World'. But the projects are prompted not by this but by concern for big developing countries, and for greater expansion of TNC's in them. It is not fortuitous that in exchange for the "aid" it is being demanded of the newly-free countries to create the most "favourable climate" for foreign private capital (to the detriment of the state sector), to mothball industrial construction projects and to develop predominantly export-oriented sectors with a view to ensuring the repayment of debts to the West, and so on. It is quite natural that such neocolonialist policy meets with resistance among the countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Mideast 'Marshall Plan' Noted

LD242127 Moscow TASS in English 2025 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- TASS News Analyst Vasiliy Kharkov writes:

Washington will be exerting pressure on U.S. partners at the coming summit of the major seven capitalist countries in Tokyo to compel them participate intensively in the U.S.-Israeli attempts to impose capitulatory deals on Arab countries. President Reagan said on Wednesday that he will be pursuading the allies to join in the economic program for the Middle East. The White House spokesman Larry Speakes said later that the "Marshall Plan" for the region is what is meant.

The idea of such a plan was advanced by most prominent Jewish financiers in the USA in mid-seventies. The authors of the idea set themselves the aim of ensuring the United States economic domination in the Middle East and of creating the possibilities for the penetration of Arab countries by Israeli capital. This idea was picked up in Tel Aviv. During his recent visit to the USA, Israeli Prime Minister Peres suggested the creation of a special fund "for the economic development of the region on the basis of cooperation". He described his proposal as the "Marshall Plan" for the Middle East by analogy with the U.S. plan for Western Europe that ensured the dominant positions for the United States there.

During the U.S.-Israeli talks last April the sides made it plain for what purpose the "Marshall Plan" for the Middle East had been advanced. Shim'on Peres was quite outspoken in declaring that the present economic difficulties experienced by Arab petroleum extracting countries in connection with a sharp fall off of petroleum prices can make them more plaint with regard to the "peace process" in the Camp David spirit, in other words, to separate deals. THE NEW YORK TIMES wrote in this connection that since the United States political efforts in the Middle East had failed, Washington and Tel Aviv hope to achieve success by making promises of economic aid to some Arab countries.

Where such aid leads can be seen, for instance, on Egypt's example. It follows from what was said by a representative of the U.S. Agency for International Development in the Arab Republic of Egypt that the granting of U.S. aid to Egypt had above all political reasons, namely the striving to draw Cairo in the "peace process" in the Middle East the way it is viewed and implemented by the USA and its strategic ally, Israel. The U.S. press does not sting the praise when describing the advantages Egypt gets from U.S. AID. But here is what the newspaper AL AHRAM wrote in this connection: "The granting of U.S. aid is stipulated by a number of economic and political conditions. The funds Egypt gets must be spent exclusively on the purchase of U.S.-made goods whose prices, as a rule, are 40-60 per cent higher than those of similar products from other countries. The United States views Egypt above all as a vast market".

REAGAN SEEKS LESS CONGRESSIONAL CONTROL OF DEFENSE

LD250928 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0300 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Washington, 25 Apr (TASS) -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Shalnev reports:

On Thursday, President Reagan sent a special message to congress on the question of reforms in the defense field. As the message stresses, these reforms are aimed at "raising the military effectiveness" of America. Some of these are already being implemented "administratively" as a result of the recently published special presidential instruction. This time the head of the White House is proposing that Congress adopt legislative measures which he considers essential to implement other "significant" reforms.

As can be seen from the message, the White House attaches special importance in particular to providing the greatest "freedom of action" for the Defense Department and reducing to a minium congressional control over its activity and budget. Thus, Reagan expresses open dissatisfaction that too many committees, as he sees it, of both houses of Congress have the right to check various aspects of the U.S. military programs. The President calls for an end to this. As he sees it, Congress' role in the military sphere should be reduced to... "A firm adherence by the legislators to supporting the Armed Forces."

In other words, the head of the White House is calling for Congress to unconditionally rubber-stamp any requests from the administration for more and more billions of dollars for the arms race. It is precisely such reforms which the President calls "significant" in his message.

SHULTZ SAYS U.S. WILL USE MILITARY AGAINST TERRORISM

LD242007 Moscow TASS in English 1942 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 24 (TASS) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz has confirmed that under the pleas of "combatting the terrorism: the Washington administration intended to use military power against any sovereign state in the future as well.

The head of the U.S. foreign policy department made it plain in an interview with West European journalists broadcast on channels of the U.S. Information Agency television network that "the United States will use its military power in this fight against terrorism". According to him, the action against Libya is a concrete embodiment of this course of Washington.

U.S. CONTINUING 'PROVOCATIVE SHOW OF FORCE' OFF LIBYA

LD241222 Moscow TASS in English 1158 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 24 TASS -- Having embarked on armed interference in the internal affairs of sovereign Libya, the Reagan administration is continuing the provocative show of force off that country's coast.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS today quoted administration officials as saying that American planes from the aircraft-carrier "America were flying continuously along the Libyan coast.

Fighter-bombers and electronic surveillance planes engaged in gathering information on various facilities on Libyan territory were in the air.

Indicatively, White house and Pentagon officials denied that the United States was continuing any military activity against Libya.

The AP report made it clear that the American aggressors, their heads still dizzy following the bombing of Libya, were brazenly operating in the region in violation of the existing international norms.

The AP observed that the U.S. was supposed to notify world air traffic organizations of its actions in air space off the Libyan coast. According to the AP, "the flights mark an end to the practice of notifying international aviation authorities in advance of flight operations off the Libyan coast."

These actions were thus jeopardising civilian airliners of various nationalities flying through the air space of the middle East region of great importance for the entire world.

"We are going to operate in the region whenever we wish," the AP quoted an identified Washington official.

Local analysts, commenting on the American flights, observed that they were linked with the preparation for another aerial strike on Libya. President Reagan himself repeatedly mentioned this possibility.

The AP also reported that the second American aircraft-carrier "Coral Sea," which was involved in the aggression against Libya, completed its stay in Naples, Italy, and was returning to the Mediterranean.

According to the news agency, the Pentagon already adopted a decision to keep two aircraft-carrier groups in the region. Usually there was only one American aircraft-carrier.

PRAVDA CLAIMS U.S. PREPLANNED ATTACK ON LIBYA

PM240914 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[V. Mikhaylov "Observer's Opinion" under general headline "The Libyan People Are Not Alone": "Lynch's Ghost in Washington"]

[Text] "The plans for the combined bombings (of Libya) by naval aircraft and the Air Force were prepared over many months . . . The operation was the culmination of the steps that had been taken." This statement by U.S. military spokesmen which was published in THE WASHINGTON POST confirms that the preparations for the U.S. aggression began long before the bombing of the West Berlin discotheques. Nonetheless, this explosion is still being cited in Washington as the reason for the raid on Libya.

However, in reality it never was, nor could it be, a question of retribution against Libya. The evidence provided by the U.S. military spokesmen in THE WASHINGTON POST is not the only thing that bears this out. There have been reports, for instance, of a secret mission having been dispatched from Washington to Cairo with the aim of prompting Egypt to take part in a joint military operation against Libya from land and sea. There have been reports of millions of dollars being allocated by the special services to organize political assassinations and a coup in the country.

However, the lengthy search for accomplices in the planned aggression against Libya came to nothing. And so the hot heads in Washington decided to go ahead regardless. They joined up with London and got the bombers airborne.

It can now be said that the strike against Libya was simultaneously a strike against the United States itself. Ever since the dirty war in Vietnam, no one has succeeded in placing the United States in such complete international isolation as the Reagan administration has just done. Even the British prime minister is saying now that the next time the United States makes a similar request she will think twice before granting it. All of America's closest allies have dissociated themselves from Washington's act of terrorism. When a White House spokesman stated that Japan's head of government had allegedly also been told in advance about the attack against Libya, Tokyo hastened to deny it.

Now that the world is outraged, Washington would like to mislead the public. A story has been hastily concocted claiming that it is all the fault of...the Soviet Union. A State Department spokesman has said that the U.S. Administration had allegedly appealed to the USSR for cooperation in averting the terrorist act in West Berlin, and that, had the Soviet side responded, the United States need not have resorted to military measures.

This ploy was exposed literally the next day. At a press conference in Moscow it was announced that the U.S. call for "cooperation" made in Berlin did not provide any grounds for joint action.

A day after the press conference in Moscow, Washington confirmed that the U.S. side had indeed failed to furnish the Soviet side with hard facts. So what question could there be of cooperation? Of missed chances?

However, the following question arises in connection with the U.S. statements: If Washington did have the information, why did it not prevent the bomb explosion in West Berlin? This is not a rhetorical question. It is well known that in the West and primarily in the United States, there are forces opposed to international detente. For them, explosions in peaceful cities provide a welcome pretext to beat the military drum. This must not be forgotten, and not just when trying, in retrospect, to assess the "interconnection" between the explosion on the dance floor in West Berlin and the U.S. bombing of Libya.

Now, after the terrorist raid on Libya, Washington is trying to create the false impression among the world public that the U.S. side allegedly "continues to brief" the USSR and "is hoping for cooperation." It would be difficult to come up with anything more cynical. How is it possible with one hand to issue the command to bomb, to kill women and children, while extending the other hand for cooperation! However, the point is not just the immorality of this kind of proposal. You get the impression that the perpetrators of the crime against Libya would now like to provide themselves with some kind of long-term alibi enabling the United States to carry out new acts of state terrorism.

Frankly speaking, what is being done in Washington under the pretext of combatting terrorism is reminiscent of "lynch law." In the old days in America, racists would, under any pretext whatsoever, catch any black they did not like and hang him from the nearest tree. Now the scale and the equipment has changed. The United States is attacking whole states that it does not like. And supersonic bombers have replaced the rope. This is not the only thing that has changed. There are no more defenseless "blacks," or rather states, in the world now. There is no applauding mob of fanatics. Instead there is the outraged world community. And the attempts to introduce "lynch law" into the practice of international relations are a truly futile venture.

SOVIET MUSLIMS DEMONSTRATE AT U.S. EMBASSY IN MOSCOW

LD242107 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Interview with Mafti Shamsutdin Babakhanov, chairman of the Spiritual Directorate of Muslims in Central Asia and Kazakhstan, with correspondent A. Ukhov; from the "Vremya" newscast — recorded]

[Text] [Ukhov] Representatives of the Soviet Union's Muslim religious leaders went to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow today with the request that it receive and listen to their view regarding the U.S. aggression against Libya. After waiting for a quarter of an hour, the delegation led by Mufti Shamsutdin Babakhanov, chairman of the Spiritual Directorate of Muslims in Central Asia and Kazakhstan, was allowed to enter the embassy. This is the first Soviet public delegation that has been received by U.S. diplomats in Moscow.

[Babakhanov] Well, this is a flagrant action by the United States. Recently in particular the Muslim world has become a target for its attacks. Its latest action against Libya has been a really disgraceful action, and the USSR's Muslims have sent us as a delegation to declare their indignation in a statement addressed to Mr Reagan. We have conveyed our indignation to the first secretary at the embassy.

[Ukhov] How was the meeting with the embassy secretary?

[Babakhanov] Well, it took place. Such occasions cannot fail to have an effect. One could have wished that the meeting had occurred at some other time than at this particular juncture.

[Ukhov] Will the support of the whole world be of any avail in halting the USA's aggression in Libya?

[Babakhanov] It must be of assistance, because public opinion is much stronger than any weapon.

U.S. REPORTEDLY SHIPPING ARMS TO NICARAGUAN CONTRAS

LD242211 Moscow TASS in English 1818 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 24 TASS -- The United States has covertly shipped to the Nicaraguan contras arms and equipment in the amount which is enough to continue the undeclared war against Nicaragua for many months, AP news agency has reported quoting U.S. officials.

This bears out anew that the Washington administration escalates behind the back of Congress the undeclared war totally disregarding the fact that the House of Representatives voted against the release of 100 million dollars in arms shipment to contras.

[Text] Tokyo, 24 Apr (TASS) -- A spokesman for the Japanese Foreign Ministry has called the results of the 10th joint conference of the Soviet-Japanese and Japanese-Soviet committees for economic cooperation very useful and important. Replying to a question from Aleksandr Anichkin, a TASS correspondent, he pointed out that the very fact that a large group of representatives from Japanese circles has taken part in the work of the conference speaks for itself. But even more important is the fact that Japanese businessmen who visited the USSR were able to acquaint themselves with the large-scale USSR plans for economic and social development and to discuss opportunities for expanding bilateral economic cooperation, said the Foreign Ministry spokesman.

[TASS report: "In a Friendly Atmosphere"]

[Excerpts] A dinner was given 21 April in the Grand Kremlin Palace by the Soviet Government in honor of Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers. Officials accompanying S.'A. Keshtmand on his trip were also present.

Arkhipov and V.S. Murakhovskiy, deputy chairmen of the USSR Council of Ministers, USSR ministers, chairmen of USSR state committees, and other officials.

The speeches by Comrades N.I. Ryzhkov and S.'A. Keshtmand were listened to attentively and greeted with applause. The dinner proceeded in a warm, friendly atmosphere.

Keshtmand's Reception Remarks

LD230708 Kabul BAKHTAR in English 0426 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Kabul, Apr 22, BAKHTAR: The revolutionary and nonaligned Afghanistan being an Asian country has a special interest in ensuring peace and security in Asia, said Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, Politburo member of the Central Committee of the PDPA and chairman of the Council of Ministers of the DRA when he was speaking at a reception held in Kremlin Palace. Pursuing such a policy, S.'A. Keshtmand added, the state of the DRA has set forth clear proposals for the political solution of the situation around Afghanistan. The measures taken by the state of the DRA is in full conformity with the Soviet conception to establish peace in Asia.

Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand in his speech emphatically referred to the statement made by M.S. Gorbachev in the 27th Soviet party congress on the agreed terms of the stage-by-stage withdrawals of the Soviet limied contingents from Afghanistan as soon as a political settlement is reached guaranteeing the real termination of the armed intervention from abroad into the internal affairs of Afghanistan and its non-recurrence. The adoption of such an approach, he stressed, is an obvious manifestation of the serious inclination of the DRA and the Soviet Union for finding a political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan.

Now we are awaiting for such a responsible and realistic approach from the other side as well, the chairman of the Council of Ministers said. Unfortunately, Pakistan which is in word in favour of the normalisation of its relations with the DRA but in deed it intensifies its interventions into the internal affairs of Afghanistan which is organised by the United States and its allies and the reaction of the region.

However, the efforts made by the enemies of the April Revolution for reversing the events to the darkness of the past is doomed. The awakened and revolutionary people of Afghanistan will not allow their enemies to fulfill their ominous plans, said S.'A. Keshtmand.

The party and state of the DRA and its people, he emphasized, have been enjoying the reliable support of the Soviet Union, the socialist countries and that of the revolutionary movement of the world. The enriched revolutionary experience of those forces and the all-sided fraternal assistance of the Soviet Union is a guarantor of the final victory of the April Revolution, the chairman of the Council of Ministers said.

Pre-Departure Interview

LD232108 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Interview by unidentified correspondent with Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, DRA Council of Ministers chairman, on 23 April in Moscow; Keshtmand speaks in vernacular with superimposed Russian translation -- from the "Vremya" newscast; recorded]

[Text] Our visit to the USSR was an additional step in the direction of further strengthening and deepening the fruitful, friendly, and fraternal relations existing between our peoples, governments and parties.

We express deep gratitude for being allowed the opportunity to visit your country an to discuss a number of questions concerning bilateral economic relations.

It is significant that our visit took place at a time when all the Soviet people were celeberating the 116th anniversary of the birth of the great Lenin. During the visit, the signing took place of a number of extremely important documents, which bear witness to the very high level of our current bilateral relations, the foundations of which were laid by Vlidimir Ilich Lenin.

During the talks we were informed about the large-scale creative plans of your government and party aimed at accelerating the country's economic development and about the long-term tasks that were outlined in Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's Political Report. The decisions adopted at the congress are a great school of experience for us. We also understand very well the vast importance of the peace-loving Soviet initiatives and we resolutely support the latest Soviet peace proposals that were made by Comrade Gorbachev at the 11th SED Congress in Berlin. These Soviet initiatives are aimed at curbing the arms race and averting the threat of nuclear catastrophe. They enjoy the all-around support of the whole of the progressive mankind, all the peoples of the world, and, of course, of our Afghan people, whose most sincere wish is to live in peace and to make progress along the path begun by the April Revolution.

Soviet-Afghan Communique

["Soviet-Afghan Joint Communique" -- IZVESTIYA headline"]

[Text] At the invitation of the Soviet Government, Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers, was in the Soviet Union from 21-23 April 1986 on an official, friendly visit. The head of the DRA Government and accompanying officials were warmly received -- a reflection of the feelings of friendship felt by the Soviet people toward the Afghan people. The eminent Afghan guest visited the mausoleum of V.I. Lenin and laid a wreath. A wreath was also laid at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at the Kremlin Wall.

Talks were held between N.I. Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and S.'A Keshtmand, during which both sides displayed complete mutual understanding and common views on all questions discussed.

The Soviet side reported on the work under way in the Soviet Union on implementing the tasks put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress. It was stressed that the strategic line that was adopted, the practical program for the acceleration of the socioeconomic development of the Soviet Union, and the course toward consolidating peace on earth are the main political results of the congress. Its decisions determine the nature and the rates of advancement for Soviet society for the years and decades to come.

The Afghan side told of the socioeconomic transformations occuring in the PDPA Central Committee and the extraordinary session of the DRA Revolutionary Council, directed at drawing representatives of broad cross-sections of the population into the implementation of nationwide tasks. It expressed profound gratitude for the all-around help being furnished by the Soviet Union in developing the national Afghan economy and social sphere, and in rebutting the aggression unleashed by forces of imperialism and reaction against the DRA. The Afghan side also told of the efforts it is making for the speedy attainment of a political settlement of the situation around Afghanistan. The basic requirement must be total cessation and guaranteed nonresumption of armed and all external interference in the internal affairs of the DRA.

The Soviet side emphasized that, as noted at the 27th CPSU Congress, the USSR supports Afghanistan's efforts aimed at defending its sovereignty. Full support for the realistic and constructive program of political settlement, put forward by the DRA Government was confirmed. The sides, having recently marked the 65th anniversary of the first Soviet-Afghan treaty, stated with deep satisfaction that the relations of friendship, genuine good-neighborliness and all-around cooperation between the two countries were steadily developing and deepening on the basis of the principles of complete equality, mutual respect for national sovereignty and territorial integrity, and noninterference in each other's internal affairs.

Highly assessing the level of Soviet-Afghan economic cooperation, the sides noted that in recent years it has been imbued with fresh content and has become lasting and stable.

They expressed mutual interest in developing and strengthening cooperation on a long-term and mutally advantageous basis in various fields of the economy and the social sphere, taking into consideration the plans for the economic and social development of both countries. Meeting the wishes of the Afghan side, the Soviet side has announced its readiness to render assistance to the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan in the implementation of the plan for the social and economic development of the DRA for 1986-1990, particularly in the design, construction, expansion, reconstruction, and operation of enterprises and projects in the field of extracting and processing natural gas, oil, solid minerals; the chemical, light, and other industries; the construction of power stations and transmission lines; projects in agriculture, irrigation, transportation, communications, health services, education, and culture; and the acceptance of Afghan citizens for education in Soviet academic establishments.

Having expressed satisfaction with the successful development of Soviet-Afghan trade relations, the participants in the talks declared that the USSR and the DRA will mutually strive to do everything to expand trade on the basis of the principles of equality and mutual advantage and of most favored nation status [naibolshego blagopriyatstvovaniya]. It was noted that an important role in this should be played by the new agreement on trade for the forethcoming 5-year period, signed in February 1986.

A treaty on the basic directions of economic and trade cooperation, and the protocol concerning questions of economic cooperation for 1986-1990 was signed during the visit.

The sides expressed their intention to continue to give constant attention to Soviet-Afghan ties in the sphere of culture, education, health care, and sports. They stated that they will promote an expansion of contacts between Soviet and Afghan organizations and institutions with the goal of deeper familiarization with the life, labor experience, and achievements of the peoples of both countries.

The sides exchanged views on topical international problems. The coincidence of the positions of the USSR and the DRA on the questions discussed and the unanimity in assessment of the situation in the world, and of the reasons for its dangerous tension and opportunities for improvement were noted. The USSR and DRA stressed the importance of joint efforts by all peace-loving forces in counteraction the imperialist policy of aggression and militarism.

The Soviet side reported on its steps aimed at the practical implementation of foreign policy initiatives contained in the 15 January 1986 statement by M.S. Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary, in the CPSU Central Committee's Political Report to the 27th party congress and in the speech by M.S. Gorbachev at the 11th SED Congress.

The Afghan side expressed full support for the plan of step-by-step elimination of nuclear weapons and other means of mass destruction by the end of the present century, which has been proposed by the Soviet Union, and its proposals for the creation of a comprehensive system of international security and considerable reduction of conventional arms and armed forces in Europe.

Both sides affirmed that the adoption of the Soviet nuclear disarmament program would allow a halt to the arms race on earth and not allow its spread into space; it would allow a radical improvement in the situation in the world and a switch of considerable amounts of money to development needs, including for the developing countries.

It was emphasized that at the present stage a question of prime importance, the solution of which would open the way to freeing mankind from nuclear weapons, is to stop testing them without delay.

The DRA welcomed the constructive steps of the Soviet Union directed at solving the question of nuclear tests. The sides declared that the unwillingness of the United States to stop testing nuclear weapons is evidence of the intention of the U.S. Administration to continue its reckless militarist course of accelerating the arms race and acquiring military superiority. The USSR and Afghanistan resolutely condemn this course.

Both sides expressed a firm conviction of the need to persistently strive to unite the efforts of all interested states in order to strengthen peace and safeguard security in Asia. It was stressed here that a joint search for ways to a political settlement of conflict situations and the removal on the basis of the acuity of military confrontation in various regains of the Asian Continent are of particular urgency at the present stage. This would contribute to a stabilization of the situation in the region and the creation of preconditions for further steps along the path of transforming Asia into a zone of peace and good-neighborliness.

The USSR and the DRA noted the urgent need to attain a just and all-encompassing settlement in the Near East on the basis of the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied sine 1967, and the need to implement the legitimate right of the Palestinian people to self-determinaton and the creation of its own state.

The sides emphasized that the path to this objective lies through the convocation of an international conference with the participation of all the sides involved, including the PLO, which is the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

The sides resolutely condemn U.S. aggression against Libya. The piratical attack carried out by U.S. imperialism against this Arab country cannot be seen in any other way than as a criminal outrage against rights and morals, which constitutes a grave threat to universal peace and security. The USSR and the DRA demand that an end be put to the aggressive actions against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, and reaffirm their solidarity with and support for the Libyan people.

The sides noted the important role of the nonaligned countries as an influential force on the international arena, their contribution to the preservation and consolidation of universal peace; to the prevention of nuclear war; to ending the arms race, to the anti-imperialist struggle for the elimination of racism, neocolonialism, and economic discrimination; and to setting up equal international cooperation. It was stressed by the Soviet side in this connecton that it feels a deep respect for the policy of nonalignment pursued by the DRA.

The side favor the reorganization of international economic relations on a just, democratic basis and for the establishment of a new world economic order that will guarantee the equal economic security of all states. They stressed that it is necessary to replace the principle imposed by militarism -- that of arms instead of development -- with the reverse order of things -- disarmament for development, in order to improve peoples' living conditions and to eliminate economic backwardness and the underdevelopment of many states.

Note was taken of the importance of the task of establishing an all-encompassing system of international economic security, in equal measure guaranteeing every state against discrimination, sanctions, and the other attributes of imperialist, neocolonialist policies. The shared conviction that intercourse between states should be free from arbitrary behavior and illegal embargoes and boycotts, and from trade, credit, and technological blockades, and the use of economic links as a weapon of political pressure and interference in the domestic affairs of sovereign states was expressed. The sides declared themselves to be in favor of holding specific and businesslike talks within the UN framework, with all states participating, to seek a global resolution to the most important international economic problems.

Both sides expressed deep satisfaction at the positive results of the exchange of opinions that took place and expressed confidence that the visit by the head of government of the DRA would serve the further strengthening of friendship, good-neighborliness, and comprehensive cooperation between the USSR and the DRA.

S.'A. Keshtmand expressed sincere gratitude for the warm reception given to him and to those accompanying him in the USSR.

On behalf of the Government of the DRA, S.'A. Keshtmand invited N.I. Ryzhkov, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, to pay an official, friendly visit to the DRA at a time convenient to him. The invitation was accepted with gratitude.

AFGHAN TRIBES VOTE FOR 'NATIONAL FREEDOM'

PM150835 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 12 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Own special correspondent V. Okulov dispatch: "The Free Tribes' Determination"]

[Text] Kabul, 11 Apr -- The speeches of the participants in the Jirga of the free tribes, which completed its work in Kabul yesterday, were full of pain and anger. The elders and representatives of the Africa, Shinwari, Mohmand, and other Pashtun and Baluchi tribes living in the Pakistan border regions spoke about the crimes perpetrated by the Pakistani military in their mountain settlements. But these were also speeches full of courage and a desire to unite to defend national freedom, human rights, and their honor and dignity against the Pakistani military. The Jirga provided a clear analysis of what had led to the tragic events of the last 2 years and to the genocide practiced against the Pushtuns. The prime cause of Islamabad's aggression, delegates said, is America's desire to use its puppets to dominate our native land, to set up military bases and espionage centers on it, and to use it to continue the undeclared war against the homeland of our ancestors motherland -- revolutionary Afghanistan.

The Jirga delegates' stance was reflected in its resolution. It states the Pushtuns' firm intention to expel the Pakistani rulers' troops and the Afghan dushman gangs from their land. The tribes declared their full support for the revolution in Afghanistan and called on Afghan refugees, duped by imperialist propaganda and counterrevolutionary leaders, to return home and begin a dignified life in their motherland with the DRA Government's humanitarian assistance.

SOVIET OFFICIALS MEET WITH PRESIDENT AQUINO

Kapitsa Meeting Canceled

OW250833 Tokyo KYODO in English 0825 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Manila, April 25 KYODO -- The Soviet Union Friday requested cancellation of a scheduled meeting here between President Corazon Aquino and Mikhail Kapitsa, visiting Soviet deputy foreign minister. Soviet Embassy officials gave Kapitsa's sudden illness as the reason. But his actual health condition was not known immediately.

Kapitsa will return to Bangkok Saturday as originally scheduled, the embassy officials said. He came here while attending the general meeting of the U.N. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) in the Thai capital.

Watchers paid attention to the Aquino-Kapitsa meeting because he was to be the first high-ranking Soviet official to meet her after the birth of her government.

Ambassador Discusses Cooperation

HK170927 Hong Kong AFP in English 0901 GMT 17 Apr 86

[Text] Manila, April 17 (AFP) -- The Soviet ambassador to Manila met Philippine President Corazon Aquino for the first time Thursday to discuss cooperation between their countries.

Ambassador Vadim Shabalin said that moscow had smoothed out what was then considered by diplomats as an embarrasing blunder -- its recognition of now deposed President Ferdinand Marcos as the winner of a disputed February 7 election.

The ambassador, posted here two and a half months ago, had congratulated Mr. Marcos after the latter was proclaimed the winner over Mrs. Aquino. He was the only diplomat to do so.

"During our conversation with President Aquino, we discussed our bilateral relations... the prospect of cooperation, as well as thrashed out some points on international issues that are of mutual interest," he told reporters at the presidential palace.

"I would like to tell you that the President of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. which is our parliament and the highest authority in our country, sent a message of congratulations to Mrs. Aquino on the 27th of February," two days after Mr. Marcos fled in exile, Mr. Shabalin said.

Widely held to have been rigged in Mr. Marcos's favor, the conduct of the February poll sparked a military mutiny which led to a popular revolt that ended the Marcos government in February.

Asked if the U.S.-Libyan crisis was discussed, he said: "I believe in general I answered the question." Manila has said it would have no part in the affair.

SOVIET TU DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR POLISH FESTIVAL

PM221417 Moscow TRUD in Russian 22 Apr 86 p 3

[Special correspondents Yu. Vasilkov, V. Yermolayev report: "Friendly Cooperation: Ceremonial Opening of the Soviet Trade Unions Festival in Poland"]

[Text] Warsaw, 21 Apr -- A Soviet trade union delegation headed by AUCCTU Secretary K. Yu. Matskyavichyus has arrived in Warsaw to take part in the Soviet Trade Unions Festival in Poland at the invitation of the National Trade Union Federation [OPZZ].

Delegations from trade union Central Committees, oblast trade union councils, and labor collectives, which maintain constant friendly, businesslike ties with related Polish enterprises, will also take part in the festival. The delegations include trade union workers, production frontrunners, and 27th CPSU Congress delegates.

On the festival program are meetings at enterprises in Warsaw, Katowice, Krakow, Gdansk, and many Polish voivodships. There will be an all-around exchange of opinions on the trade unions' tasks and the ways of further strengthening ties between the two countries' working people.

On the eve of the festival a series of items appeared in the Polish press stressing the great significance of these meetings. TRYBUNA LUDU wrote in its Sunday issue that the Soviet Trade Unions Festival in Poland will enrich the experience necessary for further deepening mutual cooperation. ZYCIE WARSZAWY stresses that the dynamic development of contacts with the Land of the Soviets is a characteristic feature of the international activity of the reborn Polish trade union movement. The central trade union weekly ZVIEZKOWIEC: TYGODNIK POPULARNY, in an editorial, expresses the hope that the forthcoming bilateral meetings will serve to strengthen friendship between the Polish and Soviet peoples.

The ceremonial opening of the festival took place at Warsaw's M. Nowotko machines plant.

The Soviet guests were welcomed by OPZZ Vice Chairman L. Brojanowski. A speech was delivered by AUCCTU Secretary K. Yu. Matskyavichyus. He noted that the USSR Trade Unions Festival in Poland is taking place during a remarkable period. The 27th CPSU Congress adopted strategically important decisions, which the Soviet trade unions are working to implement. In Poland, preparations for the 10th PZPR Congress and the 2d National Trade Union Conference are in full swing. The AUCCTU secretary told those present that the collectives of a number of major Soviet enterprises, which cooperate with related Polish enterprises, have adopted socialist pledges in honor of the 10th PZPR Congress.

Increasing the effectiveness of bilateral cooperation, the speaker went on, a businesslike, creative, and constructive exchange of opinions and experience, and an innovative approach to the questions under discussion -- these are the demands of the times. As practice shows, this kind of work brings the best results and endows with more concrete content and lifts to a new level the development of our friendship and cooperation, which are based on the immutable principles of Marxism-Leninism.

On the first day of its stay in Poland the AUCCTU delegation was received by M. Wizniak, member of the Politburo and secretary of the PZPR Central Committee.

The delegations from the USSR dispersed to visit various Polish voivodships. A week of intensive work lies ahead. The festival lasts until 26 April.

POLISH-SOVIET TREATY JUBILEE CELEBRATED

PM211325 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 21 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Dispatch by own correspondent O. Losoto: "Time Has Confirmed It"]

[Excerpts] Warsaw, 20 Apr -- Today the Soviet and Polish peoples celebrate a notable date — the 41st anniversary of the treaty of friendship, cooperation, and mutual aid. This treaty has become the unshakable foundation of the fraternal alliance between the USSR and Poland and loyally serves the cause of peace, progress, and socialism.

In recent years a qualitatively new stage has come to Polish-Soviet relations. The consistent implementation of the long-term program for the development of economic and scientific-technical cooperation between the USSR and Poland for the period through 2000 and other agreements and bilateral accords and of the reciprocal commitments within the CEMA framework serves the further intensification of cooperation and integration and the resolute acceleration of the two countries' socioeconomic development.

In the current 5-year plan the Soviet Union will take part in the completion of the modernization and construction of 11 major industrial projects in Poland. Five joint Soviet-Polish enterprises will be created. Production sharing will start to develop rapidly. It is planned that trade turnover undertaken within the framework of sharing agreements should double by the end of the 5-year plan. This form of cooperation will be implemented primarily in aircraft and motor vehicle building, in creating construction and road equipment, in electronics, atomic power engineering, and several other sectors.

The protocol on coordinating scientific-technical cooperation for 1986-1990 provides for over 90 Polish and 180 Soviet scientific research organizations taking part in its implementation. Many dozens of types of machinery, apparatus, equipment, new materials and biological products, and manufacturing processes will be jointly developed and introduced.

The Polish side supplies the USSR with equipment for modernizing plants for the production of sulfuric acid, machinery and equipment for the production complex, and a wide range of machine tools and other articles.

The Soviet-Polish treaty not only regulates the two countries' fraternal relations. It has become an important factor of peace and stability and the inviolability of borders in Europe. Poland resolutely supports the broad complex of Soviet peace initiatives aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and other means of mass destruction and the principles for creating a comprehensive system of international security approved by the 17th CPSU Congress.

Impressing prospects have been outlined for the Soviet Union's development. The new heights that People's Poland should scale were outlined in the documents published for the 10th PZPR Congress. Their discussion is now under way in the party and labor collectives.

In their advance, in the solution of the great and complex socioeconomic tasks, the CPSU and the PZPR and the USSR and Poland rely on the fraternal alliance, cooperation, and mutual aid of our countries and peoples and entire socialist community.

FRENCH DAILY CLAIMS U.S. AIRCRAFT FLEW OVER PYRENEES

LD231408 Moscow TASS in English 1318 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Paris, April 23 TASS -- The French Weekly LE CANARD ENCHAINE says:

The Americans have made a laughing-stock of the French and Spanish Governments. This is the opinion of many French officers claiming to be well-informed. According to them, the U.S. F-111 bombers based in Britain, whose mission was to drop hundreds of tonnes of bombs on Libyan targets, did not round the Pyrenees, as everybody claimed. No, they cut their way short and crossed the Pyrenees from West to East.

That was an insolent trick: Thus, U.S. Air Force planes flew over parts of French and Spanish territory without permission from either Paris or Madrid. On April 19, the newspaper LE MONDE mentioned such a possibility, saying that eighteen F-111 aircraft could well slip through, taking advantage of the mountain terrain of the Pyrenees.

Hence it follows that all the maps published in the press and showing the route along which Reagan's bombers allegedly flew, were faked up. It must be noted for that matter that the maps were made up according to information received from the Americans themselves. Yet the F-111 aircraft entered the Mediterranean not through Gibraltar, but across the French-Spanish Pyrenees. Only 40 tanker planes (KC-10 and KC-135), which were used for that mission, obediently flew by the longest route through Gibraltar.

The F-111 flew over the mountain range in the dead of the night and almost at the level of the mountains, so that Spanish and French radars could not detect them.

The F-111 aircraft are equipped with onboard radars making it possible to set course with due regards for the terrain, without any interference by the pilots.

They at the U.S. Embassy in Paris take no chances. We are no source of information about F-111 planes and are not going to contradict Whitehead, one diplomat said. Addressing press conference last week, John Whitehead, U.S. deputy secretary of state, denied the fact that American bombers had flown over the French territory. Probably he believes that the Pyrenees belong to Spain or Britain.

SOVIET AMBASSADOR COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH FRG

DW250653 Mainz ZDF Television Service in German 1945 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Interview with new Soviet ambassador to Bonn Yuliy Kvitsinskiy by correspondent Susanne Gelhard in Bonn; date not given -- recorded]

[Text][Gelhard] How do you think German-Soviet relations have developed since you were last here?

[Kvitsinskiy] I was here as an envoy for 3 years, from 1978 to 1981. They were productive years for our relations, and working here was fun. We are now undergoing a more complicated period in international life and, of course, it reflects on the relations between our states. I suggest concentrating on improving the current state of affairs. Our relations are worthy and capable of improvement. I believe that much, and much good, can be done and that in no case must be substance of our relations deteriorate. On the contrary, they must be enhanced in specific fields between parties, organizations, social groups, and people in our countries. To this end, we have a solid basis, the Moscow Treaty, and to this end we have the sincere will of our people to live always in peace.

We should try to the best of our ability to convert that into concrete actions, above all in the fields of disarmament and security, banishing the danger of nuclear war, destroying chemical weapons, and preventing a space weapons race.

[Gelhard] Do you intend to take a walk with your U.S. counterpart Richard Burt some time?

[Kvitsinskiy] There are candidates here for taking a walk other than Mr Burt. Still, I believe I will cultivate the usual contacts with Mr Burt that are customary between the ambassadors of the great powers.

FRG BUNDESTAG DEBATES 'STAR WARS' PARTICIPATION

PM241310 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Own correspondent Yu. Yakhontov dispatch "Deaf as Well as Blind; Bonn and the U.S. 'Star Wars' Plans"]

[Text] Bonn, April -- At the end of the last week there was a Bundestag debate in Bonn on the agreements concerning the FRG's participation in the U.S. "star wars" project that were signed in Washington. No matter how paradoxical this may seem, the parliament was discussing documents that only a few deputies had seen and read at the time. This was because -- allegedly at the request of the U.S. ally -- the agreements had been declared classified and thus inaccessible for the overwhelming majority of the "people's representatives."

This is perhaps why, as I was approaching the Bundestag building in the morning, I did not see many people at the doors, there was no bustle around the cloakrooms, and none for the usual crush by he hall where the sessions are held. It is true that the upper level, where the boxes for diplomats, journalists, and spectators are located, was filled to capacity. By contrast in the hall below, designed to seat 500 deputies, whole rows of seats were empty. At a generous estimate, there were perhaps 100 people including members of the government who sit on a special platform.

Nonetheless, a 3-hour debate was held. It was all done more for the sake of form since, in this case, the law does not require parliament to endorse or pass any of the papers signed in Washington. They are very carefully worded to make it appear that participation in SDI does not apply to the FRG as a state but merely to the country's private firms and enterprises. The ruling circles needed this ploy in order to be able to sidestep a vote in the Bundestag which would have inevitably caused a scandal.

M. Bangemann, the economics minister, took the floor. He signed the documents in Washington that served as a necessary political prop for Reagan in his "star wars" plans and transformed the FRG into an accessory in the program for the militarization of space.

It was not without reason that the participants of the "Krefeld Initiative" antiwar group wrote in their letter to West German Bundestag deputies that "SDI represents a tremendous threat to mankind and a challenge to the peace movement. Politically, SDI means a rejection of detente, arms control, and disarmament. SDI which is an integral part of the U.S. war potential is economically ruinous and morally unacceptable. It is a strategically destabilizing initiative."

This was not what Bangemann spoke about, of course. Backed by representatives of the Christian Democratic Democratic Union siashChristian Social Union parliamentary faction including the federal chancellor, he tried to convince his audience that the signing of the two documents in Washington -- on "technological exchange" and the participation of West German firms in SDI -- was all but a victory won by the FRG over its "intractable" U.S. ally trying to sidestep various kinds of commitments without which the agreement, according to Bonn's claims, would have been "impossible." Bangemann and his colleagues in the ruling coalition claimed that the United States is now obliged to consult its allies who have joined in the elaboration of the project, that the whole SDI program is allegedly a "peaceful" program, and that the FRG's interests will in no way suffer.

However, the speeches of representatives of the opposition, including the prominent Social Democratic Party figures E. Bahr and H. Ehmke and the "Green" Party deputy A.-M. Borgmann and, incidentally, other speakers too, completely disproved the claims of the advocates of the "star wars" project. To applause from deputies of their own factions and angry cries from their political opponents -- defenders of SDI trying to disrupt their speeches -- they exposed the true nature of the agreements signed with Washington, pointing out their danger not just for the FRG but for the cause of world peace. As for the "consultations" with SDI partners promised by the United States, the barbaric raids carried out by the U.S. Air Force against Libyan cities provide a graphic example of Washington's disregard for its allies. What grounds are there to believe that in connection with "star wars" the United States is going to behave differently?

The day after the Bundestag debate, the Cologne newspaper EXPRESS published the secret documents that were signed in Washington. They expose the true nature of the collusion concerning the FRG's participation in SDI. They confirm how well-founded the criticism leveled at the FRG Government not only in the Bundestag but also in the press and broad public circles was. They also reveal why the country's leading figures spared no effort to keep the content of these documents from the public. It is enough to cite a single detail: The U.S. side, as of now, has the right to stop deliveries of equipment and goods by West German firms to the USSR and other socialist countries. And that in conditions where the FRG considers itself to be an independent country!

The Bundestag debate and the revelations that followed it have thus once again demonstrated that FRG ruling circles not only do not want to see the precipice toward which they are pushing their country by involving it in the U.S. military adventure in space.

Neither do they want to hear protests against blindly following in Washington's wake. This means that those people in Bonn who are prepared to make any concessions to Washington are not just politically blind, but also deaf.

U.S. MANEUVERS IN BADEN-WUERTTEMBURG SCORED

PM231301 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 21 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Report by Ye. Grishin: "Militarist Itch"]

[Text] Bonn -- Maneuvers by American troops stationed in the FRG have begun on the West German territory of Baden-Wuerttemburg.

Pershing-2 nuclear missile formations of the 56th U.S. Army Artillery Brigade are participating in the militarist games on FRG territory that are to last until 24 April. In particular, they are being put on a state of alert. The West German public regards these operations as a serious threat to the country's security. The FRG well remembers the explosion of one of the Persing-2 missile engines that occurred in January 1985 at the U.S. military base in Beilbron (Baden-Wuerttemburg Land). It was caused by the ignition of a rocket motor during ground tests. As a result, three U.S. servicemen were killed and seven seriously injured.

Mass meetings, marches, and demonstrations have been held near U.S. missions and military installations in Bonn, Cologne, Hamburg, Mannheim, and many other cities in the FRG. The participants demand that Washington immediately end its dangerous game of playing with fire and remove from the FRG the Pershing-2 and cruise missiles posing a deadly danger.

[Text] Moscow April 17 TASS -- A delegation of the CPSU headed by member of the CPSU Central Committee, First Secretary of the Sverdlovsk Regional CPSU Committee Yuriy Petrov left Moscow for Brussels today to take part in the work of the 25th Congress of the Communist Party of Belgium at the invitation of that party's Central Committee.

Central Committee Greetings

PM181404 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To the 25th Belgian Communist Party [PCB] Congress

Dear Comrades!

The CPSU Central Committee warmly greets the delegates to the fraternal PCB's 25th Congress and wishes the congress successful work.

Your supreme party forum is taking place at a difficult time, when extremely dangerous tension is being maintained in international affairs through the fault of imperialism's most aggressive and shortsighted circles.

As for the CPSU, its recent 27th congress confirmed the main direction of its activity in the international arena. This is the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and strengthening of world peace.

The concept of creating a comprehensive system of international security and the program of specific action aimed at eliminating nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction everywhere before the end of this century while preventing the militarization of space -- a concept and a program elaborated by our congress -- open up the real possibility of a breakthrough for the better in the development of the international situation.

In advancing its new initiatives, the Soviet Union proceeded both from the need to uphold the loftiest right of man and mankind -- the right to life -- and from the national interests of our country's people. We need peace to resolve the tasks of accelerating our country's socioeconomic development, further democratizing society, deepening the people's socialist self-management, and comprehensively improving the socialism we have built on the way to communism.

Soviet Communists well understand how complicated conditions have become for the activity of a communist party in such a developed capitalist country as Belgium, where the scientific and technical revolution leads just to the deepening of the economic and social crisis. Soviet people sincerely respect the PCB's desire in a situation of increasing class contradictions to struggle still more determinedly for the immediate and long-term aims of the working class and for the interests of all working people. We value highly your joint activity with the country's mass antiwar and antimissile forces in favor of the total destruction of medium-range missiles in the European zone -- a very important step on the way to Europe's complete liberation from nuclear weapons.

We wish Belgian Communists successes in strengthening the party's ranks on class, internationalist positions, in surmounting difficulties, in widening mass support for the PCB's positions with a view to implementing its program guidelines, and in the struggle for the working people's vital interests, for democracy and social progress, and for peace.

May the relations of friendship and cooperation between our parties and between the Soviet and Belgian peoples strengthen and develop.

The CPSU Central Committee

REPORT ON NORWAY STORTING DELEGATION'S USSR TALKS

PM240934 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 16 Apr 86 p 3

[Morten Malmo dispatch: "Soviet Union: Unfriendly of Norway"]

[Text] Moscow -- "I reacted strongly and felt offended," an enraged Storting President Jo Benkow said after a meeting yesterday with members of the Supreme Soviet. At the meeting, a member of the Soviet General Staff had said that together with its allies Norway had undertaken a military escalation in the northern regions -- an escalation that was described by the Russian side at the meeting as an unfriendly action.

Yesterday's talks took place in the Kremlin. The Soviet delegation was led by Chairman of the Soviet of the Union Lev Tojkunov. During the 2-hour meeting, chiefly the Soviet hosts spoke.

The Soviet side expressed concern at what it claimed was an allied military buildup in the northern regions. Buzzwords such as the contingency stockpiling of allied equipment in Norway and the expansion of the Omega and Loran C radar and warning systems were mentioned in this connection. The Soviet Russians also said that there were almost continual exercises by Norway and its allies in the northern regions. "One military exercise succeeds another," was the phrase used, and, according to AFTENPOSTEN's information, a member of the General Staff said: "We hope that these unfriendly Norwegian actions will soon be history."

An enraged Storting President Jo Benkow said after the meeting that such a description of military activities in the north has nothing to do with the facts. However, Benkow emphasized the need for continued contacts because there is a lot of clarification that needs to be done. Storting Foreign Affairs Committee Deputy Chairman Knut Frydenlund did not react with such strong emotions to yesterday's remarks by the Soviet side. Frydenlund called yesterday's meeting "a warmup in the traditional sense for the further talks on Wednesday [16 April]." It is possible that the Norwegian delegation will get to meet President Andrey Gromyko.

At a separate meeting yesterday with Soviet of the Union Chairman Lev Tolkunov, Storting President Jo Benkow asked that historian Aleksandr (Kahn) be given an exit visa from the Soviet Union. (Kahn) is a specialist on Nordic history. Tolkuov is supposed to have said that it is difficult to give people who are in possession of state secrets exit visas, but Benkow said that this could hardly settle the issue. However, Tolkunov did promise to look into the (Khan) affair more closely.

He promised to do the same with the question of whether a 50-year-old widow can visit her daughter and son-in-law in Norway.

Benkow also delivered an appeal from the Norwegian Labor Party's women's movement that nine imprisoned women should be released. According to AFTENPOSTEN's information, after yesterday's talks between Benkow and Tolkunov hopes that this latter issue will be successfully resolved are not great.

Further Report

PM241040 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 17 Apr 86 p 3

[Morten Malmo report: "Norwegian-Soviet Group for Human Rights? -- 'Worth the Whole Soviet Visit'"]

[Text] Moscow -- A joint Norwegian-Soviet parliamentarians group could be set up to deal with human rights questions. A desire for this was hinted at by the Soviet side in talks with Norwegian politicians in Moscow yesterday. Storting President Jo Benkow said that this position is pleasing, and added that the Storting presidency will pursue the matter with the Soviet authorities.

It was at yesterday's meeting between the Norwegian Storting delegation and Central Committee International Department First Deputy Chairman Vadim Zagladin that this matter was raised -- such a result is not after all an everyday occurrence and was worth the whole of the visit to the Soviet Union. The fact that on the Soviet side there is a desire for talks on human rights shows that he Soviet side recognizes this problem, Benkow said. At yesterday's meeting the Storting president, on behalf of the Storting, invited Zagladin to Norway.

The Norwegian Storting delegation should have had a meeting with USSR President Andrey Gromyko yesterday, but the meeting did not take place. Gromyko was in the hospital due to influenza and a high temperature. Instead the Norwegian politicians met Gromyko's deputy, Orlov.

The U.S. star wars program was also raised during the talks in Moscow. The Soviet side said that the implementation of the star wars program would make an agreement on strategic weapons impossible. The Soviet side also said that it is also prepared to negotiate to bring about an agreement on medium-range missiles in Europe.

The meetings between Soviet and Norwegian politicians yesterday had a more conciliatory tone than those that took place the day before when a member of the Soviet General staff described NATO exercises in the northern regions as an unfriendly act on Norway's party. Storting President Jo Benkow reacted strongly to this.

Not unnaturally the Norwegian politicians wanted yesterday to be told about the concessions the Soviet Union is willing to make in order to bring about the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area. The answer came that the Soviet side could envisage giving the Baltic its own status and that measures on the Soviet Union's own territory could possibly also be discussed.

The question of new demarcation line talks in the Barents Sea between Norway and the Soviet Union was raised, but nothing new emerged on this point. The situation on the oil market was also discussed and Gunnar Berge (Labor Party), who raised the question, told AFTENPOSTEN that the Soviet Union wants stability in oil prices. The Soviet politicians are also worried about oil-producing developing nations' economic problems caused by the drop in oil prices.

During the visit Storting President Jo Benkow also said that a KLASSEKAMPEN newspaper reporter should have been given a visa to visit the Soviet Union in connection with the Norwegian politicians' visit. The visa refusal simply damages the Soviet Union, Benkow said.

The week-long visit ends today with a trip to the town of Zagorsk outside Moscow. Zagorsk is the headquarters of the Russian Orthodox Church. No political talks are planned for today. Yesterday evening the Norwegian delegation visited the circus in the Soviet capital.

UN ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE MEETS

LD240905 Moscow TASS in English 0654 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- PRAVDA correspondent in Geneva Vladimir Bolshakov wrote in the newspaper today that "the 41st session of the U.N. Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) is held in conditions of the aggravated international situation".

V. Loginov, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, head of the Soviet delegation at the 41st session, said in a PRAVDA interview that the attempts of Washington to impose its diktat upon other countries and peoples, which clearly manifested itself during the bandit attack on Libya, could not but affect the sphere of economic cooperation of nations with different social systems.

V. Loginov said: "The Soviet Union firmly and consistently stands for a broad and unhampered development of international economic relations and opposes any forms of discrimination and any measures involving economic pressure for political purposes".

The results of the work of the ECE over the years that have elapsed since the Helsinki Conference will be discussed at the meeting in Vienna of representatives of countries -- participants in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe which is to be held next autumn.

Pointing out the role played by the ECE in the Helsinki process, Z. Kurovski, deputy secretary of the CMEA, said in a PRAVDA interview: "The CMEA delegation is absolutely sure that one of the main tasks of the ECE is the promotion of the normalization of the world political climate, which is one of the main goals of the Helsinki Final Act".

LD250955 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0925 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli, 25 Apr (TASS) -- The Missle cruiser Vitse-Admiral Drozd is drawing a lot of attention at the moment among inhabitants of the Libyan capital. As the agency JANA reports, the chief of staff of the Libyan naval forces has visited the Soviet vessel.

Threats Met With 'Indignation'

LD241936 Moscow TASS in English 1911 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 24 April — TASS correspondents Vladimir Bogachev and Georgiy Shelenkov report:

The latest statement by U.S. President Reagan, who threatened new strikes against the Libyan Jamahiriyah and to "punish" Syria and Iran under far-fetched pretexts, have been met in Libya with indignation.

There is an impression that the Reagan administration grew angry with the whole world, the TASS correspondents were told by Muhammad al-Fayturi, secretary of the GPC [General People's Committee] of the Libyan Jamahiriyah for information and culture. Washington launched a few days ago a bandit attack against Libya, but today the U.S. President arrogantly claims the right also to "punish" Syria and Iran. Nobody knows the limit to his insane adventurism. You could see with your own eyes Libyan children mutilated by the American bombs, Muhammad al-Fayturi continued. Can one hope for common sense of the current United States Administration?

But the United States Administration will never frighten the Libyan people. The Armed Forces of the Jamahiriyah have already in action proved their skills in handling modern weapons. We will further uphold the cause of peace and freedom, wage the struggle for the sacred right of the peoples to independence and sovereignty, the Libyan representative stressed.

Reports are reaching the Libyan capital about the movements of U.S. ships off the shores of Sicily, the dispatch of the U.S. aircraft carrier "Enterprise" from the Indian Ocean to the Mediterranean. Yet normal life and work are continuing in the city. The residential neighbourhoods damaged by the recent American air raids have been put in order. Friday is the day off here, and many inhabitants of the capital are preparing to go to the countryside for a day of rest.

U.S. 'Searching' for Excuse

LD250927 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 2200 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Correspondent Leonid Rassadin report from Tripoli]

[Text] The capital of Libya decisively condemns the campaign of anti-Libyan hysteria that was recently unleashed in the United States and in some West European countries. The new threats by President Reagan to once again use naked force have also, after all, not gone unnoticed by this sovereign Arab state. This time the President of the United States went even further, having threatened other independent countries of the Near East. Again and again, without any kind of proof, Washington resorts to blatant inventions, asserting without substantiation that Libya is allegedly involved as a center of terror in Western Europe.

I will remind you that Libya itself has repeatedly condemned terrorist actions. Why are we Libyans suffering so, a young, female teacher from the Libyan town of Banghazi, Amal Dagvan, asked in a conversation with us.

It is not us, but the U.S. Administration that issues the order to kill peaceful people, to bomb hospitals and schools. The cruel, piratical raids by U.S. aircraft on our towns -- that is the most graphic proof of the U.S. policy of state terrorism, Amal Dagvan stressed.

In local political circles, the U.S. Administration is considered to be searching for an excuse to carry out another aggression against Libya. Having failed to attain their main targets with their barbaric air attacks, and to be precise, the liquidation of the present Libyan regime, which is following an independent anti-imperialist course, Washington is obviously planning new bandit attacks on Libya.

Libya Thwarted U.S. Hopes

[Own correspondent V. Neznamov dispatch: "The People on the Alert"]

[Text] Tripoli -- The capital of the Libyan Jamahiriyah has changed beyond recognition. Semi-deserted during the first half of the day, Tripoli's squares, streets, and parks fill with a mass of people in the evening. Spontaneous rallies developed into demonstrators' columns making their way toward the waterfront and the Funduq al-Kabir Hotel, where some 300 representatives of the mass media from all over the world are staying.

"Down with Reagan!"; "Victory will be ours!", the demonstrators chant. These slogans express the feelings and moods that are now dominant throughout this small Arab country: Determination to continue the just cause of the struggle against U.S. imperialism and profound gratitude to the states, governments, political parties, mass organizations, and all people of goodwill who raised their voice of protest against the U.S. aggression. The marches along Tripoli's streets are evidence that the process of returning to a peaceful life and routine matters and concerns is gathering momentum.

It is accompanied by a serious examination of the consequences of the U.S. terrorist action and the lessons to be learned from it. The most important lesson is obvious. The aggression showed that the country's political system, based on the principle of people's power, has, on the whole, withstood harsh trials and has upset Washington's expectations of an internal explosion. The intensive work done by people's assemblies and their committees, which are the supreme organs of local power, together with the Jamahariyah's primary cells and revolultionary committees, prevented the spread of panic and swiftly armed and mobilized the country's adult population in case of open intervention, counterrevolutionary invasion, or actions by the domestic opposition.

Now, while mass people's demonstrations are taking place everywhere, these organizations' activists remain on the alert. The danger has receded, but has not disappeared. Consequently, people's resistance detachments under the leadership of "revolutionary committees" continue to patrol and guard state installations.

During my stay in Tripoli and Banghazi I had numerous occasions to hear warm words of gratitude spoken in connection with the Soviet Union -- gratitude for the weapons that helped the Libyan air defense installations prevent the aggressors from achieving their objectives, for the broad and comprehensive political and moral support at all levels, and for the bold initiative to eliminate the causes of tension in the Mediterranean.

. . . "Jamahariyah, Jamahariyah -- people's power." These are the lyrics of a song performed by Libyan Tuareg folk group from the Ghadamis Oasis in the Sahara.

The song became unusually popular during the days of the raids. Its title reflects not only a well-known political slogan but also the reality of the present. The Libyan people forced the aggressor to take this reality into account, and he -- having failed to fulfill his plans to destroy the country's progressive regime -- has now switched to other forms and methods of conducting subversive activity against this sovereign state.

Situation in Tripoli Reported

PM240912 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Report by special correspondents T. Kolesnichenko and S. Filatov: "The People's Cohesion"]

[Text] Tripoli, 23 Apr -- Every day more and more delegations are coming from various countries and international organizations to express their solidarity with the libyan people, who have been subjected to criminal aggression by the United States.

Leader of the Libyan revolution M. al-Qadhdhafi met with a Nonaligned Movement delegation headed by the Indian foreign minister. It also included the Cuban and Yugoslav foreign ministers, the Ghanaian permanent representative at the United Nations, and representatives from the Congo, Senegal, and other countries. During the conversation with M. al-Qadhdhafi, it was emphasized that U.S. aggression against the Libyan Jamahiriyah is direct aggression against the security and independence of all the states and peoples of the Nonaligned Movement.

Here you can see for yourself that the Washington administration's plans to undermine the Libyan revolutionary regime from within have failed. Throughout the country there are mass demonstrations whose participants are expressing a desire to strengthen the Libyan people's unity even more in the face of imperialist aggression.

Late in the evening of 22 April thousands of people went to Green Square -- the capital's central square, which is a symbol of the Libyan revolution. Colored lights, portraits of M. al-Qadhdhafi, flags, and marching music turned the demonstration into a festival of a people upholding their independence and the country's revolutionary path. "Jamahiriyah, Jamahiriyah -- people's power," the words of the very popular song filled the square.

Even some of the Western journalists, who came to Tripoli to file reports about manifestations of "dissatisfaction" caused by the U.S. aggression, said that what they had seen with their own eyes made them realize that the people became even more cohesive during the danger period and firmly backed the revolutionary leadership.

Yesterday there were some more explosions on the outskirts of Tripoli. Unexploded bombs are still being taken out into the desert and detonated. It must be said that these bombs, taken out of deep craters, are not Pentagon "duds," but special delayed-action weapons. Military experts conclude that Washington used the most modern weapons against Libya, including laser-guided bombs.

But no Pentagon weapon was capable of smashing the resistance of the libyan air defense forces. This is seen today as a graphic lesson for the aggressor. For example, when the second U.S. bomber raid was carried out, Libyan air defense forces managed to produce such effective protective fire that most of the U.S. aircraft coming in from bases in Britain were forced to withdraw, dropping their bombs aimlessly into the sea. The dozens of aircraft that had taken off from aircraft carriers off the Libyan coast were unable to help the aggressors.

In conversations with us, many Libyans have expressed sincere gratitude to the Soviet Union for the great assistance it has given and is continuing to give to the people of the Libyan Jamahiriyah.

Reporters Tour Banghazi

PM241347 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 23 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Special correspondents T. Kolesnichenko, S. Filatov report: "Banghazi Raked With Fire"]

[Text] Banghazi, Tripoli, 22 Apr -- Banghazi, the second biggest city in the Libyan Jamahiriyah, is situated on the shores of the Mediterranean. It is more than 1,500 km from Tripoli. Between them is the Gulf of Sidra, at the entrance to which an armada of the U.S. 6th Fleet is once again concentrated. It was from the decks of its aircraft carriers that the planes rose to inflict the vile, barbaric strikes on Banghazi on the night of 14-15 April.

Yesterday we visited that city. Evidence of the U.S. military's crimes are visible even at the local airport. To the side of the runway lays the decaying fragments of a passenger airliner -- the fuselage burnt out and broken in two, the tail plane cut off by the explosion. Another civil aircraft stands at the reserve berth: In the side and in the cockpit is a large hole made by a fragment of an exploding bomb. All around, the concrete surface is peppered with little craters -- the traces left by explosions of antipersonnel and cluster bombs.

From the airfield we went to the city's Diyallah Hospital. Bombs fell near it, in the same street, on the night of the raid. They brought 28 seriously wounded and more than 80 slightly wounded people here immediately. More than 20 people died.

A young man with his chest bandaged lies in a hospital bed. His name is Nasir 'Ali. In the night, hearing the thundering, he ran from his home and was wounded by several pieces of shrapnel.

The doctors themselves also suffered. One of the missiles launched from a U.S. plane hit the territory of the city medical center. It fell on the area where medical personnel live. In hut number 76, occupied by the family of Polish doctors Andrzej and Wanda Studpacki, who were working in Libya, the roof was pierced. Wanda says she and her husband escaped by jumping through the window into the street. "It was terrible," she exclaims.

In the city center, in the Bin Yunis region, bombs fell on a maternity home and the neighboring primary school. Damaged walls, windows torn out by the blast wave, disintegrating desks in the second-story classroom -- that is the result of the raid.

We witnessed a protest meeting taking place in the schoolyard against the U.S. militarists' crimes. Those taking part were all children, who are now learning not only from textbooks what imperialism is, having learned another lesson in their school -- the lesson of childhood under fire. When they chanted in harmony: "No, no to the United States!" and "Shame on the killers of children!" you could see from their faces that the children were not repeating slogans learned by heart, they were experiencing the meaning of the words.

A terrible picture is presented by a small house, or rather all that is left of a small house which stood some 500 meters from the school only a few days ago. Hasi Muhammad and his daughter no longer live there, they were killed by the bombs, and the mother, Ghaliyah, was taken to the hospital in serious condition.

The neighbors, who saw the tragedy taking place, showed us where the bodies of the father and the little girl were found among the wreckage.

Yes, there can be only one conclusion: The barbaric bomb strike was inflicted on purely peaceful civilian targets. Showing us the damage, the Libyans told the journalists taking part in the tour: "There are no military sites here, if you find any, tell us." That is indeed so. The statements by the leaders of the Washington administration to the effect that the aircraft bombed only military targets are lies. In Banghazi you can see for yourself that the peaceful population were the aggressors' victims.

In conversations with the inhabitants of Banghazi another aspect of the massive anti-Libyan campaign unleashed by the United States emerged. A university professor told us that the country is being subjected to an active U.S. propaganda attack. In broadcasts to Libya the Voice of America constantly transmits disinformation, incites internal disorders, and threatens the Libyan people with reprisals.

On the night of the air raid, the professor said, literally half an hour after the bombing the Voice of America put out a broadcast aimed at causing panic in the country. But the people did not give in to this provocation. On the contrary, the very next morning demonstrations began in Banghazi condemning the aggressor and supporting Libya's revolutionary leadership. Thus, Washington is trying by military and propaganda means to bring the Libyan Jamahiriyah to its knees. But it could not and will not succeed. In Banghazi and in the rest of the country, there is a strengthening resolve to defend sovereignty and uphold independence, whatever provocative and aggressive acts U.S. imperialism may resort to.

SOVIET OFFICIAL ADDRESSES MIDEAST ISSUES

LD242001 Kuwait KUNA in Arabic 1600 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 24 Apr (KUNA) -- A prominent Soviet official, who specializes in Middle East affairs, said the main reason for the Soviet Foreign Ministry's dispatch of a delegation led by Vladimir Polyakov, head of the Middle East Department, early this month to Damascus, Amman, and Cairo was the fact that these three capitals occupy primarily "key positions" in the Middle East. This was said by Robert Turdyev, head of the settlement section in the Soviet Foreign Ministry, at a press conference today with Arab journalists alone on Arab developments and the results of the Soviet delegation's visit to the three Arab capitals.

Answering a question from a KUNA correspondent, Turdyev said "I do not mean that these three capitals hold the key to the settlement of the Middle East crisis; rather, that they have key positions." He confirmed that the Middle East problem cannot be solved without the participation of these three capitals and explained "this does not mean the nonexistence of other concerned parties, including Arab ones." The Soviet official confirmed his country's [words indistinct] "the keys to the solution of the Middle East crisis are in the hands of the Arabs themselves," adding "therefore, there is no need to discuss the Middle East problem outside the framework of the region itself."

Discussing what prevented the holding of direct talks with PLO officials, Turdyev explained that many talks have been held between Palestinian and Soviet officials, the latest of which were those held by Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Department, with Soviet officials in Moscow. Turdyev confirmed that contact between Moscow and the PLO [words indistinct] "continues." The Soviet official said, "We do not believe we have annoyed the PLO by visiting certain Arab countries."

In this context, he pointed out that the Soviet delegation had meetings with Palestinian personalities during its tour of the three Arab capitals, such as Khalid al-Fahum, former chairman of the Palestine National Council; Nayif Hawatimah, leader of the Democratric Front for the Liberation of Palestine; and George Habash, leader of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. Turdeyv denied the existence of any negative attitude toward Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO, among the Soviet leadership -- "not in the past, and not in the future." He denied that the Soviet delegation had discussed the Iraq-Iran war during this tour.

Concerning the U.S. attack on Libya, Turdyev said "we used to and we continue to support Libya in all its stands, especially in its anti-[words indistinct]. He commented on the Arab question about where the Soviet Union was at the time of the U.S. aggression against Libya by saying "where were the Arabs" at the time of these events? As to the military details of the aggression, Turdyev said "I am not a military official and therefore, not able to discuss these details," confirming Soviet "military and moral support" for Libya.

Concerning the Iraq-Iran war, Turdyev confirmed that the Soviet Union continues to exert all its efforts to bring a halt to this bloody war, which has entered its 6th year. He added, "We strive to find a speedy political settlement to the Iraq-Iran war." Turdyev pointed out that soviet officials always confirm, during their meetings with Iranian officials, the need to settled the disputed issues peacefully and through negotiation. In this context, he praised Iraq for its response to all the peaceful initiatives -- whether those by the United Nations, the nonaligned, or other Arab and international organizations -- aimed at ending this hemorrhage.

On Israel's possession of nuclear weapons, Turdyev explained, citing UN official reports, that "Israel now possess 20-25 nuclear bombs." The Soviet official confirmed that Israel could, in the future, militarily produce six to seven nuclear bombs and warned of the danger this weapon constitutes for the region's security. He concluded by saying that the Soviet Union will not supply any Arab side, whether an ally or others, with nuclear weapons because Moscow still adheres in form and content to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

DOS SANTOS RECEIVES YAGODIN, DELEGATION

PM241022 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Apr 86 Second Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Soviet Delegation Received"]

[Text] Luanda, 16 Apr -- J.E. dos Santos, chairman of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola [MPLA] Labor Party and president of the People's Republic of Angola, received a visiting Soviet delegation headed by G.A. Yagodin, member of the CPSU Central Committee and USSR minister of higher and secondary specialized education.

During the conversation J.E. dos Santos expressed satisfaction with the development of Soviet-Angolan cooperation in the sphere of training Angolan national cadres in the USSR and in Angola itself. He emphasized that the Soviet Union's help in the cause of training skilled specialists is highly important for Angola and helps in carrying out tasks set by the Second MPLA-Labor Party Congress.

LD210357 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0800 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Text] A group of Soviet helicopter pilots and mechanics, who have completed their work in rendering assistance to Ethiopian citizens stricken by drought, have been seen off in Ethiopia on their departure for home with great warmth and gratitude.

Presenting certificates and commemorative gifts to the Soviet specialists, Berhanu Deressa, deputy commissioner of the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, highly appraised their work. The group of helicopter men, he said, had in 18 months conveyed almost 57,000 persons from the almost inaccessible areas near Gonder, Mekele, and (?Kambolji) to fertile provinces of the country. More than 8,000 metric tons of foodstuffs, medical supplies, and equipment were delivered to the drought-stricken.

CHEMICAL WEAPONS USED IN CHAD FIGHTING

LD210940 Moscow TASS in English 0925 GMT 21 Apr 86

[Text] Cotonou April 21 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Prosvetov reporting:

Foreign mercenaries are fighting in Chad on the side of the Habre regime, which enjoys the backing of American and French imperialism, Facho Ballam, minister of foreign affairs in Chad's Transitional Government of National Unity, told the TASS correspondent.

This was clear from the evidence provided by the people who took part in the fighting and by the information coming from the zone controlled by the Ndjamena regime.

There are citizens of the United States, Western European countries and the racist Republic of South Africa among the mercenaries. Their base is situated at Dugina settlement 80 kilometers from Ndjamena, Facho Ballam went on to say.

French military personnel are directly involved in combat operations. Military developments have shown, the minister said, that the Habre regime exists only due to U.S. and French support. The United States is making plans for establishing its own military base in Chad from where it could destabilize the situation in African countries, Libya, for example, and suppress national-liberation movements.

During the recent fighting, the minister said, the enemy used chemical weapons against troops of the Transitional Government of National Unity (TGNU).

We are planning to circulate through TGNU offices abroad photo materials about the use of means of chemical warfare by the Ndjamena regime, acting with the complicity of its benefactors.

Facho Ballam denied Western press allegations concerning "Libyan military presence in Chad." Not a single Libyan, he emphasized, is taking part in combat operations on Chad territory. Libya is only rendering technical assistance to TGNU forces.

SALVADORAN LIBERATION FRONT DELEGATION VISITS MOSCOW

LD241645 Moscow TASS in English 1612 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 24 TASS -- "The Salvadoran people would long have achieved freedom and independence if the United States had not interfered in our internal affairs and had not rendered military and financial aid to the Duarte regime," Roberto Martinez said at a press conference today in Moscow. He heads a delegation of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front staying in the Soviet Union at the invitation of the Soviet Latin American Solidarity Committee.

"The National Liberation Front is operating all over the Salvadoran territory and is intensifying its strikes," Martinez said. "The scorched earth tactic developed by the Washington strategists is being implemented in Salvador. The government forces guided by U.S. military advisers bomb peaceful settlements, destroy crops, drive people out of their native places and herd them into 'strategic hamlets' that are veritable concentration camps. The butchers spare neither women, nor children, nor old people. They subject to brutal torture even pregnant women."

"The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front declares for talks for the purpose of a peaceful settlement of the problem. But the U.S. Administration is doing everything to prevent a peaceful resolution of the conflict."

NICARAGUA LODGES PROTEST WITH U.S. OVER 'THREATS'

LD241022 Moscow TASS in English 0656 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Managua April 24 TASS -- The Government of Nicaragua lodged a resolute protest with the United States over contemptible threats made against the Sandinista people's revolution by President Reagan in his speech to the reactionary organization, Heritage Foundation.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua circulated a note here saying that the speech of the U.S. President was a manifestation of the policy of state terrorism pursued by his administration and an attempt at paving the way for wide-scale aggressive actions against Nicaragua.

ORTEGA ON MILITARY BUILDUP TO COUNTER U.S. 'CONTRA' AID

PM240816 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 20 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[TASS report: "D. Ortega interview"]

[Text] New York, 19 Apr -- Nicaragua is ready to discuss and sign with the United States a mutual security treaty, which would help transform Central America into a "neutral zone," Nicaraguan president Daniel Ortega declared in an interview published by THE WALL STREET JOURNAL. Pointing out the possibility of reaching compromise solutions on a number of questions, he simultaneously emphasized that, if the United States continues to insist on expanding U.S. aid to the Nicaragua "contras," the republic's government will be forced to build up its Armed Forces in order to be in a position to ensure national independence.

D. Ortega announced that, without waiting for approval by Congress, U.S. "advisers" have already arrived at "contras" camps situated on Honduran territory along the border with Nicaragua. At the same time, he pointed out the increased threat of direct U.S. military interference in the Central American conflict.

PRAVDA PUBLISHES CPSU GREETINGS TO CUBAN CP

PM161425 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 16 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To the Communist Party of Cuba [PCC] Central Committee

Dear comrades!

We cordially congratulate you on the 25th anniversary of the founding of the PCC, which continued under new historical conditions the glorious revolutionary traditions of Jose Marti, Julio Antonio Melia, and other fighters for the people's well-being. Emerging in the days when the imperialist aggression in the Bay of Pigs was being repulsed, and at the moment when the socialist nature of the Cuban revolution was being proclaimed, the party of Cuban Communists has become a real leader [vozhd] and guide [rukovoditel] for the people's masses.

Since the historic days of April 1960 time has convincingly proved the correctness of the political course followed by the PCC, which confidently leads the process of building the first socialist society in the Western Hemisphere. Cuba's indisputable achievements in the development of the economy and culture and in the solution of major social problems and the growth of the Republic's international prestige are inseparably linked with the activity of the Cuban people's political vanguard. The recent Third PCC Congress outlined new large-scale plans and set the tasks for governing the country's further movement along the path of socialism.

Our parties and states are linked by bonds of true brotherhood, based on the principles of socialist internationalism. Soviet-Cuban cooperation is strengthening and developing in all spheres of social life.

Under today's conditions of acute antagonism between the forces of progress and reaction, the Soviet Union and the Republic of Cuba, together with the other socialist countries and all peace-loving forces on the planet, advocate prevention of the threat of nuclear war and a change for the better in international relations. Our parties and states are unanimous in their desire to counter the imperialist policy of blackmail and aggression, of whipping up international tension, and of stifling the liberation struggle of the peoples.

We wish you, dear friends, new successes in socialist building, in the strengthening of the country's defense capability, and in our common struggle for the peace and prosperity of the peoples.

With fraternal greetings,

CPSU Central Committee

CPSU Politburo Reviews Foreign, Domestic Affairs

[Report entitled "In the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee"]

[Text] The Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee reviewed at its latest session, which took place on 24 April, the results of the all-union Communist subbotnik devoted to the 116th anniversary of the birth of Vladimir Ilich Lenin. The communist subbotnik, in which 159 million people took part, has become bright testimony to the high political and labor activity of the Soviet people and to their striving to answer with practical deeds the decisions of the 27th party congress. The decision of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Council of Ministers, the AUCCTU, and the Komsomol Central Committee on the results of the communist subbotnik and on the assignings of the money earned, will be published in the press.

Having listened to the matter of the course of discussion of the results of the 27th CPSU Congress in the country's party organizations, the Politburo has noted with satisfaction that the general line worked out by the congress for speeding up the social and economic development of society and for preserving and strengthening peace, receives the full support of the working people everywhere. The spirit of the party congress and the mobilizing force of its decisions are having an ever greater influence on the life of the party and on the whole country.

Together with this the Politburo drew attention to the need to speed up the restructuring of the work of party, state, and economic bodies, in accordance with the demands of the 27th CPSU Congress. The main and determining factors in their activity ought to be practical work and concrete results in fulfilling national economic plans and socialist pledges. It is important to help every party organization to clearly determine the key structures of work, to opportunely support and develop the creative initiative of the working people, and to ensure the effective resolution of all questions on which depend the raising of the efficiency of production and the achievement ultimately of high results.

Party committees are called on to organize in a businesslike manner the realization of criticial remarks and proposals expressed at plenums and party meetings; to give a principled appraisal to Communists, who, while admitting in words mistakes and shortcomings, do not make any effort to correct them; to persistently eliminate formalism and excessive creation of paperwork; and to concentrate efforts on organizing work directly in labor collectives.

In accordance with the directions of the 27th CPSU Congress, a decision of the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers was adopted on improving the planning of economic incentives for, and further improving management of consumer goods production in light industry. It provides for measures to restructure the economic mechanism of the industry's work; to secure radical changes for the better in production of consumer goods; and to increase their output, improve quality, and extend their range in order to more fully to satisfy the growing demands of Soviet people.

Economic methods of management of associations and enterprises will be developed. Commercial orders will become the basis for formulating production plans. The basic guidelines for further improving the organizational structure of the management of light industry were laid down and provide, in particular, for a rational combination of major, middle-sized, and small enterprises, reducing the number of levels of management, and establishing a new type of production and industrial and trading associations.

Measures to develop further cooperation between the socialist countries in production of consumer goods are also envisaged.

The Politburo backed the proposal submitted by the government for the organization of an interindustrial scientific and technical complex for eye microsurgery. The establishment of this complex will enable the solution of problems concerning the radical improvement of surgical aid to the population in the case of eye diseases to be approached from fundamentally new positions; it will also enable the extent and quality of this aid to be substantially enhanced in the current 5-year period.

Comrade Gorbachev's report was heard on the participation of a CPSU delegation at the 11th SED Congress, conversations with Comrade Honecker and other leading GDR figures, and meetings with the Republic's working people. Having approved the delegation's work, the Politburo expressed satisfaction with the full concurrence of the positions of our parties and states on all issues of socialist construction and interantional policy. There was high appraisal of the mutual striving of the Soviet Union and the GDR for further increasing fraternal cooperation in the economic, scientific-technical, spiritual, and other spheres, in the name of accelerating the development of socialist society in the interests of socialism and peace.

There was an examination and approval of Comrade Zaykov's information on the participation of a CPSU delegation in the work of the 17th Congress of the Italian Communist Party, as well as the delegation's meeting with Natta, the general secretary of the party, in the course of which a number of issues on further deepening ties between the two parties were discussed.

The Politburo discussed the results of negotiations and conversations by Comrades Gorbachev and Ryzhkov with the Swedish governmental delegation headed by Prime Minister Carlsson. There was emphasis of our urge to secure stable and friendly relations between the Soviet Union and Sweden.

Some other issues of economic and socialist construction were examined at the session of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, as well as issues of foreign policy activity aimed at reducing international tension, the peaceful settlement of contentious problems, and the respect of the sovereign rights of all states.

CPSU Adopts Resolution on Housing Problem

PM241150 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Apr 86
First Edition p 1

[Unattributed report: "At the CPSU Central Committee"]

[text] The CPSU Central Committee adopted on 17 April 1986 a resolution "On the Basic Avenues for Accelerating the Solution of the Housing Problem in the Country."

The resolution notes that the solution of the housing problem is a most important part of the party's social policy. Purposeful work is being done in the country for the development of housing construction. The housing fund has doubled in the last 20 years. Some 80 percent of the urban population now lives in individual well-appointed apartments.

The housing problem still remains acute, however. A large number of citizens need to improve their housing conditions, and many of them live in dilapidated homes or hostels.

The CPSU Central Committee considers it intolerable that ministries and departments and local party, soviet, and trade union organs and economic leaders fail to give the necessary attention to the development of social infrastructure, have come to accept the systematic nonfulfillment of housing construction plans, and fail to exercise due control over the prompt and steady commissioning of housing and projects for social and cultural purposes. There are many instances of unjustified demolition of houses which are still habitable, and also of inadequate utilization of the capacities of housing construction enterprises. Shortcomings and violations still occur in the allocation of housing. The work on the housing fund's maintenance, reconstruction, and renovation is poorly organized.

The resolution stresses that the unconditional fulfillment of the 27th party congress directives with regard to ensuring that every family is housed separately in its own apartment or individual home by the year 2000 is a task of particular political and social significance. A substantial step in this direction must be taken during in the 12th 5-Year Plan period. This demands the mobilization of efforts by all party, state, economic, and soviet organs, the trade unions, and the Komsomol, and also persistent work at every enterprise and in all regions and sectors. The accelerated solution of the housing problem in the country must become a cause for the whole people.

It is deemed necessary to organize an all-union socialist competition between republics, krays, and oblasts for the successful fulfillment and overfulfillment of plans for the construction of housing and of the entire social and cultural complex, resulting in the presentation of Challenge Red Banners and money bonuses.

Ministries and departments, union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, local ispolkoms, and labor collectives have been ordered, on the basis of the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR, to elaborate and implement specific measures for the solution of the housing problem in every sector, republic, kray, oblast, city, rayon, and enterprise, with a view to exceeding the housing construction volumes planned for the current 5-year plan period and making fuller use of all sources of funds, reserves, and potential so as to ensure unconditionally that every family is provided with a separate apartment or individual home by the year 2000.

A housing fund inventory is to be taken everywhere and, bearing specific conditions in mind, it is necessary to determine the order and priorities in solving the housing problem, with provision being made first and foremost to rehouse people from dilapidated, unfit, and temporary housing and to provide apartments for families with many children, young families, and war and labor veterans. Priority appropriation of state capital investments is to be ensured for housing, social, and cultural construction in newly developed regions, particularly in the north, Siberia, and the Far East. The planning and construction of housing are to take place in conjunction with projects for social and cultural purposes and municipal services. The architectural style of buildings and the public services and amenities in population centers are to be improved.

The USSR Gosplan and the ministries and departments have been instructed to elaborate normative methods for the planning of housing construction and, beginning in 1987, to start approving sectorial and territorial housing construction plans on the basis of these methods. Additional resources needed for the solution of the housing problem are to be sought out. The funds of enterprises and organizations are to be used on a large scale for this purpose, and enterprises and organizations must be supplied on a priority basis with material and technical resources and contract work quotas, taking into account the utmost development of the self-financed method of housing construction. The practice of involving labor collectives to assist construction organizations in housing construction must be encouraged. The construction of young people's housing complexes is to be expanded.

Wider use is to be made of the population's funds for housing construction by means of housing construction cooperatives; individual building of homes particularly in the countryside, in small towns, and in settlements; and also partial repayment of state expenditure on the finishing and equipping of apartments done at the request of their future inhabitants. Enterprise incentives funds are to be used to help front-ranking workers and young people to build their individual homes or to join housing construction cooperatives. The sale of various construction materials and articles to the population is to be organized everywhere.

The USSR Gosplan, the USSR Gosstroy, the ministries and departments, the union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, and the krayispolkoms and oblispolkoms have been instructed to implement immediate measures to consolidate and make better use of the production base of housing construction, to reconstruct, expand, and ensure the full work load of existing housing construction and construction materials industry enterprises and to further build up their capacities. The transition of all large-panel housing construction enterprises to the output of products according to new designs is to be completed and the volume of work on the modernization of housing is to substantially expanded.

There must be a considerable increase in the production of progressive structural components and finishing materials, and they must be more widely used in housing construction. Local raw materials and secondary resources must be more actively utilized for this purpose. There must be persistent striving to raise the level of industrialization, cut down construction times, reduce the prime costs and materials-intensiveness of construction work, and improve its quality. Priority development is to be ensured for the system of housing and utilities services. Particular attention is to be given to the consolidation of the base for housing exploitation and repairs.

The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee and the union republic councils of ministers have been instructed to implement measures to organize and develop municipal services in the countryside.

Instructions have been given to the USSR Gosstroy and the State Committee for Civil Construction and Architecture to develop designs for homes and apartments for newly married families and elderly citizens living on their own. Town planning normatives are to be developed, ensuring the best possible ratio of apartments for the various categories of families.

It is deemed expedient to expand the rights of local soviet organs in the solution of questions concerning housing and civic construction with a view to offering greater scope for initiatives and actively involving the broad masses of working people in the solution of the housing problem. The union republic councils of ministers must introduce amendments to existing norm-setting acts and regulations as soon as possible.

The AUCCTU, the union and autonomous republic councils of ministers, and the local soviets must ensure the most rigorous adherence to the principle of social justice in the allocation of housing and the determination of priorities in apartment allocation, must involve the public in monitoring, must ensure widespread publicity, and must resolutely extirpate all violations and abuses in this work. The practice of demolishing housing that is suitable for use without any urgent need to do so and of converting housing accommodation for other purposes is to be considered impermissible. There must be rigorous adherence to state regulations in these matters, and any manifestations of parochialism or ostentation are to be completely ruled out.

Changes are to be introduced in the system of payments for housing, and payments must be closely dependent on the size and quality of the total area occupied. There must be stricter monitoring of the use of all housing area that is released, and the local ispolkoms and the leaders of associations, organizations, and enterprises must bear greater responsibility for its prompt occupancy. Comprehensive assistance must be given to citizens who occupy housing area in excess of their requirements to exchange the apartments they currently occupy for smaller ones. The practice of housing exchanges is to be regulated.

The union republic Communist Party central committees and the party kraykoms, obkoms, gorkoms, and raykoms have been instructed to keep their attention constantly focused on all questions involving the solution of the housing problem, it being a paramount and one of the most pressing problems of the country's social development. Greater discipline and stricter monitoring are to be introduced regarding the fulfillment of housing construction plans. Officials breaching the established regulations governing the acceptance of projects for commissioning are to be held accountable. The steady commissioning of housing through the year is to be aimed for everywhere, and the role of local soviets in coordinating all work on housing construction is to be enhanced.

PRAVDA Examines Legacy of April 1985 Plenum

PM250935 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Apr 86
First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "The Beginning of Great Work"]

[Text] A crucial turning point. That is how the party has defined the nature of the time of change which our country is living through. The CPSU Central Committee April plenum which took place a year ago marked the start of this turnabout. The directive it put forward of accelerating society's socioeconomic development was an expression of the party's profound awareness of a fundamentally new situation within the country and in the world arena and of its responsibility for the motherland's future, a manifestation of its will and determination to implement the transformations which have become urgent. It was then that the basic principles were elaborated of the political line which was to be comprehensively embodied in the strategic course of the 27th CPSU Congress.

"The decisions of the Central Committee April Plenum opened up new prospects for society," M.S. Gorbachev noted, speaking in Tolyatti. "They created the conditions for a bold quest, the drawing of the correct conclusions, the eradication of formalism and bureaucracy, and the development of the working people's initiative in carrying out the tasks set by life."

Acceleration and restructuring — that is the motto of the changes which the party began a year ago. The atmosphere, pace, and mood of life and people's attitude to the cause are changing. This applies to all aspects and spheres of our work, and above all to the economy. The Central Committee April Plenum placed at the center of work in this sphere the intensification of the economy and the acceleration of scientific and technical progress, the restructuring of management and planning, the enhancement of the level of organization and discipline everywhere, and the radical improvement of the style of activity. The first steps have been taken along this path. But the main work still lies ahead. Party organizations and economic organs must still do much to ensure that the ideas of the April plenum and the 27th CPSU Congress decisions are put into practice.

This also applies to the problems of developing the social sphere. The April plenum described profound attention to everything that affects people, their work, prosperity, and leisure as the key question of party policy. For the CPSU, the highest purpose of acceleration is steadily, step by step, to improve all aspects of Soviet people's life, to create favorable conditions for the harmonious development of the individual, and consistently to assert social justice. This line meets with the full approval and support of the working people.

The decisive force for acceleration is the masses' living creativity. In all its deeds the party relies on the people's intelligence, talent, and labor. Inspiring millions of working people to fulfill the complex, large-scale tasks of the present stage; constantly developing the initiative and energy of the working class, peasantry, and intelligentsia; bringing into play the inexhaustible potential available to our society; making fuller use of the potential of socialist self-management by the people — that is the priority task of all party organizations, the task which is being carried out in the day-to-day practice of acceleration.

An important lesson of the April plenum and the subsequent period is the lesson of truth. The realistic appraisal of what has been achieved served as the starting point for advancing a constructive program of action aimed at improving the performance efficiency of our socialist social system. It may be said that truth has become the motive force for renewal and opened up scope for the masses' social dynamism, initiative, and creativity. Criticism and self-criticism are no short-term campaign for us. They must take a firm, permanent place in society's life as the right way to improve all our work.

The April plenum decisions are an example of purposefulness and resolve in practical actions. The past year showed very convincingly that when you embark on transformation you cannot confine yourself to half-measures. It is necessary to act consistently and energetically. The party is stopping the practice of delays and procrastinations. The new rule is: Do not deviate from concrete action, do not postpone things indefinitely. The past year showed quite clearly the realistic nature of the program of practical action outlined by the party and the effectiveness of the measures being implemented to accelerate our progress.

After the April plenum the process of advancing fresh forces and supplementing the tried and tested party cadre corps with new people was stepped up. It is necessary to encourage in every way those who are capable of acting creatively and autonomously and assuming responsibility. Reorientation must take place at every workplace — from the individual labor collective to the top organs of management and party committees. It is important clearly to see the distinction between those who have really begun to reorient themselves and care about the cause from those who are only bending to the new winds without changing anything in practice.

The restructuring begun by the April plenum has begun to be carried out above all in the party organizations. Much has already been done here. The number of meetings, conferences, and summonses to party committees has been reduced; there is more collegiality, frank exchange of opinions, and exactingness in elaborating and adopting decisions; and personal responsibility for their execution is increasing. Constant links with the masses and lively contact with the working people is no mere tribute to fashion. It is the very essence of the Leninist work style which has become firmly established in the party's life today.

The CPSU Central Committee April plenum devoted great attention to questions of our state's foreign policy. The party came out firmly in favor of establishing smooth, correct, civilized interstate relations. The Soviet Union's peace-loving foreign policy initiatives and the detailed program for the struggle for international security which was adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress are graphic evidence of the implementation of the party's innovative approach to international affairs. This honest, open policy is dictated by concern for the future of human civilization and the prevention of nuclear catastrophe.

The people call the April plenum ideas a fresh wind of change. This fresh spring wind is filling our sails today!

Sociocultural Measures for Seamen Examined

PM141347 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 9 Apr 86
First Edition p 3

[TASS report: "Sector's Tasks and Reserves"]

[Text] An enlarged session of the Ministry of the Martime Fleet Collegium and the sector trade union Central Committee was held in Moscow 8 April. It discussed the tasks of enterprise and organization collectives concerning the fulfillment of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions.

A report was delivered by Minister of the Martime Fleet T.B. Guzhenko. It was noted at the session that working people in the sector have been set major tasks regarding the prompt, proper, and complete satisfaction of the national economy's and the population's requirements for freight shipments, the enhancement of the economic efficiency of the maritime fleet's work, and the successful implementation of rigorous plans for the current year and the 5-year plan period as a whole.

In order to achieve this, a package of measures will have to be implemented which will ensure the sector's development primarily on the basis of the acceleration of scientific and technical progress, utmost intensification of capacity utilization, and the saving of resources.

The most important task is to improve social and domestic living conditions for seamen and to unconditionally fulfill plans for the construction of housing, children's institutions, schools, and hospitals. For this purpose it is necessary to make wider use of resources in the fund for social and cultural measures and housing construction.

It was emphasized at the session that the present stage of socialist building demands constant improvement of the economic machinery, the swiftest possible transition to complete financial autonomy, a more businesslike and self-critical approach, fundamental improvement of the work style and methods of the ministry and its local subdivisions, enhancement of cadres' responsibility and of executive and labor discipline, and activation of the human factor.

V.I. Dolgikh, candidate member of the Politburo and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, spoke at the session. V.S. Pasternak, chief of the CPSU Central Committee Transport and Communications Department, took part in the Collegium session's work.

Science must take an energetic turn toward the needs of the national economy, must increase the effectiveness of its papers, and must improve the mechanism of adopting them in production. The results of the activity of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences in the past 5 years and the tasks confronting the institutions of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences in the 12th 5-Year Plan period were discussed in the light of the 27th party congress decisions at a session of the general meeting of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences held in Kiev on 18 April.

Sitting in the meeting presidium were V.V. Shcherbitskiy, Yu.N. Yelchenko, Ye.V. Kachalovskiy, B.V. Kachura, I.A. Mozgovoy, V.A. Sologub, A.A. Titarenko, V.A. Ivashko, Yu.A. Kolomiyets, V.D. Kryuchkov, A.A. Masol, S.N. Mukha, and Ya.P. Pogrebnyak, Ukrainian Communist Party Central Committeee Politburo members and candidate members; S.I. Gurenko and N.F. Latvian CP Plenum Discusses Development

First Edition p2

[Report by O. Meshkov under rubric "Implementing the Decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress" and the general headline "Greater Efficiency"]

[Text] Latvia

To an increasing extent the republic's working people link the further development of the economy with the use of intensive factors. And this is producing its positive results. During the last 5-year period all production growth was achieved through increasing labor productivity. The same approach to resolving complex tasks is also planned in the future. This was the subject of discussion at a Latvian Communist Party Central Committee plenum. The keynote speaker, republic Communist Party Central Committee First Secretary B. Pugo and others participating in the discussions talked in a self-critical and businesslike manner about the impediments still present in work to intensify production, analyzed specific shortcomings, and outlined ways to recitfy them.

The participants in the plenum discussed the imperfections of planning relating to the introduction of scientific and technical achievements. Plans are uncoordinated and poorly linked with certification and rationalization of work places and with the broad introduction of new generations of equipment and fundamentally new technologies. They are frequently oriented toward the fulfillment of local tasks and consequently fail to yield the required return. The following example was cited: Only 47 percent of the republic's labor productivity growth as a whole is due to using scientific and technical achievements.

Alarm is also caused by the fact that labor productivity growth is lagging behind the increase in the capital:labor ratio. Of 112 projects commissioned or reconstructed in recent years, 52 enterprises have still not reached their planned indicators or are not operating to their full capacity. Particular sinners in this respect are labor collectives of the ministries of construction materials, grain products, and local industry, the State Agro-Industrial Committee, and others.

Latvia's scientific institutions must also have a more perceptible effect on the development of production intensification. However, as yet there is no real cooperation between science and production. Intolerable timidity is apparent in forming intersector science and technology complexes. No haste is being made to include sector institutes in production and science-and-production associations. This, incidentally, was seriously discussed at a recent meeting of the republic's aktiv; however, the proposals made at that time have still not been realized. Those specifically to blame for disrupting adopted decisions must be given a principled assessment, it was noted at the plenum. We cannot tolerate Communists who try to sit on the fence and wait for the storm to pass.

The plenum demanded that party committees increase the struggle to improve output quality. It is no secret that the technical, economic, and aesthetic level of many goods produced with the Latvian label still fails to meet today's requirements and does not correspond to the highest world achievements. It is the duty and honor of Communists to rectify the situation.

Affairs in capital construction were discussed in detail at the plenum. The subject was the necessity to increase responsibility for shortcomings on the part of all leaders, and primarily N. Kaftaylov, minister of construction; Yu. Yura, minister of the construction materials industry; A. Krols, chairman of the Gosstroy; G. Ukhov, first deputy chairman of the republic's Gosplan; and G. Bagnovets, chief of the Latvian Communist Party Central Committee Construction and Municipal Services Department.

Agro-industrial workers still have a great deal to do. In the crop growing sphere, for example, a guaranteed grain harvest of up to 2.3 million metric tons per year must be achieved by the end of the 5-year period by increasing the productivity of land cultivation, and essential reserves of full-value feed must be formed. This is a very complex task. Fulling it will not be easy. All the more so in view of the fact that the leaders of some kolkhozes and sovkhozes have been in too much of a hurry to reduce the land area sown to grain crops, potatoes, and other crops.

Participants in the plenum said that the Council of Ministers, the Gosplan, ministries and departments, and the leaders of enterprises must draw practical conclusions from the results of the first quarter of this year. The majority of labor collectives are working at full capacity, and the general results are pleasing. The plan for the sale of industrial products has been overfulfilled. Labor productivity is growing here at a faster rate than the planned target. The plan for purchases of livestock products has also been overfulfilled, and construction workers and workers in the services and trade sphere have begun to work better.

However, work is not progressing everywhere with the proper effort. Communists explained the fact that more than 20 enterprises have failed to meet basic plan indicators by citing an inability to overcome difficulties that arise and lack of organization. These enterprises include the "Ventspils Koks" combine, the Latvian Plywood Association, the "Pirmays Mays" Footwear Production Association, and others. That is why this demand was made from the plenum rostrum: There must be no lagging collectives in Latvia. Everyone must restructure his work in the spirit of the 27th CPSU Congress demands.

Participants in the plenum approved a plan of organizational measures to fulfill the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and expressed determination to persistently strive to fulfill its decisions.

Armenian Central Committee Holds Plenum

PM151351 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 8 Apr 86
First Edition p2

[Report by Yu. Arakelyan under the rubric "Implementing the Decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress" and the general headline "Greater Efficiency"]

[Text] Armenia — The task of accelerating scientific and technical progress in Armenia, where great scientific and engineering potential has been accumulated, is a task of paramount importance. This idea stood out in the report by K. Demirchyan, first secretary of the Armenian Communist Party Central Committee, and in the speeches by participants in a republic Communist Party Central Committee plenum which discussed the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic's Communists in implementing its decisions.

The speakers did not ignore the successes achieved by the republic during the last two 5-year periods in economic and social development and cultural building. But, having rendered the achievements their due, the plenum participants concentrated their main attention on ways to improve matters. The republic's economy, they said, is still only slowly switching to intensive methods of development, and there are still many cases of running the economy irrationally or even of outright bad management. Surely it is intolerable that in industry, construction, communications, and other sectors of the economy more than one-third of fixed capital is 10-15 years old? Also high is the degree of wear of equipment in power engineering, at cement enterprises, in nonferrous metallurgy, and electrical engineering. Of particular concern is the state of the republic's machine tool industry, where the degree of production concentration, specialization, and cooperation is low and many management issues remain unresolved. However, the republic Council of Ministers and the USSR Ministry of the Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry have so far failed to resolve fundamental problems on which improving production quality in the sector depends.

But improving quality is, in the final analysis, a question of quantity, of saving resources, and of the fuller satisfaction of public requirements. Even if the output of top-quality products has doubled in Armenia, a considerable amount of wastage is nevertheless tolerated. For example, recent checks established that during the last 2 months alone economic sanctions were brought against bad workmen 28 times to the tune of R2 million. We cannot work like this, the speakers said, and party committees must increase the personal responsibility of enterprise leaders and put an end to complacency.

The speeches concerning problems in capital construction were biting. As is well known, the republic was justly criticized at the 27th party congress for drawing off contract organizations to build projects not included in the plan. The Central Committee Bureau recently gave a principled appraisal of this defective practice.

The plenum discussed with concern breaches of financial discipline. Because of the lack of assiduous economic management, a difficult situation has taken shape in the republic Ministry of Light Industry. Surplus commodity and material valuables have increased by 131.4 percent and surplus finished products have more than tripled. Minister A. Gevorkyan has repeatedly been warned that such a state of affairs will not be tolerated; however, he has evidently forgotten his direct responsibility for this.

Or take this fact. For the total amount of money spent on fines for poor-quality products, Leninakans' Chkalov Sewn Goods Association could have built four kindergartens during the 5-year plan period. The time has come to decisively dispose of wastefulness.

The time dictates new approaches to the economy, to management, and to the resolution of social tasks. Hence the particular importance of ideological and political and also moral education: We must achieve a breakthrough in cadres' way of thinking and attitudes from top to bottom by concentrating attention on what is most important, and we must also teach people to think and act in the spirit of current requirements. As always, the task of patriotic and international education and of forming a sense of nationwide pride in the Soviet individual must be in the forefront.

New approaches to work with cadres must be more actively established, it was said at the plenum, and tireless concern must be shown for the purity of party ranks in order to reliably protect the party against casual individuals. In addition to this, Communists' ideological education must be constantly intensified and the demand increased for party discipline and strict observance of statutory requirements. Every party and soviet worker, every minister and economic leader must constantly remember that the party, the soviets, and the state as a whole are frequently judged by them, by their deeds and actions, and this places particular responsibility on them for their work style and methods and for their best actions and conduct.

People connect the pluses and minuses of the real life they live with the figure of a leader, primarily a party leader. All this requires the Central Committee, its departments, Secretariat, and Bureau to closely follow the work of leading cadres, and primarily of party committee leaders.

Realization of the congress decisions requires an increased struggle against negative phenomena. We must, the speakers said, struggle more actively against scroungers, speculators, and bribe-takers.

The plenum outlined a specific program of action for the republic party organization to fulfill the 27th CPSU Congress decisions and the tasks for 1986 and the 5-year plan as a whole.

Tajik Central Committee Discusses Production

PM230850 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Apr 86
First Edition p 2

[Correspondent O. Latifi report: "Scope for Initiative. From the Tajik Communist Party Central Committee Plenum"]

[Text] Dushanbe — On the eve of the plenum, the Tajik Communist Party Central Committee Bureau discussed the results of the work of the republic's national economic sectors in the first quarter. They are gratifying. Labor collectives are achieving a higher pace. On the whole, the socioeconomic development plans for the 3 months were overfulfilled. But it was pointed out at the Bureau session that there are many omissions and shortcomings in work which hinder more productive and qualitative work.

How can they be eliminated more quickly? How are production reserves to be commissioned? What is the role of Communists? This was discussed at the republic Communist Party Central Committee plenum which examined the whole range of tasks stemming from the 27th party congress decisions. The keynote speaker, K. Makhkamov, first secretary of the Tajik Communist Party Central Committee, and the other speakers pointed out that, to succeed in implementing what is planned, it is first necessary to reorganize one's very attitude to the matter and open up scope for the initiative and creativity of the masses.

The rate of development of social production slowed down in the republic during the 10th and 11th 5-Year Plans. The average annual increase in labor productivity was just 1.4 percent in industry and 1.5 percent in construction, while in agriculture it remained at the 1975 level. This situation can no longer be tolerated, it was stated from the plenum rostrum. What is needed is a decisive change in the work style of party organizations and in the approach to developing the economy.

In this connection the speakers said that production intensification on the basis of scientific and technical progress requires the organic combination of long-term and immediate acceleration factors. A gap between them usually leads to lamentable results. The following example was cited. The Kolkhozabad Flour-Milling Combine is being commissioned after a considerable delay. But it turns out that even today it has been provided with only 60 percent of its worker cadres. This naturally affects the enterprise's work. S. Prokopenko, minister of grain products, and T. Dodabayev, first secretary of Kolkhozabadskiy party raykom, were rightly criticized in this regard.

There was a trenchant discussion of problems of employment at the plenum. There are adequate labor resources here; but, at the same time, there is a shortage of people on construction sites and in enterprises. Unfortunately, the vocational training of workers and specialists also remains weak; hence the low labor productivity, the bad quality of many products, and the large proportion of manual labor, the speakers said. This is particularly the case in sectors of the agro-industrial complex and the construction industry.

Population growth and economic development must be brought into line, the speakers emphasized. An important role here is allocated to science. However, the Academy of Sciences and the republic's VUZes continue to remain aloof from solving the problem. Even though this is not the first time that this has been said, the stalemate in the matter is not being overcome.

New approaches and reorganization of the style and methods in the work of Central Committee secretaries and workers of the republic Council of Ministers do not always make themselves felt. The speakers spoke with alarm about the poor economic training of many leaders and specialists of farms and enterprises of the State Agro-Industrial Committee. Because of this, financial autonomy and the collective contract are being introduced only slowly, and there is muddle in the planning and financing of production.

It is also time to put an end to liberalism with regard to workers who have compromised themselves, it was pointed out at the plenum. Thus, M. Aliyev, first secretary of the Tajikistan Komsomol's Leninskiy Rayon Committee, was dismissed and punished for immoral conduct. But the penalty was soon lifted, and he was recommended for the post of secretary of the party organization of a motor transport association. It frequently happens that, when promoting someone to a leading post, an unprincipled approach is taken to assessing business and moral qualities.

But what is being undertaken with regard to those who promote and support these people? Those who recommend them get away with it, as the saying goes. The speakers suggested that the republic Central Committee departments improve the certification of party, soviet, and economic cadres and improve the practice of hearing reports from leading workers and interviewing them. It was pointed out that it is necessary firmly to implement the 27th CPSU Congress guideline that there must not be a single organization or leading worker outside party control. Everyone must be responsible to the party for his actions and conduct.

The plenum devoted great attention to ideological work. For example, the struggle to overcome religious prejudices and to introduce new rites has been relaxed in the republic and there is no proper control over the fulfillment of legislation on religion. And the Tajik Communist Party Central Committee Propaganda and Agitation, Science and Educational Institutions, and Culture Departments do not display proper persistence. There is a lack of assertiveness and concreteness in atheist work. Thus, for example, a large number of prayer houses has been revealed in the republic's capital, which are frequented by officials, schoolchildren, and even, sometimes, Communists.

The Tajik Communist Party Central Committee receives many letters from citizens expressing dissatisfaction with the work of the militia. The clear-up rate for crimes is falling. The plenum demanded that Communists of law-enforcement organs radically change the work style of these organizations.

The plenum participants drew up a clear-cut action program to fulfill the 27th CPSU Congress decisions.

Uzbek Bureau Debates Construction Work

[Text] In its regular meeting, the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee Bureau discussed the work being carried out by the party committee of the technical and scientific production union designed to realize the decision adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress to stimulate scientific and technical development. It was noted at the meeting that the union has carried out work to a certain extent to consolidate the Communists' responsibility to improve the quality of (?products), spur on work to upgrade the pace of scientific and technical development, and apply new technical equipment in production. [passage indistinct]

However, the Bureau also noted that the work carried out by the party committee to mobilize the Communists to realize tasks assigned by the party to stimulate scientific and technical development has been slow. Leading officials of the union have not organized their work according to contemporary demands. Nor have they evaluated the (?deficiencies) in a spirit of self-criticism. Work concerning scientific research and the effort to acquire experience have been slow. As a result, manual labor has been used in that domain on a large scale. In general, the (?installation) of new machinery in the factories affiliated to [words indistinct] has not exceeded 56 percent.

The party organization has not resolutely demanded of the leading officials of the union the wise use of scientific and technical production potential. Efforts of highly skilled experts have been channeled on a large scale toward [words indistinct] the most ordinary technical equipment and material. Serious mistakes and deficiencies have been allowed in the production of [word indistinct] and technical (?equipment). Some of them are not working, let alone with high performance; much effort has been wasted on their production and [words indistinct]. They lag behind their kind elsewhere in our country and abroad. [passage indistinct] The time required to apply new technical equipment in production is being delayed. Two-thirds of the employees of the (?union) have not taken part in [word indistinct] and rationalization. [passage indistinct]

The attention focused by the party organization on the selection, appointment, and training of the cadres and on creating conditions required for an atmosphere of high mutual demand, practical criticism, and self-criticism in collectives has been weakened. Little attention is being paid to the accounting of communist leaders to secure the realization of the party tasks related to upgrading the pace of scientific and technical development from the organizational and ideological viewpoints.

The Bureau drew the attention of the party committee of the technical and scientific production union to the major deficiencies in the work designed to increase the activity of the Communists and the collective members in production and in their participation in the effort to stimulate scientific and technical development. It assigned the party committee the task of taking concrete measures designed to remove existing shortcomings. The committee was also assigned the task of drawing up a complex of measures designed to stimulate scientific and technical development according to the decisions adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress. [passage indistinct]

The Bureau discussed preventing the wastage of material, technical, and financial resources in capital construction. With a view toward wisely using official and other buildings being constructed in the city of Tashkent, it made a decision to allocate a number of [word indistinct] objects to meet the people's social, livelihood, and cultural needs. The Bureau also discussed a number of other matters concerning party guidance to the republic's economic and social development and adopted various decisions.

The work being carried out in every part of the country has been stepped up with a view to realizing the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, which has been a historic stage in the life of the country. The congress of the Communists set the task of [words indistinct], achieving a definite economic and cultural development, and displaying a high state of demand and responsibility at all times and in all work domains.

The causes of the recent violation of the Leninist principles of the party were discussed in detail. Such negative developments were clearly observed in the Kashka-Darya Oblast and in Karshi city itself. The party organization moved to take categorical measures aimed at restoring party and state order in all the domains. It is due to this that discipline and order is being consolidated everywhere and the [word indistinct] responsibility of the individuals over the assigned tasks in each and every sector is being upgraded.

Certain positive developments have taken place in the entire republic. Compared with the same period last year, industrial production increased by 8 percent and work output grew by 6 percent during the first 3 months of the current year. The process of using the main funds and the commissioning of dwellings has been stepped up. Certain positive changes have also taken place in Kashka-Darya Oblast's economic and social lives. A total of R15 million worth of products have been manufactured in excess of the plan since the beginning of the year; this has been verified. A (?reorganization) has been carried out in the oblast, and workers in the various domains of the economic field improved their work.

All this, however, has not been enough for the trend of great changes which should be fully supported and developed. The main task at the present time is to remove in as short a time as possible the results of the negative developments which have been occurring in this place and to wage a struggle against all (?moves) which impede the life, fruitful work, and the successful advance of the people.

A demand was made for the resolution of the problems faced by Karshi City. The oblast's capital must upgrade the role of the soviets of people's deputies for developing its economic field. Another demand was made for a categorical improvement of all the services taken to the people. The city transportation work is leading to many complaints. However, due to the measures taken, the bus station in the city is being enlarged. This will facilitate the transportation of thousands of passengers. Work is also being carried out for establishing a trolley car system. The construction of a new depot will start in the near future for these vehicles.

Nevertheless, the (?people) must exert an effort for consolidating order and discipline. The meeting noted that all individuals must use the available possibilities for performing successful and productive work. They must realize the plans of Lenin's party with this work.

Correction Made to 'Progress-26' Orbit

[Text] Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev are spending their 44th day working in space. Today the crew of the Mir — Soyuz T-15 orbital complex plan to check and adjust individual components of the water regeneration system, geophysical experiments under the environmental research program and physical training. The automatic transport ship, Progress-26, which was launched on 23 April, is continuing its flight. Yesterday, a correction was made to its orbit. According to telemetry data, the on-board systems of the piloted complex and the automatic cargo ship are operating normally.

Cosmonauts Conduct Structural Tests on 'Mir'

["Today in Orbit" program presented by commentator Petr Pelekhov]

[Text][Pelekhov] One can say that testers in pure form [v chistom vide] are working in orbit for 20 months. The Mir station is equipped with a long-range aim; and in order that it should work smoothly and effectively [shtatno] as part of the future scientific complex when additional units and modules arrive from earth, it must first be properly tested and faultlessly adjusted and tuned. Today the gas analyzer was again tested.

[Begin recording] [Unidentified reporter] Can you tell us what you have been doing?

[Unidentified cosmonaut] What we have been trained to do: We blew carbon dioxide through it. At 1122 we will take a look; according to our calculations it should be 8.1.

[Reporter] And what pressure did you register on the small vacuum meter?

[Cosmonaut] It was 8.2, Petr Ivanovich.

[Reporter] And what remained? [end recording]

[Pelekhov] A simple operationm Although earth can determine the gas composition of the atmosphere on the station by its own method, here everything is too serious when the question is one that concerns the crew's living conditions. Therefore the checks are routine and constant. As yet all of this falls to the crew themselves. Another check, a familiar one. Give us a voice recording.

[Pelekhov] The Rezonans experiment. The cosmonauts rock the ship in turn. They are walking and jumping on the running track, and the instruments are measuring the behavior of the station's structures during such a shakeabout because the station is a new one. Yesterday, for example, the cosmonauts took it into one of the regimes of orientation, the so-called gravitational stabilization, for the first time. They switched on small engines [dvizhki] and swung this 20-ton bulky and cumbersome object around and earth followed all these operations, not without nervousness. I repeat, it is a new station. Analogies with older equipment are of no use. Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev are preparing equipment for future work thoroughly and carefully. I'll say bluntly that the work hasn't produced a rich harvest of data; but space equipment, no matter how much you check it on earth, can only be tested in flight. Of course earth was nervous about how the new station would fare. Today most of the worry is beind us. As TASS reports say, all the systems of the new Soviet Mir orbital station are working normally.

Research Centers' Computer Linkup — Leningrad April 16 TASS — Thanks to a new communication line linking computers at the research centers of Leningrad and Khabarovsk (a major industrial and scientific center) gave Leningrad scientists access to the data banks of the Soviet Far East. [sentence as received] The line is said to be the longest in the communication network linking dozens of research institutes under the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences in Moscow, Leningrad, Riga, Kiev, Novosibirsk and Tashkent. The data stored in the computer memories in these and other cities of the country quickly travel thousands of kilometers to the user. [Text] [Moscow TASS in English 1530 GMT 16 Apr 86 LD]

New Solar Power Unit — Leningrad, April 21 TASS — A solar power unit intended to generate electricity for high-altitude T.V. relay stations has been developed by the staff of the Physics and Technological Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences. Its capacity is 100 watts. Several such plants have been put into operation in Soviet Tajikistan, Central Asia. They have made it possible to erect T.V. relay stations in mountain regions which have no cetralized power supply. People in the villages in the area are now able to use stationary T.V. and radio sets. More than 50 solar power stations are already operating in the USSR, TASS has been told by Academician Zhores Alferov. These stations use the method of conversion of solar power developed by our institute: mirrors or lenses focus solar rays on a photo cell made of the compounds of arsenic with aluminium and hallium. Such transducers have an efficiency of 25 per cent, one of the best in the world. A photo generator with a capacity of 500 watts is being developed by the institute today. Army Paper on Importance of Lenin's Teachings

[Editorial: "Leninism Is Our Banner"]

[Excerpts] In resolving complex, crucial tasks in internal development and in the international arena, our party and the Soviet people invariably turn to Lenin, measure their practical actions against his teaching, and derive strength, confidence, and inspiration from it. Lenin's theses on the need for the creative development of theory of accumulated experience and to the effect that ensuring higher labor productivity is the chief, most important thing for the victory of the new social system; Lenin's behest to keep the title of party member pure and to raise it higher and higher; the Leninist principle of peaceful coexistence among states with different social systems; Lenin's teaching on the defense of the socialist homeland — all this lies at the basis of the decisions adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress. For the party and the people Lenin's teaching was and still is a guide to action and a true compass in determining the strategy and tactics of progress. All our plans are built on the firm foundation of Marxist-Leninist science and are underpinned by the inexhaustible wealth of Vladimir Ilich Lenin's ideas. Lenin's words sound like a combat slogan for us today: Do not rest content with what has been achieved, but go further without fail and strive without fail for more.

The people's loyal sons — servicemen of the Soviet Armed Forces — are profoundly conscious of their special place and their role in resolving the tasks for the whole people advanced by the 27th CPSU Congress. The complex international situation, the U.S. ruling circles' desire to upset in their favor the established military-strategic parity between the USSR and the United States, and the danger of war stemming from imperialism oblige them to be always on the alert and to guard vigilantly and reliably the people's peaceful, creative labor. In resolving this task, Soviet servicemen rely on Lenin's teaching on the defense of the socialist homeland, on war and peace, on war and the Army. Lenin entrusted the servicemen defending the socialist motherland with studying military matters properly, enhancing vigilance in every possible way, carrying out all laws and all orders most conscientiously, maintaining discipline in every possible way, and solicitously carrying out political work among the troops. And, fulfilling these behests of the leader and the 27th CPSU Congress demands to enhance in every possible way the vigilance and combat readiness of the Soviet Armed Forces, they must persistently improve the quality of combat and political training, doggedly master new hardware and weapons, and do everything to ensure that the Soviet Armed Forces' combat potential is a strong fusion of military skill, a high level of technical equipment, ideological staunchness, organization and discipline among personnel, and their loyalty to their patriotic and international duty.

Lenin's name is near and dear to all the world's working people. It is the symbol of the world's revolutionary renewal and the great, invincible banner of the modern epoch — the epoch of the transition from capitalism to socialism and communism. Lenin's teaching commands the minds of all progressive mankind and is embodied in social practice on a worldwide historic scale. It triumphs in the affairs and plans of our party and people and inspires Soviet people to new achievements and glorious deeds. This CPSU Central Committee slogan resounds over all our land, over its cities and villages:

"Following the Leninist course of the 27th CPSU Congress — forward, along the path of communist creation and peace!"

U.S. ENVOY MEETS WITH NATO ALLIES ON SALT II TREATY

LD262200 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1335 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] London, 26 Apr (TASS) -- The Reagan administration has sent P. Nitze, special envoy for arms control issues, to Western Europe in order to clarify for the NATO allies the U.S. position regarding the SALT II treaty. Nitze is supposed to pressure the allies in order to gain their support for Washington's intention to exceed the strategic weapons limits that are fixed in the treaty.

As the London TIMES reports, P. Nitze has consulted with the permanent members of the NATO Council on the SALT II Treaty. The U.S. allies, taking into account that the U.S. program of "nuclear modernization" opens up possibilities for exceeding the limits fixed by this treaty, have spoken out for Washington's strict observance of the clauses of this treaty, the paper notes.

New York, 26 Apr (TASS) -- As the AP reports from The Hague, the Netherlands Government has called on the U.S. Administration to keep the U.S. nuclear potential within the limits fixed by the SALT II treaty.

Addressing a press conference after a meeting with Nitze, Netherlands Prime Minister R. Lubbers stated: We have pointed out to the United States that we would appreciate it if both the letter and the spirit of the SALT II Treaty are observed.

U.S., USSR COMPLETE 2D ROUND OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS TALKS

LD280953 Moscow TASS in English 0927 GMT 28 Apr 86

U.S. PLANS TO DEVELOP MOBILE MIRV MISSILE

LD251141 Moscow TASS in English 1135 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 25 TASS -- President Reagan has ordered in a classified directive a study to investigate the question of developing a new mobile multiple-warhead missile, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported today, quoting administration officials.

"The new weapon could be developed as a complement to others in the land-based missile arsenal," the officials were quoted as saying.

It is presumed that the new missile should be of the same type as the intercontinental ballistic missile, Minuteman, the backbone of the U.S. nuclear offensive potential.

The President's order convincingly confirms that the Washington administration intends to go ahead with its course toward building up the first-strike nuclear arsenal.

U.S. TESTS ANTIMISSILE WEAPON 20 APRIL

LD262102 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 26 Apr 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The United States, in forging ahead with the implementation of its star wars program, has carried out new tests on an experimental antimissile weapon. Weinberger, the U.S. secretary of defense, announced that a missile packed with the latest electronic equipment was launched on 20 April and struck a target at a height of around 5 km.

COMMENT ON U.S. LINKAGE OF NUCLEAR TESTS, TREATY

LD251748 Moscow World Service in English 2010 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Viktor Ivanov commentary]

[Text] The United States Administration, on the eve of another nuclear explosion in Nevada, has published a report on the interrelationship between nuclear tests and a nuclear arms nonproliferation treaty. Viktor Ivanov comments:

The Nonproliferation Treaty of 1968 rests on the idea that a limitation of and a stop to nuclear tests would be an important move in the field of nonproliferation of nuclear weapons. Therefore, it would be right to expect that Washington's report would analyse what has been done and what has not. However, its aims are quite different. Its authors allege that a continuation of nuclear explosions is called to promote the nonproliferation regime and that a ban on nuclear testing would encourage other countries to develop their own nuclear weapons. There is no logic in these statements. Universal truths have been called into question with the only aim to justify the nuclear arms race and the plans for militarising outer space, of which the program for nuclear testing is part. The administration ignores logic and common sense if they do not correspond with its intentions. It has ignored the opinion of authoritative experts whose conclusions deserve decisive roles in shaping the position of the leadership of a great country on an issue of utmost importance.

Yet the administration has entirely turned a blind eye on the results of research carried out in the United States and Western Europe which were published at the beginning of this month. Prominent experts independently came to the same conclusion that a stop to nuclear explosions would put what can be described as psychological pressure on the other countries and prevent them from going nuclear, whereas the continuation of explosions would promote the perfection of nuclear technology and increase the temptation of other countries to have nuclear weapons, too. The chairman of the American panel who was chief negotiator at the SALT talks with the Soviet Union, Mr Gerard Smith, has said: We are not going to have a real nonproliferation regime as long as we have an open race with the Soviet Union in strategic arms. He told a news conference that the attitude of the American Government on a comprehensive test ban was a deplorable development.

The administration's intentions to go ahead with nuclear explosions despite the most dangerous consequences they can lead to has caused mounting concern, not only of scientists but also of the Congress and the American population. Eighty percent of the American people have said in opinion polls that they want an agreement with the USSR on a ban on nuclear testing. Congressman Edward Markey has said in connection with the report that the Reagan administration has turned the nonproliferation policy on its head.

[Yuriy Kornilov "International Review": "Stop the Nuclear Madness"]

[Text] "The summit meeting has inched open the door into the world of hope. However, this ray of hope greatly alarmed the people connected with the U.S. military-industrial complex! They flung themselves toward this 'door' in order to slam it shut!," said M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in reply to questions put by the Algerian journal REVOLUTION AFRICAINE. Despite the fact that the U.S. President has put his signature to the Soviet-American joint statement, which emphasizes that nuclear war must never be unleashed and that the sides will not seek military superiority, the Washington administration continues to gamble on strength; it rejects or blocks any initiative aimed at delivering the world from the nuclear threat, and it fuels the "anti-Geneva syndrome." This was again borne out by the latest nuclear test carried out by the United States under the code name "Mighty Oak" in Nevada on 10 April.

This militarist action of Washington's evoked universal indignation. This is quite natural. In a situation where mountains of combustible nuclear material have accumulated in the world, the question of ending nuclear tests assumes tremendous importance. You do not have to be a military expert to grasp that ending these tests is a realistic step toward halting and revising the material preparations for a nuclear dual that were started by imperialism. Had the U.S. Administration responded to the Soviet initiative, had it taken the step that all the peoples expected from it, this could have meant the end of efforts to improve nuclear weapons and the beginning of a practical process toward their complete and universal elimination.

It was in light of these circumstances, having carefully considered all the "pros" and "cons," that the Soviet Union unilaterally suspended its nuclear tests more than 8 months ago, on the 40th anniversary of the Hiroshima and Nagasaki tragedy, and appealed to the United States to follow its example. Our country's positive initiative evoked widespread approval in the world. But how did Washington react? First of all, with an invitation to the opening of a new season of nuclear tests in Nevada, although it is more than obvious that neither Soviet people, nor mankind as a whole, need such spectacles. When the USSR extended its moratorium to 31 March and declared, in response to the joint message of the six nonaligned countries' leaders, that it would not resume tests even after this deadline until the first U.S. nuclear test, the ominous reverberations of new explosions rang out from the test site in Nevada. A total of nine nuclear tests have been carried out in the United States over the past 8 months -- one a month on the average. What is this, if not a demonstration of glaring political irresponsibility and an overt and cynical challenge to the Soviet Union, the peoples of all continents, and the world as a whole?!

When analyzing the numerous statements by prominent politicians and public figures and various countries' press organs today in which they speak of Washington's stance with profound disillusionment and indignation, one cannot fail to notice that many of them directly link the U.S. refusal to join the Soviet moratorium with other aspects of the global U.S. foreign policy course. There is good reason for this. The following are all in the same league: There are the forced preparations in the United States for the implementation of the extremely dangerous "star wars" program, which is directly connected with the nuclear tests and which, if implemented, will lead to an arms race on an unprecedented scale.

Then, there is the continuing deployment in Western Europe of U.S. first-strike weapons -- Pershing and cruise missiles -- targeted on the USSR and its allies and friends; and the plans -- officially admitted by the U.S. Defense Department a few days ago -- to transform a number of West European states into huge dumps of barbarous new-generation chemical weapons, the so-called binary munitions; and the Pentagon's constantly growing budget, which will top $310 billion in fiscal 1987 -- a figure unprecedented in the country's history. All these are links of the same chain, components of one and the same policy. A policy whose architects are not averse to expatiating on their desire to eliminate nuclear weapons, but who in practice have every intention of continuing to threaten mankind with the nuclear sword and keeping the world in the grip of the fear of total destruction.

The aggressive military course of the United States, the country that acts as the driving force of militarism in the international arena, is resolutely rejected by the peoples, but obviously, it plays into the hands of the powerful military-industrial complex. What does this complex, whose interests and aspirations are expressed by the R. Reagan administration, consist of? It is a conglomeration of military-industrial giants working toward war and making billions on the arms race. According to the latest edition of FORTUNE, the U.S. journal of big business, the 1985 profits of the Boeing Aieospace Corporation, a leading Pentagon supplier, increased by 312 percent in comparison with the previous year, while those of General Electric increased by 194 percent, those of General Dynamics by 210 percent, McDonnell Douglas by 176 percent, and Rockwell by 93 percent. The military-industrial complex is also the military and above all, the Pentagon -- the headquarters of the "war hawks" -- in charge of the staffing, equipment, and indoctrination of the U.S. Armed Forces, which are oriented toward aggression. Influential military-bureaucratic groupings occupy key posts on Washington's political Olympus. The sinister alliance between the bomb and the dollar and the dollar and the organs of power -- that is the powerful economic and political force that not only us not interested in detente but, on the contrary, sees a direct advantage in fueling tension. The operation "Mighty Oak" from which Washington, according to Senator E. Kennedy's apt remark, intends to fashion a "big stick" to wage "star wars," confirmed once again that those who wield power in Washington place the imperial ambitions of the military-industrial complex above mankind's interests.

It is becoming increasingly obvious that the U.S. ruling circles continue to insist on implementing a militarist line with the aim of acquiring as long and as sharp a nuclear space sword as possible so as to be able to dictate their will to sovereign countries and peoples. At the same time, they have declared for all the world to hear that this is also the method they intend to use to "exert influence" on Soviet policy. Futile hopes! History has shown time and time again that all U.S. attempts to achieve military superiority over the Soviet Union have ended in failure. This was the case with the attempt at nuclear blackmail, in response to which the USSR created its own nuclear shield; and again when the United States tried to outstrip our country in nuclear arsenal potential. We are all familiar with the various kinds of rumors which Western propaganda is spreading around the term "superpower," a term which it, itself invented.

Loyal to its Leninist peace policy, the USSR will continue to consistently and with determination pursue its line aimed at the implementation of the program of comprehensive security to be achieved through disarmament, which was put forward 15 January. This principled line also determines our country's approach to such a key problem as a general and complete ban on nuclear tests. In view of the continuation of nuclear explosions by Washington, we cannot, of course, neglect our own security and the security of our allies. Since, despite all warnings, another nuclear test was carried out in the United States, our country has announced that, henceforth, it considers itself no longer bound by its adopted unilateral pledge to refrain from all nuclear explosions.

However, at the same time, the Soviet Union emphasizes again and again that ending nuclear weapons tests would represent an effective practical step towards the destruction of these weapons and expresses a readiness to return to the question of a mutual moratorium on nuclear explosions at any time.

It is not yet too late to halt the nuclear arms race, and banning nuclear tests is the best way toward resolving this key task. Time and the development of events will show whether the U.S. ruling circles will display a sense of realism and responsibility, whether they are capable of renouncing their hegemonist political philosophy and militarist doctrines and grasping that the world today is too small and fragile for wars and all kinds of "strong-arm tactics." As for our country, it will continue to persistently struggle for a ban on nuclear weapons tests in the interests of ensuring lasting peace, as the Soviet Government statement emphasizes.

RELIANCE ON POLICY OF FORCE 'DOOMED TO FAILURE'

PM231146 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 22 Apr 86 Single Edition p 3

[Colonel V. Yeshchenko article under the rubric "Imperialism -- Generator of Aggression and Adventurism": "Militarism in a Nuclear Guise"]

[Text] "Let us not cloud the issue by shifting all the responsibility onto our opponents. We must remember that precisely we Americans have initiated the further development of such (nuclear -- author's note) weapons at every turn of the way. We were the first to create and test such a device, we enhance the degree of its destructiveness by creating the hydrogen bomb, we were the first to create a multiple warhead, we rejected all proposals to renounce in principle the 'first use of nuclear weapons,' and we alone -- may God forgive us -- used this weapon against other people, against tens of thousands of defenseless peaceful citizens."

G. Kennan, veteran of U.S. diplomacy, to whom these words belong, is right many times over. It is precisely the reactionary military, the military-industrial circles, and the pathological anticommunists in the United States that bear responsibility for the fact that their country has become the citadel of nuclear militarism -- the most monstrous outcome of 20th-century scientific and technical progress. In the belief that the weighty "nuclear cudgel" is the "superweapon" that will pave the way to the global hegemony of U.S. imperialism, for more than 40 years now its most reactionary and bellicose circles have been instigators of the arms race. According to figures in the BULLETIN OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS, since the atomic bomb raids on Hiroshima and Nagasaki the United States has produced 60,000 nuclear warheads of 71 types for use in 26 arms systems. Some $750 billion has been spent on these purposes. The production complex of the U.S. nuclear infrastructure employs 45,000 people in 36 laboratories and production centers cover a total of 2,000 square miles (which is equal to the area of Delaware State). Nuclear ammunition of 26 different types is assembled and stuffed with charges at 7 military installations.

As for the complex engaged in developing and testing delivery systems for nuclear weapons (aircraft, missiles, artillery, ships), it is almost 10 times more extensive than the complex that produces nuclear charges. The United States has more than 10 ranges for testing these systems. Every year some 100,000 simulated bomb drops, missile launches, and artillery shots are carried out there. The United States also conducts a considerable proportion of its tests on foreign territory.

The Pentagon's nuclear infrastructure, according to the figures of U.S. scientists (U. Arkin) and (R. Fildkhaus), embraces 830 installations, of which 749 are abroad.

Nuclear weapons are deployed in 28 U.S. states and in 8 countries -- Belgium, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Turkey, South Korea, Britain, and West Germany -- as well as on the island of Guam. In addition, dozens of countries are in one way or another ensnared in the nuclear threads formed by aircraft flights, visits by ships, and other kinds of U.S. military activity entailing nuclear weapons. All this disfigures the planet and threatens an irreparable disaster.

Considering its must important duty to be doing everything to halt the world's slide toward nuclear catastrophe, the Soviet Union has undertaken a number of major foreign policy actions. "It was precisely our striving for this goal," M.S. Gorbachev declared at the 11th SED Congress, "that dictated our trip to Geneva, the moratorium on nuclear explosions, and the specific program advanced in January for the total elimination of nuclear weapons. These major initiatives, which accord with the interests of all peoples, were energetically supported by the allied socialist countries and by many states. People have gained hope for a change for the better in the political atmosphere."

However, the nature of the political sentiments at the White House differs fundamentally from the prevailing sentiments in the world community and from the command of the times arms. The U.S. ruling circles are continuing to emphasize the implementation of a militarist policy and the gamble on force in order to dictate their will to other countries and peoples. At the same time, public statements are made that they intend to influence the Soviet Union's policy in just this way. The groundlessness of such means has been proven by the entire history of the imperialist "strong-arm" policy with regard to the Soviet State.

Washington refuses point-blank to end nuclear tests. It is not so difficult to explain this behavior. First, the development [razrabotka] of weapons of a new, "third generation" is in full swing in the United States. Washington considers the creation [sozdaniye] of these weapons to be an importrant task within the framework of achieving military superiority over the USSR.

Second, on the pretext of ensuring the "persuasiveness of the U.S. deterrent force," the Pentagon is in fact carrying out a qualitative improvement of the nuclear forces and creating a first-strike potential. U.S. military programs provide for the creation and deployment of MX, Midgetman, Trident-2, and Pershing-3 missiles; B-1B and Stealth bombers; long-range ground-, air-, and sea-based cruise missiles; nuclear artillery, air defense, and ABM systems using nuclear weapons; and others.

Third, the Pentagon needs nuclear weapon tests to create [sozdaniye] space-strike arms within the "star wars" framework. As U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger's report to Congress points out, "The 'Strategic Defense Initiative' is the natural development and the cornerstone of all the changes in our strategic nuclear forces motivated by the search for a more reliable deterrent." That is, dotting the "I's": SDI is regarded as a very important component of the strategic nuclear forces, even though it is ranked as "defensive." "The chief reason enabling us to understand why the United States rejects a comprehensive test ban," the magazine U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT wrote, "seems to be that in that case it would have to abandon tests on an X-ray laser under the SDI program. And this laser uses the energy from a nuclear explosion."

Finally, even though the U.S. leaders declare that "nuclear war cannot be won and should not be waged," nevertheless, as the real facts attest, the preparations for one are in full swing. "The underground nuclear test program," Lieutenant General R. Saxer, director of the Pentagon's Defense Nuclear Agency, declared in evidence to Congress, "...is indispensable for assessing the survivability of our military systems in the event of a nuclear war, for forecasting the degree of destruction of enemy military targets, and for developing technology aimed at increasing the survivability and reliability of our forces."

The gamble on achieving nuclear superiority over the USSR, on waging nuclear war, and on ending it on terms advantageous to the United States is nothing more than one of numerous illusions in the system of the Pentagon's military-strategic myths. This is well understood by Americans who know the Soviet Union intimately. "Those who play at war on sand with the theoretical use of nuclear weapons either allow themselves to be dazzled by the latest glittering technology and fail to see the real stae of affairs behind its brilliance or they still subscribe to the opinion that we can intimidate the Soviet Union or make it bow before us by increasing military spending, and, if not, that we can wage and win a nuclear war. Whether intentionally or not, these people are leading us to disaster." This is the opinion of T. Watson, former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, and M. Garrison, former deputy chief of mission at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

The nuclear arms race must be halted before it is too late. The Soviet Union will continue to act consistently and persistently in the main areas of the struggle against nuclear war in the spirit of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. Our country advocates preserving the impetus of Paris and Geneva.

We will not let ourselves be provoked; we will not throw fuel on the rekindled bonfire of the "cold war." The Soviet Union advocates an antinuclear policy, not playing at politics in the nuclear age. To counteract the nuclear threat, the Soviet Union counts on the reason of the working people of all countries, on the common sense of ordinary people, on the growing sense of self-preservation, and on awareness of the new realities by politicians and parties, including in NATO countries. At the same time, any hopes that the policy of force with regard to our country can bring its champions any dividends are doomed to failure.

FRANCE SETS OFF UNDERGROUND NUCLEAR TEST

LD270835 Moscow TASS in English 0813 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Paris, April 27 TASS -- France today conducted another nuclear test on Mururoa Atoll in the Pacific, AGENCE FRANCE PRESSE reported from Wellington, quoting government sources.

Prime Minister David Lange of New Zealand condemned the blast, saying that "France had thus demonstrated its intention to press on with its nuclear testing program contrary to protests by all Pacific countries.

A comprehensive nuclear test ban, he told an AFP correspondent, would represent a decisive step to putting an end to the arms race.

Last year France staged eight nuclear explosions on Mururoa Atoll.

KRASNAYA ZVEZDA CITED ON CONVENTIONAL ARMS CUT

LD270827 Moscow TASS in English 0747 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 27 TASS -- "The Soviet program for reducing conventional arms in Europe has cut the ground from under the feet of those trying to erect further obstacles in the way to nuclear disarmament," the newspaper KRASNAYA ZVEZDA said in a commentary today.

"In West European capitals," it said, "they are refusing to remove the nuclear web from the continent on account of its allegedly serving to protect Western countries from the 'superior conventional forces' of the Warsaw Treaty."

The paper recalled in this connection that, with France and Spain included in the count, there are 94 NATO divisions confronting 78 divisons of the Warsaw Treaty countries in Europe.

Importantly, a full-strength U.S. division numbers 16,000 to 19,000 and a West German one more than 20,000 officers and men, while an Army division in the Warsaw Treaty countries incudes a maximum of 11,000 to 12,000 servicemen.

Claims of a so-called "armor threat from the East" do not stand any criticism either, the paper said.

The NATO tank pool now includes 17,000 vehicles and another 8,000 (including 3,000 U.S. and 5,000 West European) tanks are in storage in Europe. Added up, the overall number of NATO's tanks is thus not smaller than that of the Warsaw Treaty.

Speaking of the Air Forces, "KRASNAYA ZVEZDA" reacalled a report by the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff as saying bluntly several years ago that the correlation of Air Forces in Europe remained more or less stable.

Stressing that there is a rough parity of general-purpose Armed Forces between NATO and the Warsaw Treaty, the paper said that the level of this equilibrium is, however, high and dangerous and so it is essential to take immediate and drastic measures to reduce the level of military confrontation in Europe and to strengthen European security.

SOVIET GENERAL ADDRESSES STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE

LD251227 Moscow TASS in English 1150 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Stockholm, April 25 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Vukolov reports:

Major General Viktor Tatarnikov, a member of the Soviet delegation, addressed today the session of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe.

He touched upon one of the key issues of the conference -- preliminary notification about military activity, in particular, dispatch of troops and Air Force to Europe, which constitute a serious source of threat. These questions are particularly topical in the present-day dangerous international situation, especially in the light of the latest aggressive actions of the United States against Libya.

The Soviet representative stressed that drawing up concrete notification measures, encompassing the whole spectrum of military activity, would accord with the aims of building-up confidence and security in Europe.

Yet, the USA and its closest NATO allies have so far not reciprocated the steps towards reaching mutually acceptable agreements, and this adversely affects the work of the conference.

KORIONOV SCORES THIRD NEVADA NUCLEAR TEST

PM251030 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Vitaliy Korionov "Commentator's Column": "Deaf to the Voice of Reason"]

[Text] Yet another nuclear explosion has taken place at the Nevada test site, bringing pain to people's minds and hearts.

It is the 3d publicly announced underground test in the United States this year and the 10th since last August when the Soviet Union prompted by a sense of political responsibility, announced a unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions.

Washington's actions can only be seen as a new challenge to people who are demanding an end to the arms race, above all nuclear arms. The U.S. ruling circles are plainly swimming against the current.

Washington's ostentatious behavior shows that it intends to continue sharpening the nuclear sword and holding the people in the grip of fear of total annihilation. U.S. militarists say that they intend to keep increasing the number of nuclear explosions, testing types of so-called "third generation" weapons -- X-ray lasers, super-high-speed nuclear charges, beam weapons, and so forth. It is no secret that these tests are part and parcel of the program to create [sozdavat] space-strike weapons.

In an effort to somehow justify its dangerous course, Washington is concocting a series of "arguments" in favor of continuing nuclear weapon tests. On the eve of the third explosion in Nevada, the administration released to the press the information that a total test ban could... "encourage other countries to start creating [sozdavad] their own nuclear weapons." Evidently, Washington is still scorning calls for an end to nuclear weapon tests not only from the world public, but from the majority of the American people. Indeed, recent public opinion polls show that at least 60 percent of Americans want the United States to join the Soviet Union in banning nuclear explosions. The legislative assemblies of five states have now adopted resolutions in support of a moratorium.

The U.S. ruling circles are testing the world community's will. By refusing to heed mankind's voice, the voice of reason, the instigators of the arms race are assuming a grave responsibility.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE SPRING SESSION CONCLUDES

LD252045 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1445 GMT 25 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Vladimir Tsvetov]

[Text] The spring session of the Disarmament Conference finished its work in Geneva today. The representatives of 40 states at the conference are discussing the issues of nuclear disarmament, a halt to nuclear tests, the banning of chemical weapons, and the prevention of militarization of space.

Participants in the conference were greatly impressed by Comrade Gorbachev's statement of 15 January setting out a comprehensive program for disarmament up to the year 2000. There was a positive response in conference circles to the USSR's decision to extend its unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions, the idea of creating an all-encompassing system of international security which was put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress, and also the recent Soviet initiative on reducing conventional armaments.

Summing up the results of 3 months of work, the head of the Soviet delegation stated with regret that the U.S. side had responded to all these initiatives by nuclear explosions in Nevada, the development [razvertyvaniye] of the star wars program, and finally by its bandit raid on Libya.

LIBYA NEGOTIATING TO JOIN WARSAW PACT

LD251102 Kuwait KUNA in Arabic 1008 GMT 25 Apr 86

[All quote marks as received]

[Text] Abu Dhabi, 25 Apr (KUNA) -- AL-ITTIHAD, published here today, cited reliable Libyan sources in the Libyan capital as saying that political and military talks have been going on for a week in complete secrecy between Libyan authorities and the Warsaw Pact countries regarding Libya joining the treaty.

The sources have told the paper that "Libya has dicussed with Poland and another socialist country the question of it [Libya] joining the pact. They [the sources] said that the two countries have welcomed the idea and agreed to submit it to leaders of the socialist countries who met in East Berlin last week on the occasion of the GDR SED Congress.

The sources said that "the Soviet leadership had put a number of questions to the Libyan authorities and requested clear answers to them before agreeing to Libya joining the pact, and Libya had put some questions pertaining to the pact's position in the event of Libya being subjected to another U.S. aggression.

The paper also cited unspecified informed sources saying that Poland and the other socialist country were tending to closer points of view and were making efforts to overcome obstacles that may be in the way of Libya joining the pact. The sources said that "most of the pact countries have agreed in principle to Libya joining the Warsaw Pact. However, they said "joining procedures may take time in view of there being political and military considerations which require in-depth discussion, particularly because Libya would be the first noncommunist country and outside Eastern Europe to join the treaty.

The paper added that the Soviet naval units, whose entry into Libyan territorial waters has been announced, have been sent to the ports of Banghazi and Tripoli and the Gulf of Sidra and have begun carrying out joint exercises with Libyan naval units.

NATO EXERCISES IN MEDITERRANEAN, LIBYA LINKED

LD262112 Moscow in Turkish to Turkey 1300 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Nikolay Paktin commentary entitled "The United States Is Dragging Its Allies Into Military Adventures"]

[Text] A group comprising U.S., British, Italian, and Turkish naval vessels, the warships of NATO member-countries, has sailed off to the central Mediterranean for military exercises. At the U.S. Incirlik Airbase in southern Turkey, military exercises have begun that will go on for several days. The Turkish press points out that this military exercise is the largest in the history of Incirlik base. Some 100 F-111 U.S. fighter-bombers deployed in Britain are also participating in NATO's "Elder Forest-86" maneuvers.

All these maneuvers are being carried out at a time when the U.S. Administration has placed on the agenda the issue of delivering a new strike against Libya -- this is how the paper LE QUOTIDIENE DE PARIS interprets President Reagan's statements. According to a report given by well-informed Pentagon circles to CBS television correspondent Martin, it is planned to leave the two U.S. aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean for an indefinite period in case the order to deliver a new strike against Libya is issued.

It appears that the aim of the maneuvers is not solely to prepare for a new attack and to test the military bases: The United States has not given up its quest to impart an international character to its piratical actions against Libya. The Reagan administration is now engaged in a policy of arm-twisting toward its NATO allies. There are even voices in Washington that demand sanctions against the NATO allies for not wishing to stay with the United States to the bitter end. The White House residents are well aware that being responsible for international piracy is not at all a pleasant thing; for this reason, the United Staes wants to share this responsibility with its NATO neighbors and to impart an international character to a new U.S. attack directed against Libya. In other words, the United States wants to do something like that which it achieved at the time of the Korean War.

There is every basis for assuming that by holding these maneuvers, the Pentagon and the NATO leadership are trying at this early stage to get the NATO countries used to the idea that it will be necessary for NATO to get involved in the conflict that is being fanned by the United States in the central Mediterranean.

WORLD PEACE COUNCIL CONCLUDES SESSION IN SOFIA

Zhukov Comments

LD251331 Budapest MTI in English 1100 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia, April 25 (MTI) -- Yuriy Zhukov, chairman of the Soviet Peace Committee, head of the Soviet delegation to the Sofia session of the World Peace Council, said in an interview to MTI, "the present extremely intricate international situation calls for major improvement in all fields of our work. I think that this is in the focus of our current session, too.

"The board of the World Peace Council has decided to devote the Sofia session to matter-of-fact, thorough and self-critical discussions about the future work of the movemet with regard to the more intricate international conditions."

Yuriy Zhukov pointed out that the welcome speech of Todor Zhivkov, the message of Mikhail Gorbachev and the telegrams of other statesmen to the World Peace Council included many ideas which promote the solution of tasks facing the movement. The message of the general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union to the Sofia session stated that the mass movement for peace has enormous reserves to strengthen the new attitude against war and nuclear weapons. This new peace policy approach is based not on the 'image of the enemy', which enhances confrontation, but on the need for joint effort to create a comprehensive international security system. This end is served by the common work carried out by the World Peace Council along with a multitude of other movements and organizations, Yuriy Zhukov said.

"Over the past decade, parallel with the increasing danger of nuclear war, a large number of new anti-war movements have come into being, but several of these do not support the clearcut positions represented by our movement under the influence of the anti-peace propaganda. They fear to cooperate with the World Peace Council which is described in the West as a foreign political tool of the Soviet Union. Therefore, we have to shatter with energetic work, expertise and flexible tactis the misconcept as if common work with the World Peace Council was hindered by some kind of non-existent conflicting interests. We have to cooperate with all those who, although failing to join us, want in earnest to struggle against the nuclear-war danger," said Yuriy Zhukov.

Officials Elected

LD272020 Moscow TASS in English 1831 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 27 TASS -- The World Peace Council has ended its session here. On the final day it passed a declaration saying that the USSR's peace initiatives, enshrined in Mikhail Gorbachev's January 15 statement, and the comprehensive system of international security which was put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress, enlisted recognition and support of the world public opinion.

The World Peace Council believes that its main task is to invigorate the struggle fr peace, against nuclear armaments, now that the international situation has heightened.

Elections were held to steering bodies of the World Peace Council. Romesh Chandra was re-elected its president. The post of general secretary of the World Peace Council was restored. Prominent Finnish peace fighter Johannes Pakaslahti is now is this post.

COMMENTARY ON REAGAN'S TOKYO SUMMIT TRIP

Aims Criticized

LD251955 Moscow TASS in English 1835 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 25 TASS -- President Reagan today left the United States on an extended foreign tour. He will visit Indonesia where he is to meet with foreign ministers of the ASEAN (Association of South East Asian Nations) countries and will go to Japan to attend a scheduled summit meeting of the "seven".

The White House did not bother to conceal that one of the most important tasks of the current tour, the longest in the five and a half years of President Reagan in power, is to coordinate with U.S. "friends and allies" concrete ways for the implementation of the doctrine of "neoglobalism".

The President himself made it plain that although the Tokyo summit of the "seven" is called an economic one, the central issue on its agenda would be the coordination of efforts within the framework of the "battle against terrorism". Washington is known to use that phrase to describe its interference, including armed intervention, in the affairs of sovereign countries whose policies do not suit the U.S. Administration.

The White House hopes among other things to get its NATO alies and Japan [to] agree to a joint program of action against Libya which came under a criminal raid of U.S. Air Force several weeks ago.

U.S. To 'Blackmail' Allies

LD271836 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1630 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Vladimir Pashko commentary]

[Text] Western information agencies are paying a great deal of attention to the forthcomng Tokyo summit between the leaders of the seven largest capitalist states, and to the U.S. President's trip to Asia before the meeting. Reporting on the President's arrival in Hawaii, AGENCE FRANCE PRESSE highlights Reagan's latest statement, full of threats against terrorists. As is known, for Washington accusations of terrorism merely constitute a pretext to justify aggression and subversion against objectionable regimes. We now go to commentator Valdimir Pashko:

The main task of the United States at the meeting is to get approval for its doctrine of neoglobalism, which is used to justify U.S. interference in the internal affairs of other countries, including by military means. In so doing, Washington has no intention whatsoever of being satisfied with the verbal assurances of loyalty from its allies. As the State Department statement says, the President will devote most of his attention to practical measures, preferring these to resolute statements.

The allies' attitude toward Washington's imperialist ambitions are well known: Only the Thatcher government was an accomplice to the U.S. piratical action against Libya, in a dash turning -- in the sarcastic words of a Labour opposition leader -- the British bulldog into Reagan's lapdog. The other allies tried to remain aloof from the shameful raid. The strike against Libya will inflict damage upon the entire Western alliance, it was said in Europe. Military actions are not needed, but political solutions, reflecting the opinion of the majority, the West German NEUE RUHR ZEITUNG wrote.

Washington, however, considers majority opinion only when it coincides with its own: In other cases, it resorts to forceful pressure. To [illegible] by all signals the U.S. is using arm-twisting tactics now.

Moreover, it is trying to blackmail its partners with none other than the well-known Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty with the USSR -- SALT II. THE WASHINGTON POST has just disclosed this, citing an informed official. Knowing the allies' attitude toward this treaty, which, despite the fact that it has never actually been ratified by the United States, continues even today to play a role in limiting the nuclear arms race, the Americans intend to put the matter to them in the following way: Either you support us, or we will refuse to observe SALT II. What about that!

What I have been telling you, comrades, is not just further evidence of the current U.S. leadership's approach to fundamental world problems and methods of dealing with them; it is also the latest reminder to the West of the vital necessity of taking a sober look at what is happening, something the Soviet Union is presistently advocating. Washington's imperialist ambitions constitute a threat to all, including the closest allies of the United States. To remain an observer on the sidelines, and, what is worse, to indulte these ambitions, is unjustifiable myopia.

Proposal for Mideast Aid Hit

OW250545 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 24 Apr 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast, Viktor Konnov commentary]

[Text] The White House has announced that, at the forthcoming meeting in Tokyo of the leaders of the seven largest countries in the West, President Reagan will put forth a plan for economic aid to countries in the Middle East. Our commentary follows:

[Konnov] Hello, comrades. Truly, at first glance, there is amazing news. Recently, U.S. warships staged an armed provocation against Libya in the Gulf of Sidra, while American bombers attacked Libyan towns.

Only recently, President Reagan demanded from his Western allies implementation of harsh economic sanctions against this Middle Eastern country. Suddenly, there is a plan for economic aid to the countries of the Middle East, which you see, calls for improving the economic situation and ensuring the security of all countries in the region, without exception. What is this, a delayed repentance, sudden enlightenment, an attempt, so to speak, to atone for their sins? Undoubtedly, this is not the case. The goal remains the same: To subordinate the countries of the Middle East to do its bidding, but to do this not by resorting to military methods, but using no less effective economic weapons. As it is said, if not by the sword then by the dollar. It is known that the countries of the Middle East are facing a whole series of economic problems, primarily tied to the sharp drop in oil prices on the international market. Many of these countries owe huge amounts to their Western creditors. Egypt alone owes in excess of $30 billion. The problem of food is acute in these countries, half of which has to be imported. The United States is trying to play on these difficultiies by putting forth its plan for economic aid to the countries of the Middle East.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON U.S., LIBYA AGGRESSION

Bush Threatens New Strike

LD262101 Moscow TASS in English 2032 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 26 TASS -- U.S. Vice-President George Bush has uttered new threats to independent countries which refuse to obey the U.S. diktat.

Speaking at a convention of the National Rifle Association in New Orleans, he stated the United States would without hesitation deliver a strike against Libya again "in the fight against terrorism". It is precisely such an artificial pretext which is known to have been used by the United States to justify the bombing of the residential blocks of Tripoli and Banghazi. At the same time Bush declared for in every way increasing aid to the counter-revolutionaries that are fighting against the people of Nicaragua.

Shultz 'Hints' at Armed Acts

LD262053 Moscow TASS in English 2042 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] San Francisco April 26 TASS — U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz has stated in an interview with THE LOS ANGELES TIMES newspaper that at the forthcoming meeting of the leaders of major capitalist countries in Tokyo President Reagan intends to persuade his partners into applying joint economic and political sanctions against Libya. He unequivocally made it clear that Washington intended to toughen the unbridled anti-Libyan campaign launched by it. Shultz stated that the USA had lots of various means and that it should work out new ones. One of the means, as is clear from the interview, is the conduct of secret operations. Commenting on the U.S. secretary of state's new threats to Libya, the UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL (UPI) news agency points out that the United States has for several years conducted secret operations against the Libyan leadership headed by Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. UPI specially noted that Shultz hinted at a possibility of new U.S. armed actions against Libya.

Threatens 'Covert Action'

LD280938 Moscow TASS in English 0919 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 28 TASS — George Shultz, U.S. secretary of state, who was interviewed by the CBS television network, said that the United States could use against Libya not only military force but also other means, among them, covert action. The head of the U.S. foreign policy department said that "covert action is something that we need to be using" and "it's certainly intended to be disruptive". In an attempt to justify Washington's aggressive policy towards Libya, Shultz went so far as to allege that the United States "gained respect" by launching the recent barbaric raid of the U.S. invasion on Tripoli and Banghazi. "What we did was quite an impressive operation", he said cynically. But when journalists indicated to him that the piratic raid had triggered mass anti-American demonstrations rather than "respect" of the United Nations, the secretary of state tried to contend the opposite.

Shultz also issued threats against other countries. He said, for instance, that "Syria and Iran are both on our terrorist list". He pointed out that at the upcoming conference of the leaders of seven major capitalist states in Tokyo President Reagan intended to press its partners for taking concrete joint action against Libya and other states, which Washington listed among those "sponsoring acts of terrorism". "The words are not the important things", Shultz said. "In the end, our actions will be the things that count".

Remarks Noted

LD251442 Moscow TASS in English 1417 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 25 TASS — The Reagan administration, having adopted a policy of state terrorism, regards the recent U.S. bandit attack on Libya as a 'demonstration lesson' to all other countries and peoples that for some or other reasons got in Washington's bad books.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, speaking to reporters in the USIA TV programme "Worldnet", again frankly warned that the United States would use "military power in the fight against terrorism" in future as well. Precisely such kind of an artificial pretext was used by the United States to justify the bombing of residential blocks of Tripoli and Banghazi. It is precisely such a label that the Washington administration with ease puts upon any country which, refusing to yield to the U.S. diktat, 'dares' pursue an independent course.

Commenting on this statement by Shultz, analysts and the press point out that it was designed to "explain" the militarist pronouncements by President Reagan in the White House on April 23. The ABC TV network emphasised in this connection that President Reagan gave rise to stormy commentaries by his statement in which he spoke of a possibility of military actions against Syria and Iran. NBC pointed out that the President's statement was so unexpected that it required explanation at a high level.

Analysts make it clear that the confusion in Washington is accounted for by the fact that Reagan publicly expressed what the administration preferred to be silent about in order to keep their interventionist plans secret. The CBS TV network emphasises in this connection that Reagan's assistants are now busy softening somewhat his pronouncements. ABC adds that the Reagan administration would not like to create the impression that Washington already has plans for military operations against Iran and Syria.

However, press reports are indicative of the opposite: NBC said that Iran and Syria had long been on the administration's 'black list'. They are listed after Libya in the category of so-called 'terrorism-supporting countries'. So, the state secretary's statement designed to "soften" the President's pronouncement in actual fact only finally dotted the I's and crossed the T's, confirming that the United States which does not conceal its internventionist ambitions, remains the main threat to universal peace and security, and to the independence of countries and peoples.

U.S. 'Arm-Twisting' for Support

LD271308 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0642 GMT 27 Apr 86

["Washington Is Twisting the Allies' Arms" -- TASS headline"]

[Text] Moscow, 27 Apr (TASS) -- In Western Europe, they are realizing more and more that the White House, while hiding behind the false pretext of fighting "terrorism," has embarked on the path of direct interference in the affairs of a sovereign state whose politics do not suit it, and is whipping up dangerous tension in the world. The paper TRUD writes about this in connection with the U.S. aggression against Libya. The other day, more fuel was added to the fire by the U.S. President himself, who said that the United States "will be ready to strike blows on Syria and Iran, if it receives exhaustive evidence of their involvement in terrorism."

Washington's arbitrariness has given rise to a wide protest campaign. Demonstrations involving many thousands have been held in all states of the continent. Many trade union centers have condemned it. Thus, at the 89th Congress of the Scottish Trade Union Council which ended on Friday, a special resolution was adopted in which the delegates held up to shame both the U.S. raid and official London's aiding and abetting in the murdering of civilians.

Intimidated by the "campaign of insubordination," Washington has resorted to a tested device: It has set about twisting the arms of its allies, TRUD continues. With calls for Atlantic solidarity and verbal threats to the few unruly ones, high-ranking emissaries from across the ocean have descended on Western Europe.

The working on the allies has yielded certain results: In many government cabinets, criticism of the White House has begun dying down, and under direct U.S. pressure, the "Common Market" has taken a number of discriminatory measures against Libya. In the UN Security Council, a resolution condemning the armed attack on Libya was blocked not only by the efforts of the United States and Britain, but also by France... [TASS ellipses]

At hand is a striving to smooth over the split that has taken shape in NATO "in the name of the ally's duty."

Washington Propaganda Scorned

PM280844 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Melor Sturua commentary: "The Smoke of Fires and the Propaganda Fog"]

[Text] The more the smoke of the fires caused by the U.S. air pirates' barbaric bombings of Tripoli and Banghazi clears, the thicker becomes the propaganda fog created by Washington in connection with this act of overt aggression, this glaring violation of international law and of generally accepted human morality. Washington's propaganda smoke screen has many layers, so to speak. It pursues a multitude of aims which have one common denominator -- to mislead world public opinion, whitewash the perpetrators of the heinous crime, and cast suspicion on those who have sided and are siding sincerely and unequivocally with the victims of the aggression, with the victims of "neoglobalism in the shape of bombs." To grope one's way through this fog which smells of putrefaction is not very pleasant, but it is necessary because the triumph of truth is one of the necessary preconditions for exposing and punishing evil. I will touch upon just some of the aspects of the "raids" currently being carried out by Washington's "propaganda aviation." People on the banks of the Potomac would like to drive a wedge between Libya and the Soviet Union which, as is known, resolutely denounced the U.S. aggression aimed at the heart of this Arab state and equally resolutely declared its solidarity with the freedom-loving Libyan people who refuse to bow.

And so a story has been concocted in Washington's cauldron of lies and slander claiming that the Soviet Union knew in advance about the planned U.S. air raid against Libya, it knew but...did not warn Libya! This claim is not just monstrous in terms of moral substance but also absurd from a practical viewpoint. And, of course, completely unfounded. It is common knowledge that the U.S. aggressors, and primarily their strike force in the Mediterranean -- the U.S. 6th Fleet -- had long been "lurking" near Libya's borders, holding endless maneuvers, watching and lying in wait, ready to deliver a missile and bombing strike at any moment, at the first signal from the White House. What kind of "advance warning" can you talk about in circumstances like these? And this is even more true of the flight path of the F-111 bombers which took off several thousand kilometers away from the target of their raid. But perhaps the spy mania in Washington has reached such a height that some people see "Soviet agents" even under the vaults of the U.S. President's Oval Office or in the National Security Council Situation Room?

In parallel, as it were, another cover-up maneuver is being staged to conceal from the U.S. public, or rather first and foremost from the U.S. public, the scale of the losses which the U.S. Air Force suffered during the piratic raid on Libya. Attempts are being made to suppress reports, which are more and more frequently and insistently getting into the press, claiming that the raid on Libyan cities was not quite as successful as the Pentagon would have it in its triumphant communiques. This applies for instance to the problem of the degree of precision with which targets were hit, the effectiveness of the destruction of military facilities, the efficiency of the "performance" as military hardware, and so forth.

"The truth will come out," a Russian proverb says. And neither the smoke of the fires in Libya, nor the propaganda fog in Washington are able to conceal the true face of the aggressors; on the contrary, they expose them even more clearly as the large-caliber gangsters and petty liars they are.

REAGAN SEEKS TO REDUCE CONGRESS INFLUENCE ON PENTAGON

LD251803 Moscow TASS in English 1625 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 25 TASS -- Follows commentary by TASS News Analyst Yevgeniy Yegorov:

President Reagan has addressed a special message to Congress on the issue of reforms in the defence field. One of the aims of these reforms, described by the President as meaningful, is to further lessen U.S. Congress control over the Defence Department, and give the latter a free hand.

The President expressed in his message discontent that too many congress committees are empowered to control various aspects of the Pentagon's activity. It is interesting to recall that a few years ago similar discontent was expressed over U.S. Congress control over the CIA. Then the number of the Congress committees keeping an eye on that espionage department was sharply reduced.

Now the U.S. Armed Forces include various special elements of the type of the "Green Berets" or "Rangers" used for clandestine subversive operations in various parts of the world. In the administration's opinion the less is known about them, the better.

There is no doubt that the immediate pretext for announcing the "reforms" have been the bandit actions of the U.S. militarists against Libya. Albeit a wave of chauvinistic sentiments swept the United States after the villainous strike against Libya, nevertheless questions could be heard in Congress whether the President violated by his uncontrolled orders on the use of armed force against Libya the military powers law [War Powers Act]. The law which somewhat restricts the President's right to conduct military operations, was adopted, for that matter, in the wake of the fiasco of the U.S. military intervention in Indochina. The Reagan administration has long wished to cancel these restrictions.

President Reagan and Pentagon chief Caspar Weinberger are exasperated that the Congress refuses to be led by them, and does not display special seal to endorse the administration's requests on military spendings under the budget for the 1986-87 fiscal year. The Congress members feel that the President has "overdone it" by demanding the astronomical sum of 311.6 billion dollars, albeit, most of the congressmen are far from being against a further buildup of the U.S. military power. The U.S. House of Representatives has rejected this sum, and the Senate Committee on Budget has reduced it down to 295 billion dollars.

And, at last, some Congress committees have angered both the Pentagon and the military-industrial complex by displaying too much interest in the "delicate" relations between the latter. A row has broken out over the machinations and financial abuses, the enormous overcharge on the military orders, and so on and so forth. But the point at issue is a huge "pie"-- orders on new weapons alone will be worth a total of 95.6 billion dollars next year. On top of that, 86.4 billion dollars are to be spent on logistics. Now they would like to stop the Congress's mouth on that issue too.

'DANGEROUS RECKLESSNESS' OF U.S. POLICY EXAMINED

LD270815 Moscow TASS in English 0720 GMT 27 Apr 86

["Washington's Recklessness -- 'PRAVDA'" -- TASS item identifier]

[Text] Moscow, April 27 (TASS) -- "Even a cursory review of the U.S. Administration's actions over recent days is enough to see the dangerous recklessness of its policy of dictation-through-strength and military adventures," Boris Kotov said in "PRAVDA" today.

"They have laid bare the substance of U.S. imperialists' 'neoglobalist' doctrine, a doctrine for interference in the affairs of free nations, state-directed terrorism and attempts to take social revenge on a global scale," the commentator continued.

"Its concrete manifestations have been undeclared wars on Afghanistan, Lebanon, Nicaragua, Angola and Mozambique and direct aggression against Libya."

"The fact that as a result of its bombing of Libyan cities the United States has found itself in lonely international isolaton and drawn the anger of all honest people the world over has not cooled the hot heads overseas. The White House chief publicly hinted last week that the United States could, in a contingency, resort to striking massive military blows again -- not only at Libya but also at other countries."

"The United States last week staged yet another nuclear explosion to contribute to the baneful cause of escalating the arms race and heightening international tension," Kotov said, describing the blast as a blatant and cynical challenge to nations, which has underlined the need for imposing a moratorium, after the example of the Soviet Union, and then a full ban on all nuclear testing.

"It is only the perverted logic of militarists," the paper said, "that can produce such ludicrous 'arguments' to justify nuclear explosions as are being brought forth by Washington's staff propagandists.

"A senior State Department official claims, for example, that a comprehensive nuclear test ban will lead to an ever greater spread of nuclear weapons across the world. This is because, he alleges, U.S. allies might become concerned that without testing the U.S. nuclear arsenal has lost its effectiveness and, being scared to death by a 'Soviet military threat', they will decide to acquire nuclear bombs of their own."

COMMENTATOR ON U.S. POLICY OF BLACKMAIL, AGGRESSION

LD271657 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 27 Apr 86

[From the "International Panorama" program, presented by Spartak Beglov]

[Text] All the words of harsh accusation regarding the barbaric act of aggression against Libya that were expressed from government platforms at the session of the UN Security Council, which was convoked twice this week on the insistence of the nonaligned states, and at numerous protests demonstrations in different ends of the earth, can be summarized in the following fashion: The policy of fist-law and military escapades [avantyura] is on trial.

It was not only residential districts in Tripoli and Banghazi that suffered from U.S. bombs; deep craters gape the whole diplomatic arena, including the course of Soviet-American relations.

Evidence of this in particular, both in our country and abroad, are the telegrams arriving at our editorial office from one Indian newspaper alone. They ask this question: Do we not see in Washington's provocative demonstrations of crude force an open intention to undermine the dialogue begun in Geneva, to wreck the new planned Soviet-American summit meeting?

I think that the answer contained in the way the question is put. On one hand, if you talk about Libya, then here we have yet another attempt by Washington to settle scores with a government it finds unsuitable; on the whole, the picture is such that the United States actions form a chain of provocative acts directed at wrecking the search for an improvement of international relations, extinguishing the hopes born of the Geneva meeting. As has already been said, authoritatively in recent days by the Soviet leadership, a new meeting can take place if it leads to a real shift in disarmament. It is now up to the U.S. Administration to create such conditions. But unfortunately, affairs show that Washington's policy at the moment is going in a diametrically opposite direction. Here is a new example.

Last Thursday, President Reagan let it be understood in his answers to journalists' questions that the list of potential interventions for the U.S. military machine is not confined only to Libya. The answer to the question as to whether Syria or Iran, for example, could come under these kind of strikes was in the affirmative. The United States Secretary of State Shultz, it is true, once tried to tone down the ominous meaning of these words, to reduce all this to an ordinary slip of the tongue. But as we know from the experience of the activity of the current administration: After the threats that are supposed to inadvertently spring from the lips of the boss of the White House -- punish, teach them a lesson, avenge -- follow crude acts of aggression.

To judge by the latest so-called slip of the tongue by the President, not a single sovereign state is immune from them. If we do not achieve an end to this policy of blackmail and aggression today, tomorrow the world may be faced with new cases of U.S. arbitrary rule.

FLIGHTS BETWEEN USSR-U.S. REPORTEDLY TO RESUME

LD251319 Moscow TASS in English 1247 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 25 TASS -- Aeroflot guarantees unconditional compliance with all provisions of the agreement on resuming direct air links between the USSR and the United States.

Two-way traffic is to be started on April 29, Tuesday, when an Ilyushin-62M plane will take off from Moscow's international Sheremetyevo Airport and a Pan American airliner will leave New York city for the Soviet capital.

This information was given by Boris Panyukov, first deputy minister for civil aviation, at a press conference here today.

November this year will mark the 20th anniversary of the conclusion of an agreement on regular air links between the USSR and the United States. The flights were suspended in 1983 due to the American Administration's unilateral decision. The agreement to resume air traffic was achieved at the summit meeting in Geneva.

Soviet planes will fly to Washington and New York, and American ones, to Moscow and Leningrad. Each airline will make four flights weekly.

Aeroflot's IL-62M will fly the route (twice a week at the beginning) with a stop in the Canandian port of Gander.

Pan Am will fly Boeing-747 from New York to Frankfurt-on-Main and then, on Boeing-727, to Moscow and Leningrad.

Aeroflot re-opens its offices in New York and Washington airline, in Moscow and Leningrad. "This development cannot be assessed as other than a postive step towards the normalization of Soviet-American relations in air traffic," Panyukov poined out.

He recalled that Aeroflot planes were now making regular flights along 155 passenger and five cargo international routes. The USSR receives flights by 27 foreign companies from 29 countries.

Panyukov described the performance of the Soviet wide-bodied plane IL-86 which started flying abroad in 1981. "The comfortable airbus will make weekly flights on 19 international routes: In Europe, as well as Karachi, Hanoi, Havana, Lima and other capitals. It is planned to start flights to Bangkok via New Delhi."

Aeroflot changed to summer, that is more flight-packed, schedule from April 1. New lines, Yerevan-Berlin and Minsk-Leipzig will open in June, and Yerevan-Prague, in June.

NEW U.S. ENVOY TO AUSTRIA OFF TO 'FALSE START'

PM240920 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Own Correspondent N. Novikov "Rejoinder": "The New Ambassador's False Start"]

[Text] Vienna -- The United States has appointed Ronald Lauder, son of the owner of the major cosmetic firm, as its new ambassador to Austria. It is true that for the past 3 years, Lauder has not been working in the family cosmetic firm, but has been U.S. deputy assistant secretary of defense (European and NATO policy).

Even before presenting his credentials, Lauder, Jr., granted a long interview in Washington to the correspondent of the major Austrian paper DIE PRESSE. His tone betrayed the influence of 3 years in the U.S. Defense Department. The future ambassador interfered in the most brazen manner in the purely internal affairs of the sovereign and neutral Austrian Republic. He bluntly stated that Austria must acquire missiles "for the defense of its airspace" and he indicated where it should buy them -- the United States.

The diplomat from the Pentagon did not omit to cast aspersions on the socialist community states. R. Lauder resorted to intimidation in his efforts to persuade Austria of the need to acquire the missiles. Vienna needs missiles, he said, "to prevent the Soviet Government from safeguarding Austria as an expressway to the West."

And what about the terms of the state treaty which was signed by the four powers, including the United States? It says in black and white that Austria is not supposed to have weapons of that kind. Does Washington think that it can cancel international documents with "uncommon ease," as well as occupying Grenada, waging an undeclared war against revolutionary Nicaragua, and, what is more, perpetrating piratical acts against Libya?

The new U.S. ambassador to Austria has started out on the wrong foot. A false start...

NEW RIVER ROUTES OPENED TO TRADE

PM240950 Moscow EKONOMICHESKAYA GAZETA in Russian No 16, Apr 86 (Signed to Press 10 Apr 86) p 20

[Own correspondent V. Bavin dispatch: "Amur Route Linking USSR and PRC"]

[Text] Khabarovski -- New international routes have been entered in the map cases of traffic controllers of the Amur River Shipping Line. They lead to PRC ports.

The new international routes for river boatmen in the Far East were opened in accordance with a protocol for economic, trade, scientific, and technical cooperation between the USSR and the PRC, recently signed in Beijing. River boatmen from both countries have started joint transportation of export-import freight shipments on the Amur and Sungari Rivers. The vessels will deliver soybeans from China to our country, and Far Eastern lumber from ports in the Soviet Amur region to PRC ports.

The transportation of freight shipments to China has been assigned to the crews of motor vessels "Sikhote-alin," "ST-510," and "ST-532" from the Khabarovsk and Blagoveshchensk fleet exploitation bases and other tugs and barges. By 1990 Soviet-Chinese river shipments along the Amur and the Sungari will have increased at least fivefold.

REPORTS ON SOUTH KOREAN SINKING OF DPRK TRAWLER

LD251448 Moscow TASS in English 1204 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Pyongyang April 25 TASS -- In violation of all norms of international law, South Korean naval ships opened fire on and sank on April 24 DPRK's fishing vessel "Trawler-1390" of the Kosong fishing cooperative, which was on her way to the home port after ending fishing and was on the high seas east of Kosong. One crew member of the trawler was killed. This is pointed out in the protest of the DPRK's chief delegate to the military truce commission in Korea directed to the chief delegates of the American side.

The barbarous attack of the South Korean military against a peaceful fishing vessel is a pre-planned armed provocation. The militaristic intrigues of South Korea and its patron -- the United States -- against the DPRK are conducive to a further aggravation of tensions on the Korean peninsula, put up an obstacle in the way of the North-South dialoguel All responsibility for the possible consequences of the incident shall be borne by those who organised that criminal action, the protest statement emphasises.

DPRK Protests 'Barbaric Attack'

LD261241 Moscow TASS in English 1225 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Pyongyang April 26 TASS -- The barbaric attack, carried out by South Korean naval ships against a fishing boat of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the high seas on April 24, was an inadmissible armed provocation that was heightening tension in the Korean peninsula, said a statement by the CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY of Korea, distributed today.

The statement denied the South Korean side's allegations that the trawler was on an intelligence mission, and pointed out that the vessel was following its normal route on the way to its home port after completing its fishing operation.

The provocative action, the statement said, was organized by Seoul at a time when South Korea was living through an acute political crisis. The authorities were seeking to find a way out by spreading allegations about the so-called threat of attack, launching repressions against South Korea's progressive forces and kindling North-South confrontation.

The DPRK demanded that the Seoul regime strictly punish the direct organizers and participants of the action. All responsibility for the heightening of North-South tension woulkd rest with South Korea, the statement emphasised.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS ISSUES INVOLVED AT TOKYO SUMMIT

U.S. To Discuss Terrorism

OW270911 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1200 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Afonin commentary]

[Excerpts] You will now hear a commentary by Afonin concerning the upcoming Tokyo summit:

Seven advanced countries of the capitalist world will meet at an annual summit meeting in Tokyo in early May to discuss the important questions facing capitalism today. The participants in the Tokyo summit are faced with no few problems in their relations. For example, their is Japan's trade surplus with the United States, which reached $50 billion last year.

Of course, nobody believes that all these problems will be solved at the upcoming summit. More than 10 summits have been held, but key problems facing capitalism have not decreased in number. At past summits, Japan found itself in a difficult position because of its trade surplus with its trade partners.

Meanwhile, the summit talks among leaders of the seven countries, which were originally aimed at discussing economic problems, have obviously been taking on a political character of late. We can say this about the upcoming Tokyo summit as well.

The Tokyo summit is expected to discuss international terrorism and adopt a resolution regarding this issue. The United States is the major advocate of discussion of this issue at the meeting. International terrorism has recently been assuming an increasingly dangerous nature, and there is no doubt that we must fight terrorism. The Soviet Union, too, has called for such a struggle.

However, the Tokyo summit is likely to handle the question of struggle against terrorism from a totally different angle. As evident from is recent piratic attack on Libya, the United States has been following the line of practicing state terrorism. For Washington, the antiterrorist struggle only serves as an excuse for aribitrarily assuming the role of chastiser or international court judge who imposes bogus sanctions at his own discretion. It also serves as an excuse for enforcing the law of the jungle instead of international legal principles.

It seems that the United States plans to bring up the issue of antiterrorist struggle at the summit in order to force its allies to support its current policy of militarism and aggression. It is evident to everybody that overall peace and security will be threatened if any country is allowed to carry out armed aggression against other countries. What is more, in the Libyan incident, Washington's antiterrorist campaign was a thin excuse for imposing sanctions against a politician whom it does not like.

The U.S. military action against Libya failed to get even the support of most of its allies. Washington appears to be planning to change this awkward situation at the Tokyo summit. In this connection, Japan, the host country, will have an important role to play. Of course, Washington expects the Japanese Government to help rally its allies together. Japan already played a similar role in previous summits. For example, when some European allies were not very enthusiastic about the deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in their countries at the 1983 Williamsburg summit, Prime Minister Nakasone supported the plan. The deployment of U.S. missiles in Western Europe has only accelerated the arms race and increased the danger of war. We can expect similar results if Japan supports the current U.S. policy of aggression and terrorism in the international arena.

There is also the fear in Japan that if the government supports the U.S. attack on Libya, it will greatly aggravate relations with Arab countries, a main source of crude oil, an incomparably important material for Japan's economy.

U.S. Pressure Should Be Resisted

OW251447 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1000 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Afonin commentary: "Soviet Proposal Continues to Remain in Force"]

[Text] Listeners: CPSU General Secretary Gorbachev made it clear at the congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany in Berlin on 18 April that the Soviet proposal aimed at abolishing nuclear arms and checking the arms race remains in effect. This proposal to abolish nuclear arms in stages by the end of this century was stated in General Secretary Gorbachev's 15 January statement and was later confirmed at the 27th CPSU Congress. In his commentary "Soviet proposal continues to remain in force," Radio Moscow's commentator Afonin states as follows:

As is known to all, the wide-ranging Soviet peace proposal conforming to the interests of all people has brought brighter expectations among the people for an improvement in the political situation. However, such expectations are severely tested today by the U.S. Government's militaristic and aggressive policies in international affairs as indicated by its crimes against Libya, intensified threat to Nicaragua, and stubborn continuation of its nuclear tests. It was just last Tuesday that it conducted another nuclear test.

A simple comparison of Soviet and American policies in the international arena will clarify the whole situation. It is clear to discerning people by now as to who is truly fighting for peace and who is attempting to push the people of all countries down the nuclear abysmal chasm. It can be readily imagined what would remain of human civilizaton should the USSR take actions similar to those of the United States. Fortunately, the USSR is not a country that would take such actions. By nature, such short-sighted and self-centered adventurist policies have nothing to do with socialism. The USSR and all the countries of the socialist community have acted in the past and will act in the future by clearly understanding their own responsibilities.

We will never lose our calmness just because of U.S. militaristic actions. The USSR as well as other socialist countries can be patient enough not to respond to U.S. military provocations. The Soviet peace proposals continue to remain in force. As usual, socialist countries are extending to the West not their fist but their hand. As stressed in the Warsaw Pace states' statement on U.S. piratical attacks on Libya, the current complicated situation in international relations requires all countries to take a particularly responsible approach, bring self-restraint into full play in their policies, and make positive efforts to maintain world peace.

In the near future, the capitalist countries will have a chance to attain these goals. The leaders of the seven advanced capitalist countries are scheduled to hold summit talks in Tokyo to discuss various complicated problems that they are now facing. Is it not possible for the U.S. allies to appeal to Washington and make it take more cautious and responsible actions in dealing with international affairs?

It is well known that the United States has failed to get sufficient support for its actions against Libya from any of its allies except for the Thatcher administration. President Reagan may attempt to seek such support at the Tokyo summit. However, will the participating countries yield to U.S. pressure this time for the sake of the notorious solidarity among the West just as they did at many previous summits since the beginning of the 1980's? Any solidarity cannot be used as a pretext for justifying international piratical actions or for strengthening the nuclear arms race.

It is stated in General Secretary Gorbachev's 15 January statement that the Soviet proposal is made for the whole world. In maintaining peace or in freeing mankind from th danger of nuclear wars, there are no bystanders and everyone is involved. What is important in this case is that all countries, whether big or small, socialist or capitalist, must make their contributions.

This is particularly true in Japan's case, the first country to experience atomc bombing. Japan's contribution to the worldwide struggle to prevent nuclear wars is of particular significance. The self-restraining approach of the USSR and other socialist countries serve as a gurantee that the international community's efforts for peace will not end in vain. The Soviet proposal continues to remain in force.

Moreover, fully determined to fight for peace to the end, the USSR has made a new proposal for defusing international tension. The Soviet Government issued a statemet on 23 April, on the issues of security and cooperation in the Asian-Pacific region. For example, it is stated in this statement: The elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the current century and prevention of space militarization, as proposed by the USSR, would rid the people's of the world and, naturally, in the Asian-Pacific region, of the fear of nuclear and chemical threat, radically change the situation, elevate the security of various countries to a new level, and promote the creation of favorable conditions for the development of reciprocal cooperation.

This is the measure that we have proposed in connection with the fact that the international situation is now developing dangerously toward heightened military tension and intensified nuclear armament.

USSR, JAPAN SIGN PROTOCOL ON FISHING QUOTAS

LD261641 Moscow TASS in English 1545 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 26 TASS -- Terms for mutual fisheries in the 200-mile zones of the USSR and Japan in 1986 are recorded in a protocol signed here today. It provides for equal quotas for the catch of fish by Soviet fishermen in the Japanese ones in the Soviet economic zone (150,000 tons for each side).

The protocol also regulates periods of time, areas and ways of fisheries. When these were being determined, th sides took into consideration a requirement for the rational utilisation of marine resources in the northeastern Pacific.

The signing of the protocol brought to a close the second session of the Soviet-Japanese commission for fisheries. The commission had been set in accordane with the inter-governmental agreement of December 7, 1984. The work of the session, which opened at the end of last year, drew out, as a result of which mutual fisheries were suspended in January. The accords recorded in the protocol signed today enable the fisheries of the USSR and Japan to resume fishery operations in each other's zones.

A settlement of the differences that arose at the session was promoted by a meeting between Valdimir Kamentsev, minister of fisheries of the USSR, and Tsutomu Kata, Japanese minister of farming, forestry and fisheries, who paid a working visit to Moscow at the beginning of this month. Along with mutual fisheries, cooperation between Soviet and Japanese fishermen also covers joint work for the protection, research, reproduction and rational utilization of fish stocks, including salmon ones. These matters will be discussed at a regular session of the bilateral commission for cooperation in the field of fisheries. The session is to be held in Tokyo soon.

[Text] Kabul April 26 TASS -- The Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the People's Democratic Party of Aghanistan (PDPA) has held a meeting here to consider the results of a visit to Moscow by Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, a member of the Political Bureau of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, BAKHTAR news agency repored.

It was also pointed out that the Soviet Union's disinterested internationalist assistance to Afghanistan with protecting its national sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence is of vital significance.

The Political Bureau spoke highly of the peaceful foreign policy of the USSR and noted the complete identity of the views held by the Soviet Union and the DRA on the key problems of the times, especially the issues of defusing international tension and bridling the arms race, which has been reflected in a joint communique adopted after Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand's visit to the USSR. The Political Bureau of the PDPA Central Committee also expressed gratitude to the CPSU and the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR for fraternal internationalist assistance to democratic Afghanistan.

INDIAN PUBLIC PROTESTS U.S. ATTACK ON LIBYA

LD251959 Moscow TASS in English 1857 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] New Delhi April 25 TASS -- A mass protest demonstration against the U.S. barbaric raids on sovereign Libya, sponsored by the All-Indian Organisation of Fighters for Independence, was held in front of the U.S. Embassy in New Delhi today.

The demonstrators shouted slogans "Shame to the U.S. criminal act against Libya", "American imperialism is a threat to universal peace and security" and "Down with Washington's policy of state terrorism", and sent a petition to the embassy. It said the U.S. bandit attack on Libya had revealed yet again Washington's criminal plans in regards to the developing countries and the national liberation movements in the world.

They also demanded that the U.S.A. immediately withdraw its naval forces from the Indian Ocean and the Mediterranean and abandon its militaristic policy which threatens the young newly-free states.

COMMENT ON IMPORTANCE OF INDIA-PAKISTAN TALKS

BK271536 Moscow in Hindi to India 1130 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Aleksandr Malik commentary]

[Text] In the concluding phase of the Nonaligned Coordination Bureau meeting in Delhi talks were held between Pakistan Foreign Minister Yaqub Khan and Indian External Affairs Minister Bali Ram Bhagat on some bilateral and important international issues.

In this way the continuation of talks between the two countries was maintained. Such talks are essential because the overall relations between India and Pakistan have not yet been able to come out of the tense situation. Exchanges of views are also profitable for the implementation of mutual agreements. There is no alternative to the holding of talks for the solution of existing disputes. What has been achieved with the resumption of India-Pakistan talks?

According to reports in the Indian press, the Indian side did not consider the outcome of the talks very hopeful and they have even expressed some doubts. Such an attitude is rather natural. More than 2,000 persons were arrested last month for violating the Indian borders. It was learned that they were secretly sent from Pakistan to carry out terrorism in Punjab and other parts of India. At the provocation of Pakistan there were several armed clashes recently at the line of control in Jammu and Kashmir, and it was learned that its U.S. masters are inciting the Pakistani rulers to indulge in provocative activities. At U.S. insistance Pakistan refused to accept an Indian proposed agreement between the two countries not to grant permission to any third country to set up military bases on their soil. It is obvious that Islamabad's dependence is the foremost reason for its (?fears).

Pakistan's relations with India depend on those promises with which the Islamabad administration is chained and as a result of which it dances to the tune of its military collaborators. The objectives of these promises are clear and were also made obvious with the recent arrival of the ships of the U.S. 7th Fleet in Karachi. One of the facts that proves how much a matter of concern it is to grant concessions to the Pentagon was the dispatch of the U.S. aircraft carrier Enterprise, which was anchored near the Pakistani shore, to Libya where the U.S. unleashed an act of piracy on an active member of the Nonaligned Movement. The question arises: What will happen if the government in Washington, which is openly taking shelter in the use of force in international affairs, decides to punish or teach a lesson to another Asian nation after Libya? That nation will face the same consequences as Libya, and there is no guarantee that the Pakistani Administration will not play the role of Mrs Thatcher by granting the use of bases to U.S. military aircraft.

The United States has already acquired many bases in Pakistani territory. The United States is encouraged to develop a special kind of relationship with Pakistan for its supply of arms and loans. If Pakistan's developing relations with the Western nations and the neighboring states are being weighed, they will show a tilt to the side on which the members of the special relationship put their arms and loans. Whenever a sign of improvement is noticed in the relations between Pakistan and India or Afghanistan, more arms and loans are placed on the tilted side of the weighing machine.

The leaders of Washington consider the sovereignty of Pakistan a (?stamp) that can be changed. It is most probably not in the national interest of Pakistan. Such American policy is also not in the overall interest of the other nations of the Asian and Pacific region. The large-scale condemnation of the U.S. piratical attack proves this fact.

The socialist and nonaligned nations have raised their firm voice in support of acceptable international laws. The Soviet Government issued a statement on 23 April with a desire to bring an overall improvement to the situation in the Asian and Pacific region. It said that, as in other regions, relations can be developed not by pitting one nation against the other but by strengthening friendship, trust, and mutual understanding among nations on the basis of equality and open cooperation. Following this path, a door can be opened to the just solution of the border problem and other bilateral issues, and normalization of relations between India and Pakistan.

REPORTAGE, COMMENT ON EEC MEETING ON TERRORISM

Talks 'Controlled From Washington'

LD251755 Moscow TASS in English 1519 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] The Hague April 25 TASS -- A meeting of home and justice ministers of the Common Market member-countries has been held in the capital of the Netherlands. On the agenda of the meeting were questions pertaining to "combatting terrorism," yet the debate was reduced actually to a coordination of actions by secret services and repressive machineries of 12 EEC member-countries with the similar U.S. departments. This activity will be pearheaded against democratic, including anti-war organizations, representaties of progressive movements, citizens from countries pursuing an active anti-imperialist policy.

The talks were held in an atmosphere of stepping up sanctions vis-a-vis sovereign Libya, and their course was almost completely controlled from Washington. Edwin Meese, U.S. attorney-general, and William Webster, FBI director, who arrived here, did not officially participate in the discussions, but were intensively lobbying the ministers.

This has been mirrored in the results of the session. Along with general commitments on strengthening ties between the police of the member-countries of the Community and the USA, the participants in the talks committed themselves to exchange broadly information with the USA on the events and persons involved in "terrorism." Thus Washington has received an opportunity to influence the activity of the police and secret services of Western Europe. By supplying information cooked up by the CIA and the FBI, the USA will have now an opportunity to direct the activity of the punitive bodies of the Common Market against the citizens of a country, which is listed as an "objectionable" one at a given moment.

Paris April 25 TASS -- The meeting of justice and home ministers of the Common Market member-countries was vigilantly watched by the Washington emissaries, the newspaper of the French Communists "L'HUMANITE" said today. That is precisely why the USA succeeded without too much effort in getting from their West European allies consent to a close coordination of the secret services' actions.

LIBYA CONDEMNS EEC DECISION TO CUT DIPLOMATS

LD251358 Moscow TASS in English 1317 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 25 TASS -- The Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah has condemned the decision of the member countries of the European Economic Community on a cut in the diplomatic staff of the Jamahiriyah in their capitals, says the statement issued here by the People's Bureau for External Relations (Libya's Foreign Ministry), the Libyan JANA news agency said.

The document says that this anti-Libyan step was taken under the pressure of the United Libyan citizens staying abroad.

These two powers, the statement points out, are using their influence to distract general attention from the crimes comitted by the USA against Libya's peaceful citizens during the raid of the U.S. Air Force on Libyan cities. The Jamahiriyah deplores the stand of the West European nations, which upset the traditional bonds of friendship between Libya and those European states. The decision of the EEC member countries constitutes approval of the act of armed aggression perpetrated by the USA and Britain.

The Libyan Jamahiriyah, the statement says, categorically denies the unsubstantiated accusations of its involvement in acts of terrorism.

France Joins 'Discriminatory' Sanctions

LD252002 Moscow TASS in English 1913 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Paris April 25 TASS — The French Ministry of Foreign Affairs has announced that France is joining the discriminatory sanctions introduced by the EEC countries against Libya and endorsed by the foreign ministers of EEC member countries. These discriminatory measures were taken by the Common Market countries under pressure from Washington that is trying to draw the West European partners into its militaristic ventures.

Within the framework of the adopted measures, it is said in a communique published here by the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the staff of the Libyan People's Bureau and Consulate in France will be reduced, and the movement of Libyan diplomats in the country will be restricted.

The time needed by Libyan citizens to get French entry visas is also being extended.

Italian Sanctions Noted

LD261929 Moscow TASS in English 1858 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Rome April 26 TASS -- Toeing the line of the White House which seeks to draw its allies as widely as possible into the rabid anti-Libyan campaign launched by the Reagan administration, the Government of Italy has announced the adoption of discriminatory measures with regard to Libya. The measures envisage a cut in the staff of the People's Bureau (embassy) of Libya in Italy and a restriction on the Libyan diplomats' freedom of travel about the country. The Italian Foreign Ministry's statement has it that the measures have been adopted in accordance with the recent decision of the foreign ministers of twelve Common Market countries on the application of sanctions against Libya.

FRG UNABLE TO CONFIRM LIBYAN ROLE IN BOMBING

LD262007 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1455 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 26 Apr (TASS) -- IZVESTIYA's West Berlin correspondent writes in the paper today that there is absolutely no evidence that the bomb in the West Berlin discotheque "La Belle" was the work of "Libyan terrorists." This pretext was used by Washington as a reason for the U.S. military aggression against Libya. But the U.S. authorities need the evidence. After all, the United States has been trumpeting around the world about the credible, but secret intelligence in their possession.

Washington's accusations are at least mistrusted by the majority of the population in West Berlin. Even such a reactionary paper as BERLINER MORGENPOST was rather skeptical: "Frankly speaking, all the suspicions melt away before one's eyes."

The terrorist actions of the U.S. military in Libya caused a powerful wave of indignation among the West Berlin public.

Demonstrations and meetings follow one after the other. Washington is accused of carrying out a policy of state terrorism.

"We ask you, Mr President," says a letter from railway workers at Spandau Station addressed to Reagan, "to cease the policy of blackmail and violence that is damaging the interests of peace and international security."

West Berlin is in turmoil. The commission investigating the dischotheque explosion is almost fighting to confirm the U.S. accusations against Libya and is unable to obtain evidence of Libyan citizens' participation, writes the IZVESTIYA correspondent.

LD251828 Moscow TASS in English 1816 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 25 TASS -- The presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. appointed Leonid Zamyatin ambassador of the U.S.S.R. to Great Britain.

In 1970-1978 he worked as director general of TASS (news agency of the Soviet Union) at the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R., and in 1978-1986 -- as head of the International Information Department of the CPSU Central Committee.

Viktor Popov was relieved of his duties as ambassador of the U.S.S.R. to Great Britain in connection with retirement on pension.

THATCHER WILLING TO SUPPORT MORE U.S. 'TERRORIST ACTS'

LD280725 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0553 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] London, 28 Apr (TASS) -- The British Conservative government is prepared to support further international terrorist acts by the Reagan administration similar to the barbaric raid against Libya. This follows from the statement British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher made in a BBC interview. Answering one of the questions, the head of the Tory cabinet stressed that she would approve the take-off of U.S. aircraft from military bases in Britain again, if President Reagan decides to bomb the capitals of Syria and Iran for the purpose of "fighting terorrism."

UK DEFENSE AIDE ON U.S. NUCLEAR ARMS ISSUE

LD241111 Moscow TASS in English 0717 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] London April 23 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Pakhomov reports:

British Defense Secretary George Younger made an attempt to "reassure" the British public, alarmed by the admission of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in Parliament that the American Armed Forces actually had the right to use at their discretion nuclear weapons stationed at U.S. military bases in Britain. Disclaiming that admission, the defense secretary argued in an interview to a BBC radio program that the use of those weapons was fully controlled by the British Government and that they could not be used without the mutual accord of the U.S. President and the British prime minister.

Younger's statement is viewed here as a Whitehall manoeuvre to defuse the political scandal caused by Margaret Thatcher's admissions. Addressing the House of Commons, she said in her comments on the recent raids of the U.S. Air Force on Libya from British territory that it was up to the United States to choose weapons to hit necessary targets. In this way the prime minister gave the USA a free hand in deciding on the use of nuclear weapons in raids mounted from the American bases in Britain, THE MORNING STAR said today about the statements of the head of government. The newspaper also added that these statements had caused a storm of outrage from political opposition and the anti-war forces. The prime minister at last admitted that the United States could use nuclear weapons from British territory even without Britain's permission, P. Johns, chairman of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, said. Margaret Thatcher's statement was strongly criticized by Labour spokesmen and by David Steel, leader of the Liberal Party. The PRESS ASSOCIATION news agency points out that George Younger's interview today will hardly satisfy many opposition parliamentarians, who believe that the government should exercise thougher control over the American military bases in Britain.

DOBRYNIN, ZAGLADIN RECEIVE CYPRUS DELEGATION

[TASS report: "Meeting at the CPSU Central Committee"]

[Text] A meeting took place at the CPSU Central Committee on 25 April between A.F. Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; and V.V. Zagladin, member of the CPSU Central Committee and first deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Section; and a delegation of the Restorative Party of the Working People of Cyprus (AKEL) consisting of E. Papaioannou, general secretary of AKEL; K. Konstantinou, member of the AKEL Central Committee Politburo and Central Secretariat; and G. Khristodboulidhis, member of the AKEL Central Committee Politburo and Central Secretariat.

During the meeting, which took place in a warm, friendly atmosphere, an exchange of opinions took place on topical questions of the international situation and the Cyprus problem, as well as interparty relations between the CPSU and AKEL.

The participants noted their unity of views in assessing the international situation, which is characterized by the severe exacerbation of tension as a result of the U.S. imperialist circles' flagrant flouting of the people's will for peace, the further development of the arms race, the carrying out of nuclear explosions, and the pursuit of the piratical policy of "neoglobalism." The representatives of the CPSU and AKEL resolutely condemn the reckless act of U.S. state terrorism against Libya and its illegal actions in Nicaragua and Afghanistan and demand an end to all these provocative actions. The CPSU and AKEL representatives reaffirmed their parties' unchanging solidarity with the peoples of the Near and Middle East, Latin America, and South Africa who are fighting for their independence and social progress.

The CPSU and AKEL consider it a task of paramount importance to eliminate the threat of nuclear war. This goal can be achieved through radical disarmament, including nuclear disarmament, equal security for all, and the establishment of peaceful coexistence as the universal norm in relations between states. In this connection the Cypriot comrades stressed the exceptional importance of the large-scale, constructive new peace initiatives put forth by the Soviet Union in the 27th CPSU Congress documents and in statements by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

The AKEL delegation reported on the Cypriot people's selfless struggle for a lasting settlement in Cyprus, which is hindered by the unceasing interference of U.S. and NATO imperialist forces in the country's internal affairs and the continuing occupation of the northern part of the island by Turkish troops. The Cypriot comrades assessed highly the Soviet proposals "On the Principles for a Cyprus Settlement and Ways of Achieving it," noting that their implementation could break the deadlock on the Cyprus problems and promote a just settlement of its international aspects.

The CPSU representatives reaffirmed the unchanging position of the Soviet Union, which is opposed to the division of the island and the elimination of the Republic of Cyprus and in favor of preserving the country's status, in accordance with the will of the people, as an independent, sovereign, federal state of territorial integrity, free from any foreign military presence and pursuing a policy of nonalignment. An important factor for settling the Cyprus problem would be representative international conference convened under UN auspices.

The two parties' delegations are convinced that the successful resolution of the Cyprus problem requires cohesion and united efforts by all democratic and patriotic forces of the Republic of Cyprus, a responsible approach by all interested states to the fulfillment of UN resolutions on Cyprus, and the maximum utilization of the good offices of the UN secretary general.

The CPSU and AKEL confirmed their parties' desire to continue to advocate the further development of all-around ties and cooperation between the USSR and the Republic of Cyprus, the strengthening of friendship between the Soviet and Cypriot peoples, and the consolidation of fraternal relations between the CPSU and AKEL.

GREEK GROUP CALLS FOR WITHDRAWAL OF U.S. BASES

LD240335 Moscow TASS in English 1240 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Athens April 23 TASS -- The Organizing Committee for National Security of Greece has issued a statement saying that the U.S. bandit attack on Libya makes it essential for Greek people to step up their campaign for the withdrawal of foreign military bases and nuclear weapons from this country.

The committee released the statement after a joint meeting of representatives of major Greek mass organizations it had arranged.

Speaking at the meeting were M. Nikolinakos, chairman of the Greek Committee for the Removal of Foreign Military Bases, and other members of anti-war organizations. They sharply condemned the U.S. attack on Libya, branding it as a gross violation of the U.N. Charter.

The meeting adopted an appeal to the Greek Government to adopt all necessary measures to put up a sturdy barrier to the United States' use of its military facilities in Greek territory for aggressive purposes.

N. EUROPE FRIENDSHIP SOCIETIES MEET USSR COUNTERPARTS

LD272342 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1117 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Report by correspondent R. Oyasaar]

[Text] Helsinki, 27 Apr (TASS) -- In Espoo, near Helsinki, the traditional yearly conference of representatives of friendship societies with the USSR from countries in northern Europe and the Union of Soviet Societies for Friendship and Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries was concluded here. Discussed were the directions and concrete tasks of the forthcoming work of the societies.

In the course of the conference, the Soviet delegation informed its participants of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and also stated the USSR's readiness to continue with all the means at its disposal expanding and stepping up cooperation with all friendship societies with the USSR in the countries of northern Europe.

The conference participants expressed deep concern over the alarming situation in the world. They noted the contribution made by friendship societies to the struggle to strengthen peace and security and to establish a climate of good-neighborliness and trust among peoples.

The conference adopted a final document giving a high assessment of the Soviet Union's complex major peace initiatives aimed at preserving peace and fully eliminating nuclear and chemical weapons in stages by the end of this century. It states that the idea of creating a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe is receiving wider and wider support among the population and parliaments of the countries in the regions. Turning northern Europe into a zone free of nuclear weapons, with appropriate guarantees from the great powers, the document points out, would facilitate an easing of tension on the continent of Europe and would assist in halting the arms race.

The 1948 Soviet-Finnish Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Aid has exerted and continues to exert a stabilizing influence on the situation in Europe and promotes the maintenance of peace in the north of the continent. The conference's final document stressed that the broad cooperation between Finland and the Soviet Union is convincing evidence of the vitality of the principle of peaceful coexistence between states with differing social systems.

U.S. ISRAEL AGREE ON ATTACKING PALESTINIAN REFUGEE CAMPS

LD261121 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1047 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Beirut, 26 Apr (TASS) -- Attention is being drawn here to reports from the United States that, by agreement with Washington, Tel Aviv is preparing in the near future to strike against Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon. It follows from these reports that the Israeli General Staff is planning to carry out air raids on those civilian targets with a simultaneous attack by land forces.

Local political observers point out thast the preparation for new Israeli aggressive actions is happening at a time when the United States is whipping up tension in the Mediterranean area and endless U.S. provocations are taking place against sovereign Libya. It is no secret to anyone that the armed U.S. attack on Libya was fully approved and supported in Tel Aviv. It is symbolic that the preparation for an aggressive action by Israel is occurring in the context of an unabridled anti-Libyan campaign in the United States and against the background of statements by U.S. leaders about a possible new armed attack on Libya.

[Moscow Domestic Service in Russian at 1800 GMT on 26 April adds the following:

"At the same time, voices can be heard more and more often in the United States that the organizers of the current tension in the Middle East are not only Libya, but to a greater extent Syria and Iran. In this connection it is not ruled out that strikes will be made both on Lebanon and Libya, and also on Syria and Iran."]

SYRIA'S AL-ASAD: ARABS, MOSCOW WILL OPPOSE U.S.

LD271712 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Statement given by Hafiz al-Asad, Arab Socialist Ba'th Party secretary general and president of Syria, to interviewer Farid Seyful-Mulyukov, Political Observer, in Damascus, date not given, from the "Vremya" newscast; Al-Asad in Arabic with superimposed Russian translation -- recorded]

[Text] I was interested in familiarizing myself with the 27th CPSU Congress documents which advances a very important and extensive program for eliminating weapons of mass destruction, preventing the threat of nuclear war, and creating a comprehensive system of international security.

In my opinion, the concrete proposals and ideas contained in this program are in accordance with the hopes and interests of the people. The USSR peace initiatives show that is aspiring to stop production of nuclear weapons and eliminate them completely, to achieve a curb in conventional weapons, an take a decisive step toward preventing wars in the future.

It is a matter of regret that the United States has not responded to this initiative. On the contrary, the United States has contributed to the aggravation and complication of the international situation. It has embarked on a path of escalating aggression first in in this, then in that area of the world, as has happened in Latin America and, very recently, in Libya. The United States attacked the Libyan Jamahiriyah, subjected its towns and the houses of peaceful citizens to bombing -- killing women, children, and old people under the pretext that Libya allegedly carries out terrorist acts.

Libya has declared more than once that is has nothing to do with terrorist acts carried out in several European countries. On the basis of what logic has the United States given itself the right to act to punish whole countries and peoples, undermining international principles and laws? This is terrifying logic. It is not in accordance with the spirit of our time, and we reject it. We condemn the U.S. policy of neoglobalism.

The main reasons for tension in the Middle East are Israel's expansionist aspirations, and the U.S. intention to achieve hegemony in the area. For the sake of its aggressive strategy, Washington is aiming to foist on us its own order, even to (?dictate) our way of life. We reject this. We will combat any attempt to harm us. We have no alternative to opposing the whole package of the aggressive policy of the United States and Israel. Syria and the other Arab countries are supported in this opposition by the strength of the world liberation movement, by their friends in the world, first and foremost in the Soviet Union.

Syria has always supported the well-known Soviet proposals for achieving a just settlement in the Middle East, and continues to do so. They are in accordance with the proposals of the Arab countries which were approved at the meeting of Arab leaders in Fes. The problem is, however, that the United States and Israel reject proposals, both the Soviet and the Arab ones.

I can see no other way to establish peace in our region other than the convening of an international conference on the Middle East under the aegis of the United Nations, in which the Soviet Union and the United States must take part. The presence of the USSR at such a conference is essential, for its participation would mean the existence of serious guarantees for a just and firm settlement.

Washington and Tel Aviv do not want such guarantees, and for this reason they do not want the participation of the Soviet Union at a conference on the Middle East. In this way they are driving the whole process into a dead end. It is extremely important for the Soviet Union to be a participant in the peace process in our region, and a guarantor of this process.

Syria and the Soviet Union are aspiring to strengthen their close links on the basis of the bilateral treaty of friendship and cooperation. The Soviet Union is conducting an active struggle for preserving and strengthening peace. It is playing a very important and effective role in supporting peoples fighting for their freedom, independence, and progress.

SYRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ON 'LATEST' U.S., ISRAELI 'THREATS'

LD261335 Moscow TASS in English 1300 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Beirut April 26 TASS -- The U.S. attack on Libyan Jamahiriyah is a dangerous stage in Washington's global policy, said Syria's Foreign Minister Faruq al-Shar'. Over the recent years that policy manifested itself in the seizure of Grenada, blockade of Nicaragua, and mining of its territorial waters, U.S. involvement in the Israeli aggression against Lebanon in 1982, he stressed in an interview to the Lebanese weekly AL-SHIRA'.

The latest threats to Syria come in line with that policy, said the foreign minister of Syria. The pressure of Washington and Tel Aviv on Arab countries is strong, but the people of Syria is fully determined to give a rebuff to aggression.

"By-gone [as received] is the time when Israel was able to hit a strike on Syria with impunity. Such a strike will now lead to a beginning of broad military confrontation in the course of which Israel will inevitably sustain big manpower and material losses. [no closing quotation mark as received]

Speaking on problems facing the Palestine resistance movement, the foreign minister of Syria declared for "restoration of unity of the Palestine Liberation Organization on the anti-Zionist and anti-imperialist basis".

COMMENTATOR DENIES USSR KNEW IN ADVANCE OF U.S. RAID

PM261609 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 27 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[A. Mozgovoy article: "Curtain of Slander: The Events in Libya and Washington's New Anti-Soviet Fabrication"]

[Text] Threats against Libya are again being heard from Washington. The U.S. aircraft carriers from whose decks attacking aircraft could take off at any moment to rain down missiles and bombs on the Jamahiriyah's cities are continuing their sinister movements in the Mediterranean.

The concepts of conscience and honor are, as we are aware, unkown to bandits. This also applies in full measures to those who are pursuing a policy of state terrorism in the international arena. It is no coincidence that those people on the banks of the Potomac have decided to back up their aircraft carrier with diplomacy with a campaign of malicious slander. The Soviet Union has been chosen as the target of this campaign. The mass media have put into circulation a false story claiming that the USSR knew in advance of the projected raid on Libya by U.S. aircraft but did nothing to prevent it. But even this is not all. Rumors are being circulated concerning an alleged "understanding" on the division of "spheres of influence" between the United States and our country. Libya it is said, proved to be in the U.S. sphere, and so Moscow calmly looked on as the residential quarters of Tripoli and Banghazi crumbled under American bombs.

Naturallly, it is difficult to imagine any greater vileness! However, one need not be particularly surprised. People who kill children and then make speeches about the "humaneness" of such actions are indeed incapable of anything else.

Our country's position in relation to the events around Libya has always been clear and firm. Numerous steps were undertaken on the part of the USSR [so storony SSSR] to prevent the aggression that was being prepared. The Soviet Union repeatedly addressed serious warnings to the U.S. Administration regarding the dangerous consequences of the continuation of the anti-Libya policy not only for the situation in the Mediterranean area but also for the entire international situation. Washington, however, failed to heed these appeals.

The barbarous raids by American aircraft on peaceful Libyan cities have aroused the anger and indignation of Soviet people. All our people have demanded an end to the piratical raids by the United States against a sovereign Arab state. The Soviet leadership has expressed a resolute protest to the U.S. Administration and has demanded that Washington immediately end its adventurist policy. A corresponding representation has also been made to the British Government, which approved the use of U.S. Air Force bases in carrying out the air raids on Libya.

The Soviet Union's moral, political, diplomatic, and military support for friendly Libya has earned the approval of the international community.

This was confirmed by the session of the UN Security Council held the other day. The United States ended up in virtual isolation. And it was only the veto by the representatives of the United States, Britain, and France that saved Washington from the adoption of a resolution condemning the American military's armed attack on Libya.

In these circumstances, the people over the ocean have indeed drawn a curtain of slander in order to cast a shadow on the USSR and to attempt to drive a wedge into Soviet-Libyan relations. But the false concoctions cannot conceal the truth -- our country's position remains immutable. To cite the assurance given by M.S. Gorbachev in his message to M. al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution, the Soviet Union firmly intends to continue fulfilling the pledges it has assumed, including in the context of the further strengthening of Libya's defense capability. And in the prevailing situation this is now of particular significance for this Arab country.

AL-QADHDHAFI: NO JUSTIFICATION FOR U.S. RAID

PM272005 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 28 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "No Justification for Aggression. M. al-Qadhdhafi Interview"]

[Text] London, 27 Apr — The real reason for the barbaric raid by U.S. aircraft on Libya's peaceful cities is the undisguised hatred on the part of the present U.S. Administration for any manifestations of the national liberation movement, of the struggle for freedom and national independence in various regions of the world, the Middle East included, M. al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution, stated in an interview granted to the London newspaper SUNDAY TODAY.

In order to find a justification for outright aggression against states that have embarked on the path of independent development, Washington is mounting a virulent propaganda war against such countries and regimes and is accusing them of some sort of "involvement in terrorism," as can be seen fom the example of Libya, he pointed out.

"We are most clearly and definitely opposed to terrorism and we reject such methods as the kidnapping and murder of innocent people," M. al-Qadhdhafi said. The real terrorists are those people who use the most sophisticated weapons systems to strike at peaceful inhabitants, he emphasized, noting that the roots of the violence and bloodshed in today's world lie in the existence of racism, exploitation, and colonialism.

There was absolutely no reason for the attack on Libya, and the United States has absolutely no justification, the leader of the Libyan revolution continued. In reality the United States is planning to subvert the Arab liberation movement and is exploiting the acts of kidnapping that are taking place in order "to divert attention away from the just struggle of the Palestinian people." Washington's "crusade" strategy -- of which Libya has now become a direct victim -- merely kindles conflicts and leads to the general exacerbation of international tension and military confrontation in the world, M. al-Qadhdhafi emphasized.

He condemned Great Britain for complicity in the U.S. aggression agaisnt Libya.

LIBYAN FOREIGN MINISTER SENDS LETTER TO UN

LD252010 Moscow TASS in English 1716 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 25 TASS -- Kamil Hasan al-Mansur, of Libya's General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison, has sent a letter to the U.N. Security Council.

It stresses that the aggressive policy of the United States vis-a-vis Libya is a serious threat to peace and security in the Mediterranean and all over the world. The USA is instigating murder of the leader of the revolution and head of a member state of the United Nations Organisation, crudely interferes in the homes affairs of another country, violating the norms and practices of international law, the letter says.

TASS CITES JANA ON CIA INVOLVEMENT IN LONDON BOMBING

LD251751 Moscow TASS in English 1733 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 25 TASS -- Commenting on reports about an explosion in a British Airways office in London the Libyan news agency JANA said that the blast had been staged by the U.S. Central Intelligence agency.

At first the Western mass media, JANA noted, tried to put the responsibility for that terrorist act on Libya. However, such accusations turned out to be totally groundless. They cannot be proved.

The explosion was staged, JANA emphasized, in order to exacerbate tensions in the southern Mediterranean and create a pretext for new provocations against sovereign Libya.

MOSCOW TV SHOWS LIBYANS INJURED IN U.S. ACTION

LD251907 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Leonid Rassadin report from Tripoli; from the "Vremya" newcast"]

[Text] The Washington administration continues to assert that the recent U.S. armed action against Libya was a purely military operation. Is this so?

I am now with a large group of foreign correspondents outside Triplli's main hospital. In here are many Libyan victims of the U.S. Air Force's pirate raid on a densely populated quarter of the Libyan capital. Hasin Bashir, aged 7, is wounded in the head; Shamiz Rajid, age 15, is wounded in the spine; Sa'id Abdallah, aged 52, with 5 children, is wounded in the spine. [video shows patients in hospital beds]

This list could be continued, yet President Reagan, who ceaselessly preaches Christian ideals, calls himseif a champion of human rights. Of what rights? The right to give the order to kill somebody, to maim somebody else, and to bring grief and suffering to people?

[Muhammad Bakri Krevi -- in Arabic with superimposed Russian translation] My name is Muhammad Bakri Krevi. I am a doctor, a traumatologist, from Tripoli's Central Hospital. I can say this for certain: What the U.S. Administration has done is a vile crime, which only barabrians could commit.

[Rassadin] Here in Libya, as in Vietnam and Grenada, as in Lebanon and Nicaragua, Washington's policy is now associated with the practice of blatant terrorism, crimes against humanity, and open genocide. [video shows further shots of hospital patients]

NICARAGUA PROTESTS RECENT U.S. STATEMENTS, ACTIONS

LD271217 Moscow TASS in English 1142 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Managua April 27 TASS -- The United States does not want peace in Central America and banks on raw military power in a bid to crush the Sandinist popular revolution, Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega has said in the Face the Nation radio and television program.

He denounced the hypocritical policies of the Reagan administration which pays lip service to the Contadora Group's peace-making efforts, while in fact setting the stage for direct armed intervention against Nicaragua.

The Pentagon, Ortega said, is fast increasing its presence in neighbouring Honduras. U.S. troops are stationed in the immediate proximity of the Nicaraguan border and giving all-round aid to "contra" gangs.

Ortega Interview Cited

LD280705 Moscow TASS in English 0651 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Mexico City April 28 TASS -- The Reagan administration is pursuing towards Nicaragua a policy of blackmail, pressure and threats, President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua said in an interview with the Mexican newspaper "EXCELSIOR". The aim of that criminal policy, he said, is to overthrow the Nicaraguan Government elected by the people and destroy the Sandinist revolution. Washington's stand is the main obstacle to ensuring peace in Central America, the president said.

Daniel Ortega spoke highly of the activity of the "Contadora Group" for a peaceful settlement of the crisis in the region. He said that this process should continue. Nicaragua, he said, is ready to sign the draft act on establishing peace in Central America, which was prepared by the "Contadora Group", as soon as the United States gives written guarantees of renunciation of aggression against the Republic and of support for the Nicaraguan "contras". The hostile actions of the White House in Central America, the president stressed, are a crime perpetrated by U.S. imperialism against all the Latin American peoples.

Reagan Statement Formally Protested

LD280645 Moscow TASS in English 0623 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 28 TASS -- The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua has handed a note of protest to U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz in connection with President Reagan's statement of April 23, in which he again attacked and threatened the land of Sandino.

Statements by President Reagan, the note says, are again demonstrating the intention of the administration to continue to give support to mercenary terrorists in Central America with a view to directing their attacks at Nicaragua.

The Niaraguan Embassy in the USA points out in a statement released here simultaneously that the Nicaraguan Government is categorically rejecting Washington's malicious allegations about Managua's involvement in international terrorism.

The document stresses that the White House resorts to such methods to press the House of Representatives of U.S. Congress anew for support for the President's request of 100 million dollars to finance the operations of real terrorists, the gangs of "contras."

Making charges against Nicaragua, the statement goes on to say, President Reagan never says who laid mines at Nicaraguan harbours or who prepared and spread a CIA manual on the organization of political assassinations. President Reagan never says that the gangs of "contras" supported by Washington are constantly perpetrating acts of terrorism against the civilian population of Nicaragua.

The Nicaraguan Government denounces any manifestation of terrorism. The Nicaraguan people themselves are victims of the policy of state terrorism, openly encouraged by the U.S. Administration and implemented by the CIA and the groupings of "contras" set up by the USA, the document says.

CHILEAN OPPOSITION APPEALS TO ARMED FORCES

PY190334 Moscow in Spanish to Chile 2030 GMT 18 Apr 86

[Text] In a letter addressed to the Carabineros and the Armed Forces, the Patriotic Front Manuel Rodriguez [FPMR] has stated that the FPMR does not seek a military confrontation with the Armed Forces but rather to defend popular actions against tyranny, urging those in uniform to join the struggle for the removal of Pinochet.

The FPMR stated that, in a year called decisive by everyone, the levels of confrontation are necessarily escalating and, as the regime continues its repression, we feel it is essential to appeal to those who are involved in repression today to pull out, to desert.

Our aim is not to annihilate the Armed Forces. Our aim is to have a large portion of the Armed Forces join the people, the popular struggle, to have them foresake repression.

Another paragraph says: We seek the regime's defeat and the restoration of sovereignty to the people so they can make the ultimate decisions. The FPMR warned that to end the dictatorship entails dismantling all the repressive military and judicial structures the regime has created to perpetuate oppression.

PENTAGON CONSIDERS BINARY WEAPONS 'INTEGRAL' IN WARFARE

LD281818 Moscow TASS in English 1700 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- By TASS military writer Vladimir Chernyshev:

Washington is imposing ever new deadly weapons on its NATO allies in a bid to gain military strategic superiority. This time these are binary munitions.

The NATO bloc, shaken by the differences over the Libya crisis, wrote THE TIMES of London, were in for heated debates on the question of the production and possible deployment in Europe of new binary chemical weapons.

The ambassadors of the NATO countries are to take a preliminary decision with regard to the deployment of binary weapons in Europe. The final decision is to be adopted by the defence ministers next month.

The U.S. Administration is again turning its allies into accomplices in a peace-endangering action. As with the nuclear Pershing-2 and cruise missiles, now being deployed in several Western European countries, Washington is revealing its perfidy.

Once again, it would like to turn its allies' territory into a target of a retaliatory strike in a devastating chemical war.

Binary weapons will become yet another source of threat for the densely populated countries in Western Europe.

The NATO Western European member countries know quite well that the U.S. military-strategic concepts provide for interaction between conventional, nuclear, chemical and electronic means of warfare in combat operations.

Pentagon officials frankly declared that the U.S. Administration could not rely on arms control, including control in the field of chemical weapons, and that the United States should constantly threaten the Soviet Union in this area and consider chemical war as an integral part of any conflict.

The U.S. allies know equally well that "binary death" is intended primarily for their countries. General Bernard Rogers, supreme allied commander Europe, unequivocally announced in this connection: Binary, along with nuclear weapons are planned for use at the very beginning of hostilities on the European Continent.

The governments of the NATO Western European countries which will tread in Washington's steps will also share with it all responsibility for the building of an insurmountable obstacle in the way of drafting a convention at the Geneva disarmament conference, a convention that would ensure a total destruction of chemical weapons by the turn of the century.

Only one week ago, the USSR tabled new proposals in Geneva, aimed at overcoming the existing differences and facilitating the elaboration of the convention. Washington, in reply to the constructive step, intensified preparations for the continued buildup of chemical arsenals.

The implementation of the American plans will not only negatively affect the talks on a comprehensive ban on chemical weapons.

This step will undermine the military, technical, political and psychological restrictions that are restraining the spread of chemical weapons world-wide.

The plans to produce and deploy binary chemical weapons cannot but give rise to serious concern and indignation around the world. The Soviet Union resolutely denounced the policy and practice of this kind, and repeatedly called on Washington and its allies to weigh all the negative consequences they will have for world security.

SOVIET EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

LD290904 Moscow World Service in English 0700 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] There has been a news conference in the Soviet Embassy in Washington devoted to the new Soviet proposals on a reduction of conventional arms in Europe. The proposals were spelled out by the Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in his speech in the capital of the GDR on 18 April.

Am embassy spokesman explained that together with national means to verify reductions, the Soviet Union was prepared to use on-site international inspection.

ISRAELYAN COMMENTS ON DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

LD261908 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1100 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Report from Geneva by correspondent Vladimir Dmitriyev]

[Text] The spring session of the conference on disarmament has come to an end in the Palace of Nations. Representatives of 40 member-states of the conference took part in its work. We asked Comrade Israelyan, head of the Soviet delegation to the disarmament conference, to comment on the results of the spring session.

[Begin recording] The spring session of the disarmament conference began soon after the Soviet Union offered a large-scale initiative on questions of disarmament -- I have in mind the declaration by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January -- and it ended a week after the speech by Comrade Gorbachev in Berlin when new and important proposals by the Soviet Union were introduced concerning the reduction of conventional arms and armed forces. So, the conference session was, so to speak, framed by these two major Soviet initiatives.

At the center of attention of the conference were our proposals on questions of nuclear disarmament, the prohibiting the nuclear weapon tests, and the banning of chemical weapons. I want to talk about the important proposal which Mikhail Sergeyevich announced in Berlin -- the new proposal for the reduction of chemical weapons. We spoke of these proposals in specific form on 22 April, and were received in an exceptionally positive way because, and I say this openly, our proposals concerning the elimination of the industrial basis of chemical weapons, as far as it concerns chemical weapons, is one of the central questions of the talks. And now we have proposed such approaches, taking the positions of other states into consideration, as will, it seems to us, offer the possibility of coming to the most rapid concluding of a convention on chemicals. Well, we are gathering again soon. We hope Washington will reexamine its approach to the talks and that they will really act in the spirit of Geneva, that is, in a spirit seeking mutually acceptable solutions. [end recording]

WESTERN COUNTRIES AVOIDING SOLUTION TO ARMS RACE

LD271946 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 27 Apr 86

[From the "International Panorama" program, presented by Spartak Beglov]

[Text] Our program is being broadcast on the eve of May Day and in the International Year of Peace. Of course, this year working people are expecting governments to make as many simple and clear decisions as possible for peace and the strengthening of international security. Soviet diplomacy consistently acts in the spirit of the Year of Peace. This year got off to a good start in the form of our plan for nuclear disarmament and the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, which advanced a program for an all-embracing system of international security. Taken unawares by such a fundamental approach to international affairs. Western politicians are doing all they can to decline the solutions proposed by the Soviet Union and are putting forward all sorts of pretexts and reservations. For example, the West has begun to talk about the impossibility of parting with nuclear weapons. The pretext for the myth about the alleged overwhelming superiority of the Warsaw Pact countries in conventional weapons and armed forces, has been resurrected.

Speaking not long ago in Berlin, Comrade Gorbachev put forth a clear and simple proposal: Let us reach agreement on substantial reductions in all components for conventional weapons and armed forces both in Eastern and Western Europe and from the Atlantic to the Urals. Let us do this strictly in accordance with the principle of equality and equal security. Thus, the references to some sort of superiority would no longer obstruct the path to nuclear disarmament. Just recently, a Soviet proposal was put forth at the Geneva Disarmament Conference on the complete elimination of chemical weapons and of its industrial production base, along with strict monitoring. That means that a strike has also been made against the other conjecture alleging that nuclear disarmament is being hindered by the mythical Soviet superiority in chemical weapons. Finally, this week saw the publication of peaceful cooperation of countries in the Asian and Pacific Ocean region in the name of the quest for a reliable security system. This means that our plans in Asia are the same as those in Europe and throughout the world.

As for U.S. policy, as is obvious it is going in the diametrically opposite direction. Today it is sufficient to say just one word -- Libya -- and no other evidence is needed. The barbarous aggression against Libya is the calling card of Washington's policy.

CONVENTIONAL FORCE REDUCTION PROPOSAL 'VIABLE'

LD290402 Moscow in English to Great Britain and Ireland 1900 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Interview with "military and political analyst" Konstantin Sorokin by unidentified studio announcer on Soviet proposal for conventional force reductions in Europe -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Announcer] Recently, the Soviet Union launched another arms control initiative, proposing deep reductions in conventional forces in Europe. Konstantin Sorokin is a military and political analyst. Why does this latest Soviet initiative have a specific European bearing?

[Sorokin] You see the confrontation of conventional forces in Europe has reached the highest level in the world. Three million people are under arms on each side. Besides their combat equipment is extremely sophisticated with the destructive power of some weapons approaching that of nuclear charges.

[Announcer] Ah, but what in concrete terms is the Soviet Union proposing?

[Sorokin] The USSR proposes significant cuts in all the components of the land Armies and tactical Air Forces by the European countries and by the United States, and Canada in their respective contingents in Europe. All units covered by the cuts would be disbanded and their arms either destroyed or stored on national territory. Parallel with this medium range nuclear arsenals should be curtailed. The reductions are to cover the vast area sprawling between the Atlantic and the Urals and are to be closely monitored by the national technical means of verification and by international forms of verification including on site inspection if needed.

[Announcer] And is there anything new in this Soviet move?

[Sorokin] Most of its provisions go far beyond what was suggested previously, and in many respects the initiative is a big step toward the Western position, especially in the field of verification and (?area coverage).

[Announcer] And why are tactical aviation and medium range nuclear weapons involved in the package?

[Sorokin] We are now in the era of combined service operations. Both the American airland battle concept and the NATO (FOFA) plan, that is a follow on forces attack, envisage mostly integrated actions by field troops and air forces. Their resources have become so closely interwoven that it makes little sense to cut one element while leaving the other intact so that tactical aircraft which back up army squads and the like are likewise well suited for nuclear missions and are mostly under 1,000 km in combat range.

That is our medium range. This is not covered by the INF [Intermediate-Range Nuclear Force] division of the current nuclear and space talks in Geneva, which are in any case bilateral. So I believe that the proposed approach offers the best chance to discuss these dual role grey-area systems. Then too if armored and artillery units are to be disbanded, their heavy arms, such as medium range missiles, as a rule fitted with nuclear warheads, should be dismantled. And these things are so interrelated that they are better dealt with in a single package.

[Sorokin] This strategy is two-pronged in my view. First it's designed to warn against overoptimism in the West, as Mr Weinberger did. Secondly it is designed to keep keep the media tight lipped about the Soviet initiative. The second approach is very much favored in London.

[Announcer] And how do you account for this attitude?

[Sorokin] For some months now the West has been rejecting the Soviet program of nuclear disarmament. It speaks of some kind of a Warsaw Treaty conventional superiority which can be countered only by nuclear weapons. Now the USSR has shown once again that its disarmament plan includes deep cuts in conventional forces to low and equal levels, and it has given concrete details of how it visualizes these cuts. The Western leaders are thus shown to be opposing nuclear disarmament because they simply cannot see the world without nuclear weapons, and Britain in particular is keeping so silent about the Soviet proposal because it is engaged in a conventional arms buildup to strengthen its muscles in Europe and to have a substantial power to project overseas.

[Announcer] Now you mention the NATO argument alleging a Warsaw Treaty conventional superiority.

[Sorokin] This is simply nonexistent. NATO is indeed somewhat behind in tactical aviation but this can well be put right within the framework of the recent Soviet proposals.

[Announcer] And now when they invoke Eastern hordes overwhelming a sector of Western defenses the NATO leaders presumably ignore the true political intentions of the socialist states?

[Sorokin] That's a very important point. The East has no aggressive designs whatsoever. As the Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev put it in Berlin the other day, we will never take up arms against Western Europe unless we or our allies are attacked.

[Announcer] I understand sometimes there is a tendency to write off, shall I say, the Soviet offer as a propaganda ploy.

[Sorokin] I've just outlined its key aspects. I think they make it plain the Soviet proposals are not a talking shop exercise but a viable part of a comprehensive disarmament scheme.

STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE ENTERS 'CRUCIAL PHASE'

PM281530 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 17 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Article by Major General M. Viktorov: "Stockholm: The Size of the Responsibility"]

[Text] The Stockholm Conference on Confidence-Building Measures and Security and Disarmament in Europe, whose latest session began on 15 April, has entered a crucial phase -- elaborating the final document. The forum participants -- 33 European states, the United States, and Canada -- have agreed on the shape of the document and have started to elaborate mutually acceptable formulations on such problems as the nonuse of force, the limitation of the scale of military exercises, the exchange of annual plans for notifiable military activity, notification of major exercises, and the invitation of observers to these exercises.

The Soviet Union and the other Warsaw Pact states have consistently advocated that the Stockholm Conference develop the confidence-building and security measures elaborated in Helsinki in 1975 and that it make new, effective, amd militarily vital decisions making it possible to strengthen these measures and reduce the danger of military confrontation in Europe. Together with other initiatives, the socialist countries submitted a proposal on limiting the size of military exercises to 40,000-50,000 people, and amphibious and airborne forces to 7,000. They also backed the neutral and nonaligned countries' idea that no exercise in Europe should be more than five times bigger than the notifiable size and the duration of the exercise should be not more than 15 days. The suggested limits are reasonable, balanced, and perfectly acceptable to all European states, including the NATO and Warsaw Pact countries, since, on the one hand, they enable one to see the dangerous dimensions of exercises and, on the other hand, they recognize the need that certain countries and military alliances have to train their troops at the operational as well as tactical level.

It must be noted that most of the states attending the conference are in favor of measures limiting military activity in Europe. This is perfectly natural and reasonable. There is an obvious objective need for such measures.

The scale, intensity, and duration of military activity on the European Continent are tending to increase all the time.

This activity is becoming most dangerous in the NATO countries. There are more than 1,000 NATO exercises of various kinds every year in Europe and in the Atlantic. A number of them involve a vast number of servicemen and a vast quantity of combat equipment. For example, NATO's annual "Autumn Forge" maneuvers involve around 350,000 people, 15,000 tracked and wheeled vehicles, 2,000 combat aircraft, and around 400 combat and auxiliary ships. During maneuvers in Western Europe, in adjoining sea (ocean) areas, and in airspace from Norway to Turkey they rehearse scenarios for unleashing and waging war using conventional, chemical, and nuclear weapons. Even according to Western specialists, the scale of the activity clearly exceeds combat and operational training requirements, seriously worries neighboring states, and leads to the destabilization of the situation in Europe.

The point is that it is becoming increasingly difficult to distinguish maneuvers of that size both at sea and on land from the preparatory stages of the deployment of armed forces for real combat actions. The situation is aggravated by the fact that ground forces, the air force, and the navy operate in exercises with standard combat weapons and ammunition, nuclear included. In connection with these dangerous NATO actions the Warsaw Pact countries have been forces to adopt corresponding countermeasures. All this leads to an increase in distrust and tension and a higher level of military activity in general and increases the possibility of military confrontation. The danger of conflict breaking out is particularly high because of provocative actions by groups of U.S. ships and ground forces near foreign borders, when there are deliberate violations of another state's airspace and waters and as a result of an error or miscalculation.

The provocative entry by U.S. warships into the territorial waters of the USSR and Bulgaria in the Black Sea and the actual U.S. aggression against Libya are a graphic confirmation of the need to adopt effective measures against the possible unleasing of an armed conflict in the European region. This confronts Europe and above all the NATO countries with a serious choice: passivity and, even more so, connivance at or involvement in such actions threatens to throw international relations into confusion, with unpredictable consequences.

The process of limiting military activity must embrace all states, especially those in blocs. It does not undermine any country's security and it does not require any extra expenditure. On the contrary, the adoption and implementation of limitation agreements would bring all the signatory states military-political and economic benefits.

The question is clear, one would think. But what is the problem? Who is against reducing military activity in Europe? More than any other it is the United States, Britain, and France.

In their opposition to the elaboration of limitation measures these countries cite the absence of parity in conventional armaments, the special requirements of the operational training of their forces, climatic conditions, seasonal work on the territory of the bloc's European countries, and much else. The Atlantists' arguments are obviously farfetched.

Take the question of the correlation of forces. The population of the NATO countries is 620 million and of the Warsaw Pact countries, 375 million. The NATO bloc surpasses the Warsaw Pact Organization in terms of total number of armed forces personnel, in terms of the number of combat-ready divisions and in terms of antitank facilities; it has approximately the same amount of artillery and armored equipment. The Warsaw Pact countries' armed forces have a few more tactical aircraft than NATO.

Nor can one discount the fact that powerful NATO naval strike groups are always present in the Atlantic Ocean and in the seas that wash Europe. The U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean is in a state of constant combat readiness. The U.S. 2d (Atlantic) Fleet, possessing 5 aircraft carriers and more than 100 other warships, is almost totally orientated toward Europe. In Western Europe and areas adjoining it there are more than 200 major military bases which are the strong points of the North Atlantic bloc's military structure.

The NATO representatives themselves once again suggested at the Vienna talks on reducing armed forces and armaments in central Europe limiting the size of major military exercises to 50,000 people. In support of this proposal the Belgian representative, for example, stated: "It is in the interests of both sides to prevent over-intensive military activity from causing violations of stability in the region." The question is, what has changed since that statement was made? Why was the limitation of military activity not prevented by climatic conditions, by seasonal fieldwork, or by the requirements of operational training? In fact, the need to examine the question of adopting limitation measures has become even more urgent.

But the NATO states will not seek compromise solutions. The obstructionist position of the United States and its closest bloc allies is inhibiting the elaboration of mutually acceptable accords. This is the crux of the difficulties in Stockholm.

Limitation measures certainly must be adopted. Life itself demands it. And states are putting forward these measures not out of weakness, but out of an awareness of their lofty responsibility for European security, a desire to stabilize the situation and reduce the dangerous confrontation in Europe.

One must not play at politics in the nuclear age, M.S. Gorbachev stressed at the meeting with the working people of Tolyatti. The USSR is expecting politicians and parties, including those in the NATO countries, to recognize the new realities. And the realities are such that the limitation of the scale of military activity is an imperative demand of the times.

FORMER RADIO LIBERTY EMPLOYEE HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

Comments on 20-Year 'Nightmare'

LD281628 Moscow TASS in English 1121 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- Oleg Tumanov, former acting editor-in-chief of the Russian service of Radio "Liberty" [RL], spoke at a press conference at the Press Center of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R. today. He told newsmen how after defecting to the West more than 20 years ago he had found himself in an anti-Soviet trap set up by the military intelligence service and the Central Intelligence Agency of the United States. U.S. intelligence officials arranged his employment with Radio "Liberty" where he started at the very bottom and worked his way up to an editor of the news desk of the Radio "Liberty"'s Russian service, chief of the news desk, and chief of the current affairs desk. Finally, in recent time he was performing the duties of editor-in-chief of the Radio "Liberty"'s Russian service.

Oleg Tumanov emphasised in his statement that "the RL/RFE [Radio Free Europe] are a branch of U.S. secret services, a convenient front for covert operations against the USSR and other socialist countries. The visible tip of the iceberg are the so-called propaganda activities aiming to implant such ideas in the minds of Soviet people as would serve the secret services' ends".

"The invisible activities, which are pursued by the radio station and its individual services and which remain unknown to the audiences at large, are purely in the nature of intelligence. This, incidentally, is not a secret to the West German Government. In its time the Social Democratic Government told the Americans to remove the radio stations from West German territory but afterwards no more such demands have been made. There are obviously several explanations for this and one is cooperation between the U.S. and West German intelligence services".

"Over my twenty years of work at the radio station I have seen many documents, attended the conferences of its senior officials and personally talked to representatives of U.S. secret services and can say confidently that the radio service's executive staff has invariably included U.S. intelligence officers. Let us look at how things stand today. RL director Nikolay Prokofiyevich Vaslev is a staff member of U.S. military intelligence and his assistant Nikolay Petroff is a C.I.A. staffer. These are just some of the names in the Russian service. The list can be continued."

"But I will name a whole department which works directly under the C.I.A.'s control. The address is 193 Saint-Germain Boulevard, Paris. Located there is the so-called audience research department. It is headed by C.I.A. officer Gene Parta. Similar offices in Vienna, Rome, Copenhagen, Duesseldorf, Hamburg, Salzburg and elsewhere also report to him. The department and its affiliates gather and process information on issues of interest to the C.I.A. and the defense intelligence agency and approach Soviet citizens on visits abroad with the aim of cultivating possibly and recruiting them".

"All these are in fact the C.I.A.'s foreign outposts", Oleg Tumanov said. "I do not know whether, say, the government of neutral Austria is aware of this".

"It is for more than twenty years that I lived in the West", he said. "For most of that time I worked on Radio Liberty. I lived through both the periods of tension and the periods of detente."

"But the RL's role and tasks have never changed under any circumstances. In any international weather, Radio Liberty has remained a mouthpiece of the warlike group of politicians to whom peaceful cooperation with the USSR and peaceful co-existence are more frightening than the aspen stake."

"The radio service has always been hostile to the Soviet system and especially now. It unswervingly follows the policy line which the U.S. Government has adopted of late towards the USSR. It is a policy of sharply aggravating relations between the two countries, a policy of ignoring any peace initiative coming from the Soviet leadership, a policy of heightening international tension."

"My road back home has been tortuous", Oleg Tumanov said in conclusion. "I wouldn't wish anybody to experience this kind of 20-year-long road. I am now at home and it would seem the easiest thing to say that everything I have lived through has been a nightmare dream. No, a dream it hasn't been. Everything I told you here has been a reality, a nightmarish reality. Only perhaps it is not everybody that can see this reality objectively. I could and so the road back to my homeland was for me the natural and logical one. At a difficult time, and the world is going through a difficult time now, every honest person should be with his own people. This is why I am here."

Scores 'Intelligence' Activities

[USSR Foreign Ministry news conference at the Press Center on 28 April with statement by Oleg Tumanov followed by questions and answers; recorded -- from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Tumanov] Esteemed comrades, ladies and gentlemen. It seems that I should begin by explaining why I am here at the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Center today, and not in my office at 67 [?Fockingestresse] in Munich, where the headquarters of RL and RFE are located. In November, at the end of November 1965, seaman Oleg Tumanov, born in Moscow in 1944, disappeared from a Soviet warship while it was sailing in the Mediterranean. For some time, this was probably considered an accident, but in fact it was a case of defection. At that time, the U.S. and British intelligence services were pretty quick in working on me, and as early as December 1965, a U.S. Air Force aircraft delivered me to Frankfurt-on-Main in West Germany.

I can foresee questions that will probably arise here: What was it that prompted me to run away from a Soviet warship, and why did I betray my homeland? It is difficult for me to answer this question, and I have been asked it dozens of times. If I tell you that I was about 20 years old at the time, that I wanted to take my destiny into my own hands, that there was perhaps a bit of selfishness in the act and a failure to realize the future consequences of such an action -- all of this played a part. It is not as though I was having a difficult time on the ship. My period of service was coming to an end. My mother, father, and brother were waiting for me in Moscow. So I repeat, yet again that it is most extremely difficult for me to answer the question on my reasons for running away. Well, as I said, I was hoping to take my destiny into my own hands.

Unfortunately, nothing went the way I expected and I fell into the hands of U.S intelligence. Then, following several conversations and meetings, I was invited to RL in Munich.

This was in 1966. At that time, the staff office at RL consisted mainly of former White Guards and Vlasovites, people who switched sides during the war. It was clear that with a crew like that -- and the CIA knew that perfectly well -- one could not go very far. And so in 1966, the search was stepped up for, so to speak, new blood. I had no special training, no experience whatsoever in radio work, yet all the same I was, as it were, offered a job.

Now I would like to say a few words about what RL is. At one time Senator Fulbright said -- and he was thinking of RFE too -- that these two radio stations are a relic of the Cold War, from the times of the Cold War. It is possible the senator was hoping the international climate would warm up and, in that case, these relics would probably disappear of their own accord. But as you see, both radio stations still exist magnificantly and are magnificently alive.

Both radio stations are effecively subsidiaries of the U.S. special services, a convenient front for conducting various manners of covert operations against the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. The visible tip of the iceberg, that is, the purely propaganda activities, is a very, very small part, because the main activity is, so to speak, directed towards extolling in the consciousness of Soviet citizens the ideas that suit the special services, that is the first point. Then there is the pure intelligence activities, that is, activities of an intelligence nature.

[Announcer] Then those participating in the news conference answered questions from journalists. Here Professor Ushakov, department head in the Institute of State and Law at the USSR Academy of Science, answers the question: Is the activity of RL in accordance with the norms of international law?

[Ushakov] It is a fact that RL attempts to disinform the Soviet population about the internal events in our country, about Soviet state foreign policy, and international affairs. It is an unbroken stream of lies and slander about the Soviet social and state system, about Soviet legality, Soviet socialist democracy [word indistinct] national differences between the peoples of the Soviet Union.

Of course, such hostile, slanderous, and subversive propaganda is utterly incompatible with international law. It is completely against the law. This arises first of all from the basic principles of international law, stated and fixed in the UN Charter, according to which, as the declaration of 1970 says -- and I quote -- No state, or group of states, has the right to interfere, directly or indirectly, for any reason at all, in the internal or external affairs of any other state. Here it is necessary to bear in mind that the activity of RL is carried out under the direct control [word indistinct] and observation of the U.S. Congress and the U.S. Administration, and is financed by the state budget. Therefore, the U.S. has direct international responsibility for the activity of this radio station.

[Question] Second Class Captain Nikitin, Observer for KRASNAYA ZVEZDA. You spoke about the links between the radio station and CIA. Are there such links with the Pentagon and what is their nature?

[Tumanov] The fact is that different services, special services, of the United States, both the CIA and military intelligence, make wide use of the research materials, let's say, at the centers of the two radio stations. They are also involved in research in the military field. People who leave the Soviet Union normally undergo debriefing by military intelligence and by the CIA. They collect material... [corrects himself] this material is collected, and returns in part to the radio station in a summarized form, and in full form -- I say that it often also contains military information, so to say -- that goes both to the Pentagon and to Langley.

It is well known that in cases, let us say of some military action, both radio stations pass under the jurisdiction of the Pentagon, since they both have a staff of translators, and all sorts of other data, which is essential for psychological and propaganda warfare.

[Announcer] The participants in the news conference answered other questions from journalists.

Further Report

LD281844 Moscow TASS in English 1820 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- Oleg Tumanov, former acting editor-in-chief of the Russian-language service of Radio Liberty told a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists today that he had returned home of his own free will, that he "had not been an agent of the State Security Committee" of the USSR and "had not been kidnapped by agents of the State Security Committee."

Tumanov described Radio Liberty's links with the U.S. intelligence community which was shaping the radio programmes beamed at the Soviet Union.

He disclosed that, according to instructions Radio Liberty was receiving from Washington, any action by the Soviet Union, directed at lessening international tension, was to be described in broadcasting by Radio Liberty and Free Europe as propaganda that had nothing to do with the USSR's real policy.

That remained the main trend today, he pointed out.

On Radio Liberty's ties with international, regional and national Zionist and other reactionary organizations, Tumanov said that they were exerting considerable pressure on the shaping of programmes intended for the Soviet Union.

The Radio Liberty Russian service was maintaining through its correspondents and staff in Munich close contacts with various anti-Soviet organizations in the West, such as the Popular Labour Union which actively cooperated with the Nazis during the Second World War.

On allocations for Radio Liberty, Tumanov said that, judging by the U.S. Congress' and President's attitude to it, "There are no particular difficulties in allocating funds for the radio station."

Tumanov said that various services and military intelligence of the United States extensively used materials provided by the special research centres of Radio Liberty and Free Europe.

These centres were also engaged in research in the military sphere. Their offices were operating, for instance, in Paris and Salzburg. Information, obtained from these centres, was processed and checked by military intelligence and the CIA and then returned, in part, to the radio stations for transmission, and, in a bigger volume, to the Pentagon.

It was stressed at the press conference that several Western countries, above all the United States were conducting subversive activity against the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, using radio propaganda for this purpose as well.

The American-run Radio Liberty and Free Europe stations, operating from West German territory, were the most odious of the Western radio stations that were grossly interfering in the USSR's internal affairs.

The activity and programmes of these stations were poisoning the international atmosphere, and were directed against mutual understanding and cooperation between peoples.

COMMENTARY ON UPCOMMING TOKYO SUMMIT

U.S. Manipulated Dollar

LD252322 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1645 GMT 25 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program, presented by Vitaliy Sobolev]

[Text] The meeting of the seven, as they are called, in Tokyo, plans to examine many problems. The U.S. AP press agency notes that these are basically the same problems that were examined at the preceding meeting. To this day, the problems have not changed, including trade wars of various kinds between the three centers of the capitalist world: the United States, Western Europe, and Japan. Japan is trading with more success than its partners. The clash of economic interests of all these industrialized capitalist countries in the developing world is also causing contradictions.

Here is yet another example of such contradictions: According to Western news agencies' reports from the Japanese capital, the Tokyo stock exchange is gripped by fever, which has acquired almost historical character. It has been brought about by the unusually sharp reduction in the exchange rate of the U.S. dollar. It has fallen to the lowest level in the post-war period. What has caused it? What is behind such highly unusual phenomenon? My colleague, Boris Andrianov, will speak about it.

The financial panic at the Tokyo stock exchange has been intentionally created by the local branches of U.S. banks. Simultaneously they started to throw on the currency market huge dollar consignments, exceeding many times their demand. As a result, the U.S. currency has swiftly become underpriced. Such a purely financial machination has led to the fact that the exchange rate of Japanese yen in relation to the U.S. dollar has grown automatically. This is precisely what Washington was striving for.

I will certify such a conclusion with a concrete example. President Reagan this week gave an interview to news agency correspondents. In particular they asked the White House master how he assesses the change in the exchange rate of the Japanese yen and the U.S. dollar. In reply, the U.S. President said with unconcealed satisfaction that he approves the present changes in the currency system of the capitalist countries. He added that the changes that occurred are fully justified, because Japan, in his words, has had an advantage in its trade relations with the United States. Incidentally, I will recall that the United States trade deficit with Japan grew last year to almost $50 billion. The Washington administration has decided to improve its affairs in this region by inflicting a powerful financial blow to its Far Eastern partner and competitor. After all, the increase in the yen exchange rate in relation to the dollar leads inevitably to the artificial inflation of prices of Japanese products on the world markets, including the U.S. domestic market.

It is easy to understand that in such a situation the Japanese goods' ability to compete will drop sharply and this means also their sale beyond the borders of the Land of the Rising Sun.

Washington, with full care, has inflicted its financial blow on Japan several days before the meeting of the heads of states and governments of the seven largest capitalist countries, to be held in Tokyo on 4-6 May. According to the statement of the chairman of the board of directors of the U.S. Chrysler Corporation, we can now talk with the Japanese from a position of strength. In Washington, they now no longer consider it necessary to conceal the fact that at the meeting in Tokyo the United States intends to exert the gravest pressure upon its partners from the industrially developed countries. President Reagan himself has declared plainly that he will insist that the seven partners open their markets to U.S. products. In the opposite case, Reagan threatened that protectionist measures related to their exports to the United States will be strengthened.

In a word, the Americans have made up their mind to fatten up their economy at the expense of Japan and Western Europe, which are constricting the United States on world markets. Will Washington be successful in this plan? It is hardly possible to bring full light on this issue. It is clear that mutual relations between the three basic centers of today's imperialism are full of obvious and hidden contradictions and a concord of the positions of this not-at-all "holy trinity" is more and more proving to be a consequence of U.S. pressure or open diktat in the intest of, above all, the United States itself. However, it naturally leads not to the overcoming, but to sharpening of the inter-imperialist contradictions, in which new explosions of confrontation of new forms and directions are inevitable.

Atlantic 'Solidarity' Hit

LD282059 Moscow TASS in English 2026 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- By TASS News Analyst Valentin Vasilets

What is more important -- Atlantic solidarity or respect for generally recognized norms of international law?

It seems that the United States' Western European allies are now confronted with the dilemma following Washington's terrorist action against Libya and its threats to act likewise in the future.

The U.S. is exerting ever greater pressure on its partners, demanding obedience. The pressure is mounting as the date of the Tokyo summit of seven major capitalist countries is approaching.

In Tokyo, President Ronald Reagan will try and compel the other summiters to agree to joint sanctions against Libya, described as "centre of international terrorism," and against other countries should the American Administration classify them as similar "centres."

It is clear that Britain's Conservative government does not have the problem. Its credo is as follows: What is good for Washington, is good for London.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, in her recent radio interview with the British Broadcasting Corp., promised to side with President Reagan in Tokyo in the struggle for approval of a comprehensive package of measures against international terrorism.

She did not rule out support for possible American strikes against the capitals of other nations, for instance, Damascus and Tehran.

Many Western European members of the NATO bloc hope that they appeased their leader by adopting a number of sanctions against Libya at the latest foreign ministers' meeting.

They won condescending approval from Vice-President George Bush who called the sanctions inspiring. But he, as well as President Reagan made it clear that they viewed them only as a beginning.

No matter what rhetoric they resort to in Western Europe, those who are prepared to follow unquestioningly the United States, will not evade responbility for complicity in at least three disgraceful acts.

Firstly, they are taking part in the campaign of shameless lies fed by the American Administration to its people and international public and to its NATO allies.

Although Washington has been stepping up an anti-Libyan campaign for several years, it has not as yet provided any evidence on Tripoli's involvement in preparing terrorist acts.

Secondly, they will join the dangerous policy of state-sponsored terrorism pursued by the American Administration. It is clear to all now that the murder of Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, was one of the chief objectives of the bombing runs against Tripoli.

Members of his family, dozens of civilians were killed and wounded. Is it not terrorism?

According to THE NEW YORK TIMES, administration officials said in Washington that President Reagan at least twice authorised secret operations with a view to organizing a coup against the Al-Qadhdhafi regime.

That is why when U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said in his latest interview in THE LOS ANGELES TIMES that the United States should think of conducting covert actions in order to weaken the Al-Qadhdhafi regime, he was, putting in mildly, playing the hypocrite. They had thought of that previously, and more than once.

Thirdly, in backing the U.S. acts, the allies abet it in violating international law. The majority of U.N. member states are convinced in the total lawlessness of such acts. This is evidenced by the debate at the U.N. Security Council conducted at the initiative of the non-aligned countries.

By imposing their unwarranted sanctions against Libyan diplomatic missions, the Western European countries are in fact encouraging the course towards undermining interstate relations. It is naive to think that this will not affect their ties with other countries, above all, developing ones.

Atlantic solidarity is something one has to pay dearly, by forgoing both moral and legal norms.

Anti-Libya Sanctions Sought

LD281457 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0230 GMT 28 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Georgiy Alekseyev]

[Text] High-ranking representatives of the U.S. Administration are continuing to whip up an anti-Libyan campaign. By the way, the reaction of the international community to the recent U.S. bombing of Libyan towns also aroused the extreme annoyance of Washington. By merely making use of its veto power the United States avoided the adoption of the appropriate resolution in the UN Security Council condemning this bandit act.

President Reagan has again unleashed attacks on the Libyan leadership. He made a speech to employees of the Hickam air base on the Hawaiian Islands, where he made a stopover on the way to Indonesia and Japan.

Reagan nakedly [ogol'no] accused the Libyan Government of state terrorism,and stressed that Libyans had better be prepared for the consequences of such a policy their country is allegedly conducting. Observers have assessed this as an intention to repeat the barbaric act which led to the deaths of many completely innocent people.

In the next few days, the White House boss will be meeting with foreign ministers of ASEAN member-countries on the island of Bali, and it is highly probable that he will try to impose this point of view on the issue of fighting state terrorism as well. As for the meeting of the leaders of seven major capitalist states in Tokyo, where President Reagan is heading for himself, the President intends to seek from his partners the adoption of joint economic and political sanctions against Libya, as Secretary of State Shultz has said.

Western Contradictions Criticized

LD281636 Moscow TASS in English 1557 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- TASS News Analyst Ivan Ablamov writes:

Preparation for the Tokyo summit conference of the seven major capitalist countries has been completed in the main. It is already apparent that the conference will be marked by the further aggravation of contradictions among the USA, West European countries and Japan. The United States would like to avoid in Tokyo the discussion of its egoistic economic policy, particularly of the problem of huge U.S. budgetary deficits that stem from the arms race and that are covered by attracting foreign capital to the USA which adversely affects the economy of the United States allies.

This is why it is now said in Washington that the United States is "in a very good form" on the eve of the Tokyo meeting. This awkward maneouvre, however, was exposed the other day by none other than former director of the Office of Management and Budget in the Reagan administration David Stockman. He said that serious economic and financial difficulties had befallen the USA, that the national debt rose by one trillion dollars within five years, that the foreign trade deficit reached the unprecedentedly high level and that there is a difficult situation in agriculture. The growth of industrial output in the past five years was insignificant and the United States economic position, in perspective, is precarious.

The United States would like to overcome its difficulties at the expense of the allies, through further manipulations with bank rates, that draw capital to the United States, by aggravating foreign trade expansion. And this, undoubtedly, will be manifested in Tokyo. On the eve of the conference, Washington "pounded the table", making it plain that it intends to speak in Tokyo from the positions of strength. From May 1, before the very conference, the United States intends to impose curbs on the import from West European countries. The United States demands that a number of provisions of the treaty on the entry of Spain and Portugal into the Common Market, the provisions that do not suit Washington, be revised. Washington decided to resort to crude pressure to widen the access of its farm produce to West European markets.

The United States is annoyed at the stiffening of competition from Western Europe and Japan in aerospace, electronic and automobile industries.

The economic, financial and technological superiority over rivals that the United States had till late sixties is now seriously challenged. And Washington intends to employ the tactic of arm-twisting at the negotiating table in an effort to regain if only some of the positions lost in competition. For this purpose the United States openly makes threats of using protectionism against allies, though it pays lip service to adherence to free trade.

No less acute are the contradictions in the financial sphere which is shown by the advance of the dollar on the Japanese yen which leads to bankruptcies of medium and small enterprises in Japan. Contradictions in the financial sphere are also shown by perpetual monetary fever in Western Europe.

Under the pretext of community of interests, the United States intends to seek accord in Tokyo. But according to Washington's tradition this will be done by means of pressure and diktat, with reliance on the U.S. economic might which cannot but cause counteraction of the United States allies.

U.S. DENIES VISAS TO SOVIET AUTO WORKERS GROUP

LD281345 Moscow TASS in English 1306 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- The U.S. Department of State has denied entry visas to a tourist group of Soviet automobile workers which was going to make a two-week trip over American cities.

A TASS correspondent has been told at the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions that the stand of the U.S. authorities showed that they did not favour the development of contacts between the working people of the two countries. The stay of the group in the U.S. would coincide with the centenary of the holiday of working people's solidarity.

Nikolay Sudarikov, a fitter from a Moscow plant and a member of the group, said: "I am astonished at our group being denied a visa. The U.S. talks so often about its democracy. However, in reality the U.S. authorities impede contacts between representatives of the two countries. We, Soviet workers, would like to have a closer look at the life of our colleagues, American automobile makers".

The TASS correspondent was also told at the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions that American trade union delegations often visited the USSR. At the same time, U.S. authorities on many occasions deny visas to Soviet trade union delegations. There are no trade union functionaries in the tourist group, only factory and office workers from Soviet automobile-making plants.

State Department Denounced

LD281928 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Ruling circles of the United States have again demonstrated their reluctance to promote an expansion of Soviet-U.S. ties. This was discussed at a press conference today in Moscow. The refusal by the U.S. State Department to issue entry visas to members of a Soviet tourist group comprised of representatives of the Soviet automobile industry, is eloquent testimony to this.

Referring to the law on national security, the U.S. authorities are exercising genuine arbitrariness over the question of granting entry documents.

Their refusal to issue visas for political reasons long ago became their norm and served their cause this time also. It is significant that the trip by the Soviet tourists was planned on the eve of the May Day jubilee. Over the span of 2 weeks, the tourists were to visit five American cities, including Chicago, where the first May Day meeting, as is known, took place exactly 100 years ago. The itinerary also included meetings with workers from a number of U.S. automobile factories. Perhaps it is precisely in these facts that it is necessary to seek the reason for the stubborn reluctance of certain U.S. circles to promote the strengthening of mutual trust between the Soviet and American people.

U.S. 'ENTERPRISE' HEADING FOR MEDITERRANEAN

LD290856 Moscow World Service in English 0700 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Again threatening Libya, the United States is escalating its military might in the Mediterranean where, according to reports from Washington, the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Enterprise and escort ships are on their way. The vessels are to join the 6th Fleet, led by two other aircraft carriers, America and Coral Sea, which took part in the attack against Libya.

TASS CITES PRAVDA RESPONSE TO U.S. ON PDRY EVENTS

LD261039 Moscow TASS in English 0855 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 26 TASS -- The newspaper PRAVDA under the headline "Slanderers at Work" today carries a signed article on a campaign of lies and slander, being kindled in the United States, against the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. All sorts of insinuations are splashed, one by one, on the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen from the Washington "corridors of power." Judging by their content, just as in Libya's case, the United Shates does not like that that country conducts an anti-imperialist course and, naturally, rests on cooperation with the Soviet Union.

During his recent tour of a number of Arabian Peninsula countries, U.S. Vice-President George Bush said that allegedly the Aden regime does not respect the rights and territorial integrity of its neighbors. This is nothing but a gross lie, PRAVDA notes in that connection. It is well known, and in the Arabian Peninsula better than anywhere else, that in its regional policy Democratic Yemen proceeds from the principles of peaceful coexistence and goodneighborliness.

Such pronouncements are part of the U.S. provocative actions aimed at impairing confidence in states which opted for a progressive path of development, at isolating them, at creating domestic difficulties for them, along with external ones, and, in the final account, at undermining the ruling regimes. This is directly evinced by one more pronouncement of George Bush, who declared that they in Washington feel concern over the very possibility of existence of such a regime in South Yemen (that is unsuitable to the USA).

In their fabrications, PRAVDA writes, Washington slanderers went as far as asserting that allegedly Soviet servicemen participated in armed clashes which took place in the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen in January. This is nothing but poor intrigues, provocative efforts which are blatantly obvious. In conclusion PRAVDA writes: A wise Arab proverb says: "Instead of saying lies about others, better listen to the truth about oneself". And this truth is that it is exactly the United Shates which is entangling the Middle Eastern region with a network of military bases. It is not mythical Soviet pilots "acted" in South Yemen, but quite real American pilots bombed Libya, killing women and children." [single quotation mark as received]

OKINAWA PEACE RALLY APPEALS FOR NUCLEAR-FREE PACIFIC

LD290430 Moscow TASS in English 1639 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Naha (Okinawa) April 28 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Anichkin reports: The main task of all peace forces standing out for liquidating nuclear weapons and warding off the threat of a nuclear war is to set up a united international front of anti-nuclear solidarity, said today participants in a mass rally held in Naha, Okinawa Administrative Centre. It was attended by delegates of an international conference of anti-war organizations of the Asian and Pacific region, being held here, thousands of Japanese peace advocates and island residents. The appeal of the rally underlines the top priority of the struggle for banning and liquidating completely weapons of mass destruction and for preventing a nuclear war. Rally participants highly assessed the programme for the complete destruction of nuclear weapons put forth in the statement by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

Speakers at the meeting denounced the policy of fanning up tension in the Pacific area pursued by the Washington administration. They demanded an end to nuclear tests in this region and a dismantling of military bases in Japan, the Philippines and other Pacific countries. The turning of the Pacific into a nuclear-free peace zone is an inseparable part of the world-wide struggle for removing the nuclear threat, rally participants underlined.

The Okinawa appeal expresses a resolute demand to abrogate the Japanese-U.S. security treaty and the agreement granting the right to the Pentagon to commandeer at its discretion the best tracks of land on Okinawa for U.S. military facilities.

After the rally its participants held a peace march in the area of the U.S. military bases.

JAPANESE BUSINESSMEN CITED ON TIES WITH USSR

PM241401 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 19 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[S. Tikhomirov report: "The Dictates of the Times"]

[Text] The 10th joint session of the Soviet-Japanese and Japanese-Soviet Committees for Economic Cooperation which was held in the Moscow International Trade Center has ended.

The immediate future will show what specific results this meeting -- the biggest meeting of recent years in which some 400 representatives of interested Soviet organizations and Japanese business circles took part -- will bring, but even now many of its participants assess the conference's work as positive. And this is very significant since the businessmen who came from Tokyo included representatives of such leading Japanese firms and companies as Mitsubishi, Kawasaki, Mitsui, Marubeni, Hitachi, Kobe Steel, and others.

"We regard the present meeting as an important strategic stage in the development of bilateral trade and economic relations in the light of the impressive targets which the 27th CPSU Congress has set the Soviet people," R. Kawai, president of the Komatsu company and head of the Japanese delegation at the conference said in an interview for PRAVDA. "During the conference we sought new forms of cooperation to match the scale of these impressive tasks. I would like to note in particular that the present level of trade and economic relations between Japan and the Soviet Union -- two major industrial powers and close neighbors to boot -- can satisfy neither us, nor, I am sure, our Soviet partners."

"This is why we are pleased that the Moscow conference marks a new start in our relations. It has shown that opportunities for the development of cooperation exist. I hope" R. Kawai said in conclusion, "that the results of our work in Moscow will give an impetus not only to the expansion and deepening of our mutual economic relations but will have a positive impact on the whole range of Soviet-Japanese relations."

And here is the view of Y. Mimula, president of Mitsubishi, one of the biggest Japanese firms:

"I note with satisfaction that the change of political climate in Soviet-Japanese relations is having a favorable effect on bilateral economic relations. This atmosphere considerably facilitates the work for us, businessmen. And we are ready for active cooperation with the Soviet Union. The fact that a change for the better has already taken place is borne out by the very course of the present conference. Incidentally, I am planning to stay on in Moscow to attend to specific business on behalf of my firm."

...By the time the rooster on the tower clock of the International Trade Center on Krasnopresnenskaya Embankment announced the session's last afternoon break, the clocks in Tokyo had "run on" 6 hours ahead. Indeed, time is inexorable. And even today it dictates the need to make changes for the better in many spheres of international life, including in trade and economic cooperation between the Soviet Union and Japan.

OFFICIAL STATES PYONGYANG'S POSITION ON OLYMPICS

LD231433 Moscow TASS in English 1400 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] Pyongyang, April 23 TASS -- Vice-premier of the administration council of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (D.P.R.K.) Chong Chun-ki urged the governments and people of peaceful countries to support the proposal of the D.P.R.K. on the holding of the 1988 summer Olympics by the North and South of Korea.

His statement issued here today denounced the intention of the United States and South Korean authorities to intensify military preparations in the south of the Korean peninsula under the pretext of the mythical "threat of aggression from the North against the South" and under the pretext of "ensuring the security" of the games.

The statement criticized attempts of U.S. imperialism to use the forthcoming Olympics to consolidate the partition of Korea and suppress the struggle of South Koreans for democracy.

Our initiative, the statement said, aims both for ensuring the normal holding of the Olympics and creating favorable conditions for achieving peace in Korea and for its peaceful reunification. We respect the Olympic Charter and will make every effort to ensure the joint organization of the 24th Olympic Games in compliance with the lofty ideals of the Olympic movement.

SOVIET OFFICIAL DISCUSSES USSR-DPRK ECONOMIC TIES

SK140932 Moscow International Service in Korean 1130 GMT 13 Apr 86

[Text] Some time ago, the 20th meeting of the negotiations committee of the Governments of the Soviet Union and Korea on economic, scientific and technological issues was held in Pyongyang.

A reporter of this radio station met with Comrade (Turushin), responsible secretary of the Soviet side of this committee, and requested that he talk about the work of the committee. Through the microphones of this radio station, he said the following:

[Begin recording in Russian, fading into Korean translation] Dear Korean friends: I wish, first of all, to point out the active development of relations in all domains between the Soviet Union and Korea.

I rejoice over the fact that the comprehensive fraternal relations between the peoples of the Soviet Union and the DPRK have been expanded and deepened after the visit to the Soviet Union by the DPRK party and government delegation headed by Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers Party of Korea (WPK) Central Committee and president of the DPRK, in May 1984 and the regular meetings between the leaders of our parties and governments held in Moscow and Pyongyang.

The Soviet and Korean people continue to maintain friendly and cooperative relations. The congratulatory message of the WPK Central Committee sent to the 27th CPSU Congress pointed out that the strengthening of friendship and unity between the parties and peoples of Korea and the Soviet Union entirely corresponds not only to the revolutionary cause of the two countries but also to the common cause of socialism and global peace.

The visit to the Soviet Union by Comrade Kang Song-san, premier of the DPRK State Administration Council, in December 1985, was an epochal occasion for cooperative relations in the economic field. During the talks, a treaty between the two governments was concluded. In these talks, the heads of the governments stressed that the existing potentials and reserves should be utilized fully and reasonably in order to expand the trade and scientific and technological relations on the basis of mutual benefits and equality.

The treaty on economic and technological cooperation signed last November stipulates the assistance to be extended to the DPRK for building many new plants and the offering of loans for the (?continuous operation) of the plants.

The economic development plan of the DPRK gives priority to development of electric power which is essential to all domains of the national economy. Thus, the atomic power plant is a top-priority project among the objects of USSR-Korea cooperation. For this plant, four Soviet generating systems [palchon Kyetong] with a 440,000-kilowatt capacity will be delivered.

The essential tasks of (?designating) the construction site and carrying out the design and survey work have already begun. An agreement was made on cooperating in the construction of another power plant in Tongpyongyang, a fireproof products plant [naehwa chepum kongjang], two textile plants, two broadcasting stations, and other plants.

Our country will give assistance in increasing the capacity of the Kim Chaek iron works, one of the Republic's important metallurgical enterprises, from an annual output of 1 million tons to an annual output of 2.4 million tons, and in increasing the annual coal production in a mine near Anju to 5 million tons.

Construction of a bearings plant will begin in the near future. This plant will be designed to produce 10 million bearings of various types. Soviet organizations will also offer help to the DPRK in implementing the research work for a comprehensive earthquake and gravity survey of the continental shelf of the DPRK.

Some time ago, a treaty on the exchange and payment of commodities for 1986 to 1990 was signed between the Soviet and Korean Governments in Moscow. In accordance with this treaty, the volume of USSR-Korea trade will be drastically increased during the current 5-year economic plan period.

The kinds of commodities delivered through (?maritime) transport will also be increased.

Our country is still an important trading partner of the DPRK. The commodities delivered by the Soviet Union are of particular significance to the DPRK Government.

The Soviet Union will export crude oil and coking coal to the DPRK in accordance with the demand of the DPRK Government. It will also deliver various machines and facilities, as well as other commodities.

On the other hand, Korea is exporting magnesia clinker, ferrous and non-ferrous metals, automobile batteries, consumer goods, and fruits and vegetables that we require.

The form of commodity exchanges between the two countries has been further developed in recent years. In other words, Soviet firms send cotton, (?cotton thread), and fabric to the DPRK, and the DPRK exports clothing products as finished items after processing the material.

On the basis of Soviet technology and culture, Korea's industry is expected to cooperate, for the first time, in the production of a series of ships, maritime transport means, cargo trucks, parts of certain facilities, and machine tools and other machinery products that will be delivered to the Soviet Union. Technological assistance will be given to Korean organizations in producing these items.

Gigantic and responsible tasks have been put before relevant Soviet and Korean organizations that will take all necessary actions to promptly and correctly implement the agreements reached in the domain of trade and economic cooperation during the new 5-year economic plan period and to fulfill the agreements and contracts that have been concluded.

The 20th meeting of the negotiations committee of the Soviet and Korean Governments on economic and scientific and technological issues held in Pyongyang in late March discussed the issue of resolving these tasks. The committee pointed out that since the 19th meeting, Soviet and Korean organizations successfully carried out the work of implementing the decisions.

The No. 2 and No. 3 generating systems in the Chongjin thermal power plant and the No. 16 generating system in the Pukchang thermal power plant began operation. This enabled the plants to launch full-scale operations.

In the joint meeting, the issue of amending the implementation of the obligations of both sides with regard to trade, economic, scientific, and technological cooperation, and the issue concerning the prospects of development for the period 1986 to 1990 were discussed.

Concrete measures for realizing the agreements contained in new long-range treaties were also discussed. The committee directed great attention to the future development of science and technology between the two countries.

The work of strengthening these agreements into a more perfect form will continue. The task of broadly carrying out joint research work in a series of scientific and technological sectors in order to solve the problems arising in the national economies of the Soviet Union and the DPRK was put forth. For example, the issue of cooperating in the domains of meteorology, protection of the natural environment, and promotion of the quality of economic guidance functions will be studied. [end recording]

Comrade (Turushin) said that the recent meeting was held amid an atmosphere of friendship between the working-level personages. The meeting adopted decisions concerning the issues discussed and agreed upon. Both sides expressed the firm belief that the 20th meeting will contribute to further developing and perfecting the trade, economic, and scientific and technological relations between the two countries.

USSR BACKS DPRK'S PEACE INITIATIVES IN FAR EAST

[V. Vinogradov article: "Important Factor of Peace"]

[Text] The DPRK working people have achieved striking successes over the years of people's power. From being a once backward, downtrodden "backwater of the world," the country has been turned into a developed agrarian-industrial state. These successes are a thorn in the side of enemies of the Korean people. For 40 years now the South Korean authorities and their bosses across the ocean have been trying to solve in their favor the "Korean question" which they themselves created, not stopping at the use of force.

The situation whereby a single people and single country are divided into North and South has continued for 4 decades. The responsibility for this lies entirely with Seoul and Washington. They give a hostile reception to any initiative aimed at normalizing the situation on the Korean peninsula.

It should be pointed out that the U.S. Administration's entire policy in the Asian and Pacific region is aimed at fueling tension and aggravating confrontation. Washington allocates a role of considerable importance to the Korean peninsula in this sinister strategy. It has turned it into its forward bridgehead by deploying in South Korea a more than 40,000-strong occupation corps equipped with both conventional and nuclear weapons. The Pentagon regularly carries out in South Korea such large-scale militarist provocations as the "Team Spirit" maneuvers. Suffice it to say that more than 200,000 American and South Korean servicemen and a large amount of combat hardware were mobilized in the last games, which have just ended.

Under these conditions the DPRK's stand is an important factor for preserving peace in the Far East. The DPRK has advanced a number of important initiatives. It has made a proposal to sign a peace treaty with South Korea to replace the existing armistice agreement, to adopt a declaration of nonaggression between North and South, for a mutual reduction of armed forces and to turn the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone.

And at the beginning of this year Pyongyang adopted a decision to to hold large-scale maneuvers after 1 February and no exercises at all during North-South talks.

All these DPRK proposals are consonant with the Soviet Union's policy. As the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress pointed out, the significance of the Asian and Pacific salient is increasing. There are many tangled knots of contradictions in that vast region, and the political situation is also unstable in individual places. It is necessary to seek solutions and ways here, and to do so without delay. It is evidently necessary to start by coordinating and then pooling efforts in the interests of a political settlement of urgent problems in order, and at the same time, on this basis to at least reduce the acuteness of military confrontation in various parts of Asia and to stabilize the situation there.

The Soviet Union consistently gives the Korean people all possible support in defending their right to independently decide their destiny and helps to strengthen foreign policy positions. Emphasizing the USSR's noble role, Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers Party of Korea Central Committee, said: "In the past the Soviet people paid the price of blood to help our people in their struggle for the motherland's rebirth and gave us moral support and material assistance during the years of the fatherland liberation war and during the difficult period of postwar restoration and construction. Today, too, they are giving our people active support and assistance in their struggle to build socialism and for the motherland's independent peaceful reunification. Our people always remember this and are grateful for it."

People's Korea is traveling a course of peace and creation.

DRA CELEBRATES 8TH ANNIVERSARY OF APRIL REVOLUTION

Karmal Interviewed on Party Tasks

LD271627 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Interview with Babrak Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, by unidentified correspondent; date and place not given]

[Text] The Afghan people are today marking the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution. Taking part in our program is Babrak Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council.

[Begin Karmal recording in Dari, fading into Russian translation] The April Revolution, which achieved victory 8 years ago, was a great event in the country's history. It rested on the will and aspirations of the broadest masses of the people. The revolution smashed the decayed system of oppression and exploitation, and opened up new horizons for the people. The party's general line is now to broaden the social base of the April Revolution. This question was discussed in detail at the last PDPA Central Committee Plenum. The main task is to bring non-party members into government and state bodies. They can be workers, peasants, representatives of the clergy, or even small traders. For instance, there are 79 representatives of non-party organizations taking part in the work of the Revolutionary Council, the supreme state body. This significantly strengthens the power of the people.

The Loya Jirga was a major event in the country's political life. Its 1,800 delegates, representing all strata of the population, gave resolute support for the party's domestic and foreign policies. No small amount has been accomplished over the past 8 years. The Afghan people are laying the foundations of a new society. The first 5-year plan in history is being successfully implemented. In agriculture the roots of feudalism have been destroyed, and land and water management reforms are being carried out. For the first time the peasant has become master of his own land. Agricultural cooperatives numbering 520 have been set up and are operating. The revolution has also brought changes to the education system. Throughout the country a mass anti-illiteracy movement is being implemented. Afghanistan is a multinational country so we place great importance on publishing literature in Pashto, Dari, Uzbek, Turkmen, and a number of other languages.

Our successes would be even more impressive if it were not for the intrigues of imperialism, which has unleashed an undeclared war against the Republic. Imperialism allocates billions of dollars for the struggle against the revolution. Even so, whatever sophisticated methods reaction might resort to, it will not succeed in stifling the power of the people. The revolution has the means to defend itself. It has on its side time-tested friends, the socialist countries, and first among them the Soviet Union. [end recording]

Soviet Withdrawal Envisaged

[Excerpts] April 27th is a special occasion in the life of the Afghan people, who on this day 8 years ago toppled the power of the feudals and big landowners.

The Democratic Republic of Afghanistan is building the new life in difficult conditions. Right after the April revolution an armed intervention was launched against the Republic, organized under the guidance of the United States. Gangs of bandits who are enemies of the people and are dispatched into Afghanistan have destroyed more than 2,000 schools, dozens of industrial facilities and hundreds of houses. But the revolutionary process is indomitable.

Here is how the state of affairs in Afghanistan has been described by the country's leader, Babrak Karmal: Despite the war, the first 5-year plan for social and economic development of the Republic has been worked out, says Babrak Karmal. A land and water reform is being carried out; the new political system born by the revolution is operating more and more effectively; elections are well under way to form local bodies of government from among representatives of the people. Equal rights are ensures for all citizens in Afghanistan regardless of social status, nationality, sex, or religion. The government by the people is being daily expanded.

Speaking about the situation involving Afghanistan in view of the undeclared war launched by the forces of imperialism and by reactionaries, Babrak Karmal declared that the situation can be normalized only through political negotiations. The results of the negotiations will mean the solution of the issue, for one, [as heard] of withdrawal from Afghanistan of the limited Soviet Army contingent staying there at a request of the Republic's government to defend the interests of the people, to protect the gains of the April Revolution.

Soviet Leadership Hails Anniversary

[Text] To Comrade Babrak Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, and Comrade Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers:

The CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the USSR Council of Ministers, and all the Soviet people cordially congratulate you, the PDPA Central Committee, the Revolutionary Council and Government of the DRA, and all the friendly Afghan people of the national holiday of the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution.

The years since the victory of the April national democratic revolution have convincingly shown that the Afghan people have chosen the historically correct path of development for themselves. Afghan society is confidently building its life on the principles of social justice, democracy, and progress. The PDPA's course aimed at involving the broad strata of the population in important nationwide tasks and at comprehensively strengthening the country's independence and sovereignty meets the fundamental interests of all Afghan working people.

The Afghan revolution's onward movement is continuing despite the undeclared war unleashed against it by the forces of imperialism and reaction and the continuing armed incursions into DRA territory.

The DRA is consistently pursuing a policy of nonalignment, friendship, and mutually beneficial cooperation with all countries. The DRA Government's constructive course aimed at achieving a political settlement of the Afghan situation so as to ensure a real end to the foreign armed interference in the DRA's internal affairs and reliably guarantee its nonresumption enjoys broad support among progressive and democratic forces.

As the 27th CPSU Congress stressed, the Soviet Union supports Afghanistan's efforts in the cause of defending its sovereignty. Soviet-Afghan cooperation is built on a firm and secure foundation: ties between our countries continue to develop successfully in all areas.

We wish the friendly Afghan people, the PDPA Central Committee, the Revolutionary Council and Government of the DRA, and you, dear comrades, further successes in the matter of achieving the April Revolution's goals.

The CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the USSR Council of Ministers

DRA Responds to Greetings

PM281542 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 27 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; Comrade Andrey Andreyevich Gromyko, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; Comrade Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers: Dear Comrades! The DRA is celebrating the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution, which marked the beginning of the fundamental restructuring of the Afghan people's political and economic life on the principles of social justice and the equality of all nationalities, ethnic groups, and tribes.

On behalf of the PDPA Central Committee, the Revolutionary Council and Government of the DRA, and all the Afghan people we express cordial gratitude and profound appreciation for the warm congratulations and wishes on this date to you and through you to the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the USSR Council of Ministers, and the friendly Soviet people.

The historic 27th CPSU Congress decisions, aimed at accelerating Soviet society's socioeconomic progress and creating the conditions for ensuring peace throughout the world, evoked a broad and positive response among PDPA members and Afghan working people. We rejoice at the Soviet Union's successes and achievements and indissolubly link our own aspirations and hopes for a better future and progress with them.

Our country's people, like all peace-loving forces in the world, received with enthusiasm the program for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction and the concept of an all-embracing international security system approved by the 27th CPSU Congress. The proposal put forward by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on a considerable reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces in Europe is a new manifestation of Soviet peace-loving policy.

The Afghan people are greeting their national holiday in an atmosphere of cohesion around the PDPA, which is confidently pursuing a course aimed at accelerating the fundamental transformations in all spheres of our motherland's life and at broadening the social base of the revolution -- a course which meets with a fervent response and approval from the broadest strata of the population.

Despite the difficulties caused by the continuing aggression against the DRA by international imperialism and regional reaction, we are looking to the future with optimism. The guarantee of our victory is provided by the ever-expanding bonds of friendship and cooperation between our peoples, parties, and governments and the selfless internationalist assistance and all-around support given by the Soviet Union to Afghanistan in the struggle to build the new life and defend the April Revolution's gains.

Further evidence of this friendship and solidarity between our countries and peoples is provided by the successful results of the recent official visit to the Soviet Union by the chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers.

The accords reached during the visit inspire us with firm confidence in the successful fulfillment of the plans for the DRA's socioeconomic development for the 5-year plan and the longer term.

We reaffirm the unshakability of the DRA's foriegn policy course built on the principles of the friendship of the peoples, peaceful coexistence, nonalignment, the struggle for peace and security, and the desire to achieve the peaceful settlement of the situation around Afghanistan as quickly as possible.

We wish you, dear comrades, the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, the Soviet Government, and all the fraternal Soviet people further successes in implementing the 27th CPSU Congress' plans and in the struggle to preserve and strengthen peace on our planet.

The PDPA Central Committee, DRA Revolutionary Council Presidium, and DRA Council of Ministers

[Statement by Habib Mangal, DRA ambassador to the USSR, in Russian on the occasion of the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution; from the "Vremya" newscast -- recorded]

[Text] Dear comrades, 8 years ago the people of the DRA, under the leadership of the Popular Democratic Party of Afghanistan [PDPA], overthrew forever in a revolutionary uprising the regime of the oppressors, and embarked on a path of revolutionary transformations. As a result of the triumph of the April Revolution, political power came into the hands of the people, and guaranteed their wide participation in the running of the state. Radical changes for the benefit of the workers are taking place in the country. Hundreds of thousands of peasant families have been given land to use (?for free). The first 5-year plan of social and economic development of the country is being fulfilled successfully. The main aim of the social policy is to raise the standard of living of the people. In accordance with the new approach, the party and government and expanding the social base of the revolutionary system. Elections to local organs of power have been held for the first time. Illiteracy is being actively rooted out everywhere.

The successful development of the process of radical transformations in the life of the country is being hindered by the undeclared war unleashed by international imperialism, headed by the United States, the military regime in Pakistan, and the reactionaries of the region. In spite of all the efforts of imperialism and counterrevolution, the international prestige of the DRA is growing. International solidarity with us is growing wider. At the present time the DRA has democratic [as heard] relations with 80 countries of the world.

Afghan-Soviet friendship is unbreakable. On 22 April, the 116th anniversary of the birth of great Lenin, the initiator of Afghan-Soviet friendship [as heard], a treaty was signed on bilateral trade and economic cooperation, which will serve the further strengthening of our friendship and play an important part in the social and economic development of the DRA.

Comrade Babrak Karmal has said: For 65 years now the Soviet Union has been our first great and sincere friend, the brother of our people. We are grateful to the Soviet Union and all our friends for their solidarity and support. The DRA, as a peace-loving country, decisively supports the proposals of the Soviet Union for ensuring a stable peace, published on 15 January 1986 in the statement by Comrade Gorbachev, and which were confirmed at the 27th CPSU Congress.

The DRA Government is conducting tireless (?activity to) ensure a political settlement to the situation which has arisen around Afghanistan.

We sharply condemn the United States' bandit raid on Libya, and declare our support to the Libyan people. In conclusion I must say that the subversive activity of imperialism and counterrevolution is doomed to failure. The victory of the revolution of the Afghan people is the implacable law of history.

Thank you for your attention.

Moscow TV Shows Military Parade

LD272128 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Mikhail Leshchinskiy report from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] A military parade and march-past took place in Kabul today, dedicated to the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution:

[Begin Leshchinskiy recording] In Afghanistan, a country of ancient customs and traditions, this is the newest thing: People are here welcoming the anniversary of the revolution. From earliest morning, under the not yet hot rays of the Kabul Sun, thousands and thousands of people have been gathering in this wide squre. Here are self-defense detachments; the troops have forzen into attention.

On the central rostrum are the leaders of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the Revolutionary Council of the Republic, and the National Fatherland Front. Comrade Nazar Mohammad, candidate member of the PDPA Central Committee political bureau, minister of defense of the Republic, noted that in the past year, in spite of aggression from international imperialism and regional reaction, the country has taken a new step on the path of revolutionary transformations.

Dozens of ranks of soldiers pass in front of the rostrums. Military technology moves past. The Afghans watch their Army with pride. Already this year, in the spring offensive, it has inflicted a major defeat on the counterrevolution. From battles to parade and back to battle.

The April march-past of the people of Kabul: In the columns are workers, engineers, doctors, and teachers. These professions were totally unknown in Afghanistan. The revolution is marching into its 9th year with conviction. [video shows Leshchinskiy standing on square, with self-defense detachments behind him; then passes to shots of the crowd and of the regular Army standing at attention. First shot of the rostrum, taken from one side, shows, left to right: Najibullah, Keshtmand, Nur Ahmad Nur, Ziray, unidentified person, Wantanjar, Barialay, and probably two more beyond. Film then cuts to show long short of rostrum, with four soldiers standing at the foot. Seven figures are now visible standing on it, three of them in military uniform who were not present in the first shot. Some more are hidden behind raised central part. Close up, from same angle as the first, shows 13 figures. A 14th, the military man nearest to the camera, is not visible at all. The line-up is now: unidentified military man, Najibullah, Nazar Muhammad in uniform, Keshtmand, Nur, Ziray, unidentified person, Wantanjar, Barialay, Razmjo, three unidentified persons; Nazar Mohammad seen reading speech. The parade begins with troops marching past, then armored personnel carriers. There is a fly-past of helicopters. After this civilians march past, carrying flags and banners.] [end recording]

Defense Minister Addresses Parade

LD271027 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0818 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Kabul, 27 Apr (TASS) -- Today the Afghan people triumphantly are celebrating their national festival, the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution. A military parade and a demonstration by working people took place in Kabul's central square.

On the rostrum were the leaders of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan [PDPA] and the DRA Government, and senior military leaders. The parade was received by Lieutenant-Colonel N. Muhammad, candidate member of the Politburo of the PDPA Central Committee and minister of defense.

The April Revolution, he said in his address, opened up the path to happiness and prosperity for the working people of Afghanistan. Over the past year, the country has achieved great successes in the cause of building a new society. Large-scale social and economic transformations are being carried out, the national economy is growing stronger, and the process of democratizing public life is going ahead at full speed.

However, N. Muhammad pointed out, our country's successes could be even greater were it not for the encroachments of international imperialism and reaction, led by the United States. Yet the enemies of the Afghan people have not managed and will not manage to achieve their aims; the DRA's valiant Armed Forces and the whole people are protecting the gains of the revolution.

Turning to questions of international politics, the DRA defense minister stated Afghanistan's full support for the peace-loving foreign policy course of the Soviet Union and the constructive Soviet initiatives directed toward restraining the arms race and the elimination of nuclear weapons.

The demonstration of many thousands marched beneath the slogans "Long live the April Revolution!", Long live peace throughout the world!", "Long live the working class and all working people of Afghanistan!" and "Down with American imperialism and reaction!" Then a sports festival was held.

MANILA PAPER CITED ON FUTURE OF U.S. BASES

PM281501 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Apr 86 First Edition p 6

[Own correspondent L. - Kuznetsov report: "Will the Bases Stay?"]

[Text] Manila, 27 Apr — Will the American bases on Philippine soil remain, or not? That question could be submitted for nationwide discussion, Philippine President C. Aquino stated in a talk with foreign correspondents.

As the METRO MANILA TIMES newspaper writes, the attack on Libya made the Filipinos look at the American bases at Subic Bay and Clark Field through new eyes: Will not they, like their British "sisters," become direct participants in some future act of aggression such as the White House is so quick to perpetrate? The bombing of Libya was another argument in favor of the need to get rid of the Pentagon's "hawks' nests."

Earlier C. Aquino said that she retains the right to make the decision on the bases. The American-Philippine agreement on this question expires in 1991, but a referendum on the subject will be held, the president said, before the expiry of the treaty.

SRV STATEMENT SUPPORTS USSR FOREIGN POLICY

LD281023 Moscow TASS in English 0949 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Hanoi April 28 TASS -- In the past 40 years Asia has become a scene of the battle waged by the peace-loving and progressive forces against the forces of imperialism and reaction for peace, national independence, democracy, and social progress. The victories won by the Asian nations in that battle and the consolidation of the positions of the revolutionary and peace-loving forces have led to profound changes in the situation on the continent and in the world as a whole, says a statement released by the Vietnamese Government here today.

The document points out that the Soviet Government's statement of April 23 on the situation in Asia and the Pacific was another manifestation of the consistent Soviet foreign policy of strengthening peace and promoting equal cooperation among all nations. Unlike the forces of imperialism and reaction, which are trying to put together in the region closed economic and military-political groups to worsen confrontation in Asia and the Pacific, the USSR put forward realistic and sensible proposals aimed at establishing a nuclear-free zone of peace in Asia and the Pacific.

The Vietnamese people, the statement says, are committed to the cause of peace, friendship, and cooperation among nations, primarily in Southeast Asia and the Asian-Pacific region.

They are working to make Southeast Asia a zone of peace, stability, cooperation, and development and contributing to stronger peace and broader equal cooperation in Asia and the Pacific.

The government and people of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam are welcoming and supporting the statement of the Soviet Government. It fully meets the foreign policy course of Vietnam aimed at establishing relations of friendship with all countries and at settling disputable issues through negotiations in the constructive spirit and in a situation of mutual understanding and respect for national independence and for each other's lawful interests. The people of Vietnam firmly believe that if all the peace-loving and progressive forces strengthen their solidarity and make energetic efforts and if the states of Asia and the Pacific display responsibility and goodwill, a lasting peace and equal mutually beneficial cooperation will by all means be ensured in that vast region, the document stresses.

NEW ZEALAND'S LANGE AFFIRMS ANTINUCLEAR POLICY

LD281305 Moscow TASS in English 1146 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Canberra April 28 TASS -- The Government of New Zealand will not lift its ban on calls by nuclear-armed or nuclear-powered ships at its ports, Prime Minister David Lange is reported to have told a group of journalists in Wellington. He said that New Zealand was not going to budge on the question of the presence of nuclear weapons in the territory of the country. The prime minister also said that no circumstances would make him abandon the legal formalization of an anti-nuclear policy, proclaimed by the government and approved by the people. A draft anti-nuclear bill has been submitted to parliament and is likely to be passed this summer.

The United States has more than once forcefully warned the labour government that if that bill is passed, New Zealand will automatically be expelled from the ANZUS military alliance and find itself "defenseless" in the face of the "increased Soviet threat." These threadbare myths, however, are not working: David Lange has pointed out on more than one occasion that no one threatens New Zealand. Other methods of "bringing round" the recalcitrant "ally" that have been used by Washington have also failed. (The USA threatened Wellington with trade and economic sanctions and other repressions.)

The persistence with which Washington has been trying for over a year now to make Wellington revise its anti-nuclear policy is explained by the U.S. desire to preserve by all means the ANZUS military alliance dominated by Washington. The establishment of pro-American alliances, "triangles" and "axes" is the basis of Washington's aggressive strategy in Asia and the Pacific.

SEJM COMMISSION BACKS GORBACHEV ARMS PROPOSAL

PM281436 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 26 Apr 86 Morning Editon p 1

[TASS report: "In Support of the Soviet Initiative"]

[Text] Warsaw, 25 Apr -- At a session held in Warsaw, the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Polish Sejm voiced full support for the proposal advanced at the 11th SED Congress by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, for a considerable reduction in conventional arms and armed forces in Europe.

This initiative, as well as the Soviet Union's previous proposals relating to the reduction of nuclear arms in Europe, is aimed at curbing the arms race and creating conditions for the development of all European states and peoples under conditions of peace and security, the resolution adopted by the commission points out.

The present international situation, the document points out, has been exacerbated by the aggressive U.S. actions against Libya.

Having heard the report by M. Orzechowski, candidate member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and Polish foreign minister, on the course of the work of the Stockholm Conference, as well as on a number of talks which he has had on problems of security and disarmament, the commission approved the contribution of Polish diplomacy to strenghening and developing the process begun in Helsinki.

NESTE OFFICIAL CONCLUDES MOSCOW NEGOTIATIONS

LD251826 Helsinki International Service in Finnish 1500 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] The price of Soviet crude oil will, according to our information, fall by approximately $3 a barrel.

According to the deputy managing director of Neste [state oil and gas company], Kai Hietarinta, who ended his negotiations in Moscow today, the reduction could mean another fall in the consumer prices of, for instance, gasoline by several pennia.

Yrjoe Lansipuro reports: Soviet oil costs now about one-half of what it did last December. From $28 we have come down to $13-14. Deputy Managing Director of Neste Kai Hietarinta said after the price negotiations in Moscow that the effect of the reductions is FM700-800 million a year, assuming that the price level, which comes into effect from April retroactively, will remain the same. It might, in fact, fall but not much anymore; we are now near rock-bottom figures, Hietarinta says.

Concerning the effects on consumer prices, Hietarinta says cautiously that the effect is several pennia, perhaps even 10 pennia, but this does not only depend on Neste These negotiations were made easier by the fact that the Soviet Union has returned to the world oil markets, and has the comparison [words indistinct] in view. However, this is not the spot price of oil to be delivered sometimes in the future, but the actual price of the so-called wet barrels which are sold now.

Another trade meeting also ended in Moscow today, in a way being the other side of the equation of our trade with the Soviet Union. When the price of oil goes down, and if exports are to remain at the same level, more should be imported. Finns were given a list at the Ministry of Foreign Trade of goods which the Soviet Union could increase the sale of in addition to goods already agreed upon. The total sum exceeds the target: R200 [figure as heard], in other words FM1.5 billion. Among other things, there is more than 1 million metric tons of coal which the Finns have asked for, and also raw materials for the chemical industry and intermediate products for petroleum refining. There is more natural gas on offer, but the list also contains, for instance, aircraft, which have not aroused much interest before. Concerning all these products the actual trade negotiations must still be conducted.

MOSCOW TV INTERVIEWS SYRIAN PRESIDENT

LD290131 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1525 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Interview with Hafiz al-Asad, secretary general of the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party and president of the Syrian Arab Republic, by "special correspondent" Farid Seyful-Mulyukov; date and place not given; Al-Asad speaks in Arabic with superimposed Russian translation -- live or recorded]

[Text] [Seyful-Mulyukov] Mr President, the Soviet Union has advanced a broad and comprehensive program for the stage-by-stage elimination of weapons of mass destruction, the prevention of the threat of nuclear war, and the creation of a comprehensive system of international security. How do you assess this program?

[Al-Asad] I familiarized myself with interest with the documents of the 27th CPSU Congress, which developed a very important and comprehensive program in this field. From my point of view, the specific proposals and ideas contained in the Soviet peace and disarmament program are in keeping with the aspirations and interests of all peoples. I also think that they will receive broad support from world public opinion, since the Soviet proposals are aimed at preserving peace and strengthening international security and will lead, in the final analysis, to the improvement of life of people on earth. That is why the program of the 27th CPSU Congress deserves every support and persevering efforts should be made to implement it.

The Soviet Union has advanced several peace initiatives.

The concrete plan for the total elimination of nuclear weapons proposed by the USSR, the Soviet Union's unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions, the recent proposal of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, which he advanced in the GDR, on reducing conventional arms and armed forces in Europe -- all these initiatives testify to the Soviet Union's sincere desire to curb the arms race and to take another step forward for more favorable conditions for averting wars in the future. The Soviet Union has displayed its good will and showed that it wants peace to be achieved on the planet on firm foundations and wants other power to take similar measures in response.

[Seyful-Mulyukov] The United States to all intents and purposes rejects the Soviet Union's peace initatives. Washington has taken the path of sharply aggravating the international situation, evidence of which are the continuing U.S. nuclear tests and the barbaric U.S. aggression against Libya. What do you think of this approach by the White House regarding the fate of peace and the freedom of peoples?

[Al-Asad] It is regrettable that the United States has not responded to the Soviet Union's important peace initatives. On the contrary, the United States has contributed to the aggravation and complication of the international situation. They have embarked on a path of escalating aggression first in this, then in that area of the world, as has happened in Latin America and, very recently, in relation to Libya. The United States attacked the Libyan Jamahiriyah, subjected its towns and houses of peaceful citizens to bombing, killing women, children, and old people under the pretext that Libya allegedly carries out terrorist attacks. Libya has delcared more than once that it has nothing to do with the terrorism experienced in several European countries. On the basis of what logic has the United States arrogated to itself the right to punish whole countries and peoples, changing international principles and laws? This is a terrifying logic. It is not in accordance with the spirit of our time, and we reject it.

The United States has virtually ignored the USSR's numerous peace initiativea and instead resorts to aggressive acts against a number of states in the world, particularly small states, thereby creating a serious threat to peace and the security of peoples. We will not back down in the face of threats from U.S. imperialism and will not forego our vital interests, our freedom, or our sovereignty. The United States will not achieve concessions either from Syria or from the peoples of other countries that have liberated themselves from the yoke of colonialism and have decided to take the path of independence and social progress.

[Unidentified announcer] Having denounced the U.S. doctrine of neoglobalism, President al-Asad says that the main cause of tension in the Middle East is Israel's striving for expansion and the U.S. intention to secure hegemony in the region. Cooperating with Israel in pursuit of its aggressive plans, Washington would like to impose structures and even regimes to its liking on the Arab nations. We reject this diktat. We will fight any attempt to harm us. We have no alternative to countering the whole complex of this aggressive policy.

Describing the situation in the Golan Heights which are occupied by Israel, Hafiz al-Asad notes that Israel, intentionally raising tension, wishes to intimidate Syria to the extent of unleashing aggression and shaking its will and firmness. The Syrian people, whoever, do not fear U.S.-Israeli threats and are supported by their strength and firmness, the strength of the Arab and world liberation movements, and by their friends in the world, first and foremost the Soviet Union.

[Seyful-Mulyukov] Let us touch on the situation in Lebanon now. Syria has exerted a good many efforts to end the civil war and halt the imperialist plot regarding the people of Lebanon. In your opinion, what are the factors that are preventing the restoration of peace, security, and national accord in Lebanon?

[Al-Asad] As you know, we have for many years been striving to help the Lebanese people stop the civil war. The best way is accord among the Lebanese themselves. Here too, however, Syria and Lebanon encounter U.S.-Israeli interference. At the end of last year, an agreement was reached among the warring Lebanese parties with Syrian mediation. The United States and Israel made every effort to prevent the implementation of this agreement. We told the United States directly: You Americans are trying to prevent the implementation of this document that constitutes a basis for Lebanon to proceed toward security and internal peace. Those who are trying to drag out the Lebanese crisis are the worst enemies of the Lebanese people. We are, however, optimistic. National accord must be reached in Lebanon, and we will continue our efforts in this direction.

[Seyful-Mulyukov] Mr President, you have outlined the main reasons for the complex, contradictory situation in the Middle East. As is known, the Soviet Union favors a lasting and just settlement in the region. Our proposals on the subject are well known. How do you picture the political methods for unblocking the conflict in the Middle East?

[Al-Asad] Syria has supported and continues to support the Soviet proposals on a Middle East settlement. These proposals are similar to the Arab proposals we approved at the Arab leaders' summit in Fes. The problem is, however, that the United States and Israel reject all these proposals, both the Soviet and the Arab ones. I cannot see any other means to establish peace in our region except through the convening of an international conference on a Middle East settlement under UN auspices and with obligatory participation by the USSR and the United States. Washington and Tel Aviv are torpedoing the convening of this international conference and Soviet participation in it. I think that this boycott yet again testifies to the aggressive intentions of the United States and Israel and to the fact that they do not want a just peace to be established in the Middle East. They have deliberately driven the Middle East settlement process into an impasse. It is extremely important for the Soviet Union to be an active participant in a Middle East settlement, a guarantor that a really just and lasting peace will be established in our region.

[Seyful-Mulyukov] Now let us turn to Soviet-Syrian relations: You signed the Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation between the Syrian Arab Republic and the Soviet Union. In your view, what role does this treaty play, how is it being implemented and what role does it play in the development and expansion of our traditional links?

[Al-Asad] Friendly relations between our countries have a tradition going back many years. The Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation between Syria and the Soviet Union was concluded with the aim of strengthening these relations. It formed a firm foundation for our multifaceted cooperation in political, economic, cultural, and other fields. We in Syria, and our friends in the USSR, are striving to strengthen this cooperation and deepen our friendship. Soviet-Syrian links are distinguished by their dynamism and efficacy.

[Seyful-Mulyukov] Recently you marked the 40th anniversary of Syrian independence. The progressive and anti-imperialist course of your country has found clear direction under the leadership of the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party. How would you assess Syria's main achievements on this path?

[Al-Asad] Syria was one of the first countries to throw off the colonial yoke and gain national independence. Over the entire course of these 40 years, the Syrian people have put up stubborn resistance to imperialist plots and pacts. Syria was the first Arab country to set up cooperation with socialist states as early as the beginning of the fifties. Now, under the leadership of the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party, Syria occupies an important position in the framework of the Arab and world anti-imperialist movement. Despite the heavy burden we carry in the fight against forces of aggression and imperialism, the Syrian people have carried out profound transformations in political, economic, cultural, and other fields. We have set up a progressive national front. It includes all patriotic and progressive parties of the country. Close interaction and cooperation between all anti-imperialist detachments acquires particularly important significance when the country is faced by the threat of aggression from hostile forces, as is happening now in our region.

[Announcer] At the end of the interview, President Hafiz al-Asad once again stresses that the peoples of Syria and the Soviet Union are linked by the bonds of firm friendship. The Soviet Union is waging an active fight for the strengthening and preservation of peace. It plays a very important and effective role in supporting peoples fighting for their freedom, independence, and progress.

I want to reiterate, Hafiz al-Asad says, our devotion to the cause of deepening friendship between Syria and the Soviet Union, and wish the friendly Soviet people further progress, new successes, and prosperity.

[Seyful-Mulyukov] Thank you, Mr President.

TASS CITES JANA ON LIBYAN COMPLAINT TO EEC

LD291021 Moscow TASS in English 0942 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Tripoli April 29 TASS -- As the JANA agency said, Libya's People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison has invited the Dutch charge d'affaires to the Jamahiriyah, as a representative of the country chairing the EEC. He was told that the EEC member countries grant refuge to terrorist organisations hostile to Libya and to other progressive Arab states, and give them various aid, including financial aid, and support. This stand of the West European states is aimed at sponsoring and exporting terrorism, whatever justification may be used for it.

Characteristically, official terrorism practised by Zionist Israel towards the Arab people of Palestine does not prevent the "Common Market" member countries from maintaining with it relations of all-round cooperation.

CORRESPONDENTS DESCRIBE AL-QADHDHAFI INTERVIEW, TRIPOLI

PM281319 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Special correspondents T. Kolesnichenko, S. Filatov report under the rubric "Echo of the Week"; "Steadfastness and Courage"]

[Excerpts] Tripoli, 27 Apr -- The Libyans will remember these days for a long time. They will also be memorable days for the journalists who came here on the first planes to land at Tripoli airport after the bombings by American aircraft.

After burying the dead, the inhabitants of Tripoli returned to the cares of the living. In the very center of the city, in the lively district of Bin 'Ashur, where American bombs were dropped, restoration work is being carried out rapidly and efficiently from morning till night. By the end of the week no craters could be seen. Carefully leveling the ground, the Libyan workers seemed to want to wipe off its face the traces of American barbarity. But halfway devastated buildings riddled by fragments still stand, dumb witnesses to the aggression. And the children, who are once again playing in the shady square, are still finding bomb fragments there.

Some districts of the capital are still cordoned off. Here they are bringing up unexploded special purpose bombs from underground and taking them away to remote districts to defuse them. All around, the ordinary life of an Arab city goes on...

The country is still on the alert. Vigilance is necessary, because threats against the Libyan people and calls for new military aggression against them are once again coming from across the ocean. The U.S. 6th Fleet is again engaging in provocative machinations off Libya's shores. The country's air defense resources, which, unexpectedly for the Americans, were able to greet the aggressor suitably and inflict appreciable damage on him, are guarding Libya's skies today too. The radio constantly carries broadcasts exposing the American military's criminal plans and calling for vigilance to be strengthened.

In this complex, difficult situation M. Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution, received in his residence a group of Soviet journalists who had come to Tripoli to cover the events in the southern Mediterranean. Among them were the authors of these lines. After observing certain formalities, we entered the courtyard of the residence by car and were then invited into a small room in the building. A semicircular wooden table, a few leather armchairs, a large carpet on the floor -- that was all the furniture.

The journalists were invited to take the chairs, and then the leader of the Libyan revolution walked in. He was dressed in a blue-green suit, with high black boots on his feet. After greeting everyone, M. al-Qadhdhafi invited us to talk. Answering our questions, he spoke calmly and with dignity, periodically reinforcing his words with restrained gestures.

This interview was published in the Soviet press. It was shown several times on Libyan television. Local commentaries stress that M. al-Qadhdhafi expressed satisfaction with the Soviet Union's position, set forth in M.S. Gorbachev's statements, in which the aggressor was not only resolutely condemned, but given a serious warning.

The Soviet Union's solidarity with the Libyan people, the newspapers write, helps in the courageous resistance to the forces of imperialism, which threaten other developing countries too.

The Libyan Jamahiriyah is now in the front line of the struggle against American imperialsim, and the solidarity and sympathy of all peace-loving forces and peoples are on its side. In the past week Tripoli has received a large number of telegrams and messages from party, state, and public figures and organizations in various countries. Many delegations have come from all continents to express directly the solidarity and support of all honest people of the world for the Libyan people's heroic struggle. They were received by the country's leaders, who expressed their gratitude to those who resolutely condemned the U.S. aggression.

...From Tripoli's embankment you can easily see the clear outlines of the Soviet missile cruiser Vitse-Admiral Drozd. "We can somehow breathe more easily when we can see it there," Libyans standing on the embankment said, looking at the ship.

Ways were mapped out for the improvement and strenghening of mutually advantageous economic, scientific, and technical cooperation.

During the exchange of opinions on questions of international policy, N.I. LD271344 Moscow TASS in English 1242 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Cairo April 27 TASS -- Egypt seeks to advance cooperation with the USSR in efforts to achieve a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East, according to Egyptian Foreign Minister of State Butrus Ghali.

Speaking in an interview with the newspaper AL-SIYASI, he said the visit to Egypt by a Soviet parliamentary delegation and the trip to Moscow by the Egyptian economics minister indicate the level reached by relations between the two countries in different fields.

Egypt, Ghali said, is a non-aligned nation and wants to have close cooperation and friendly relations with all countries.

He said Egypt's call for convening an international conference to solve the Palestinian issue provides for the Soviet Union's active part in such a forum.

Without solving the Palestinian problem, the pivotal issue in the Middle East, on the basis of the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all occupied Arab lands, Ghali continued, it is impossible to achieve stability and peace in the Middle East.

Egypt, he said, stands for a just and all-embracing settlement through the restoration of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, for an international conference in the Middle East with the participation of all conflicting sides and the permanent members of the U.N. Security Council.

CHARGE D'AFFAIRES VIEWS RELATIONS WITH UAE

GF261926 Abu Dhabi WAM in Arabic 1730 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Al-Shariqah, 26 Apr (WAM) -- Mr (Rostom Sevolin), Soviet charge d'affaires to the UAE, stated that the Soviet ambassador to the UAE has been appointed by the Soviet Government and will soon be announced after the normal official steps are completed.

In statements published today in the daily AL-KHALIJ, he said that diplomatic relations between the Soviet Union and the UAE are of great importance because diplomatic relations mean mutual understanding between countries, becoming acquainted with the people and their civilization and culture from up close, then endeavoring to develop economic, trade, and political relations in the interest of both sides.

The Soviet diplomat explained that the work of the Soviet Embassy would be according to the basic principles of the Soviet Government in its relations with countries designed to establish peace in the world. He pointed out that peace and joint cooperation can only be achieved when governments and people understand the views of each other and prepare the necessary conditions to consolidate principles of peace.

Mr (Sevolin) pointed out that relations between the UAE and the Soviet Union did not begin with the declaration of the establishment of diplomatic relations, but began in January 1973 when exchanges were being conducted during UN sessions through the envoys of the two countries.

He added that exchanges between the two countries at the United Nations were being held which covered their views prior to raising issues before the UN sessions in order to gain support for the issues, whether the issues concerned the UAE or the Soviet Union and [word indistinct] in the same framework as the exchange of information and documents over discussed issues.

The Soviet charge d'affaires summed up his country's stance on the security of the Gulf saying it is [word indistinct] the Gulf countries initially and the responsibility to realize it lies in [words indistinct] the international imperialism and does not serve the Iraqi or Iranian people.

He stated that his country strongly supports immediate endeavors to end this war and resolve all differences between the two warring countries through peaceful negotiations.

Greets Bolivian Communist Party

LD262037 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1916 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 26 Apr (TASS) -- Here is the text of the CPSU Central Committee greetings to the extraordinary congress of the Communist Party of Bolivia:

Dear comrades! The CPSU Central Committee conveys fraternal greetings to the delegates of the extraordinary congress of the Communist Party of Bolivia.

The international situation in which your congress is taking place remains tense and dangerous because of the actions of the aggressive circles of imperialism which are enhancing the arms race in all direction and are not discontinuing interference in the internal affairs of other states. The militarist face of this policy was again revealed by the refusal of the United States, despite the wishes of all mankind, to accept the Soviet Union's proposals on ending nuclear tests, and by the new nuclear explosions at the Nevada range.

By carrying out a piratical aggression against Libya, the United States has again appeared as the chief culprit for the escalation of international tension, playing in an irresponsible manner with the fate of millions of people.

Washington's imperialist policy is very obvious in Latin America, evidence of which are the continual threats against socialist Cuba, open support for the Somozist gangs aimed at impeding the people of Nicaragua from building their life as they think best, and the suffocating noose of debt thrown over the Latin American countries by transnational corporations.

No matter how great the threat of war and nuclear catastrophe is at the moment, it can be warded off by the joint efforts of all progressive, peace-loving forces of the world. Proceeding from this, the 27th CPSU Congress set out a concrete program for preserving and strengthening universal peace and formulated the foundations of a comprehensive system of international security, the creation of which would make it possible to turn the course of world events into the channel of detente and to ensure conditions for free, independent development of all countries and peoples.

The CPSU congress confirmed the party's course of devoted solidarity with the forces of social and national liberation, and for strengthening cooperation between communist and workers parties.

We wish you succesful accomplishment of the tasks which will be mapped out by the Bolivian Communist Party congress, consolidation of party ranks and expansion of its influence in the masses, rallying of all the progressive and patriotic forces in the struggle against the antipopular plans of reaction, for the country's democratic and independent development.

Long live friendship between our parties, based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

CHILEAN MILITARY EXILES URGE RESISTANCE TO PINOCHET

PY212157 Moscow in Spanish to Chile 2000 GMT 19 Apr 86

[Excerpts] The organization of Chilean military exiles has called on officers, noncommissioned officers, corporals, soldiers, and conscripts to side with the people and not lend themselves to the fratricidal adventures of General Pinochet. The document indicates that this is the decisive year to end the dictatorship and asks the Armed Forces to become aware of the grave situation affecting institutions and the entire country.

The Chilean military in exile stress that the struggle will not take its toll only from the people; the people will see to it that it is also exacted from the military. The call to the Armed Forces, says quote, our organization was born from the commitment assumed with Chile and its people at the time the oath to the flag was taken as soldiers, and it is our duty to alert the Armed Forces to the serious situation our fatherland is experiencing, unquote.

The document adds that despite all the drawbacks and violence used against them, the people have managed to resore their organization and are today in a position to take the offensive and move towrd the final objective of ousting the dictatorship as soon as possible. The experience of the Haitian and Philippine peoples, who have recently recovered their freedom, clearly shows the road to take. The document adds that there is no dictatiorial force that can impede the liberation of the people when they decide to mobilize themselves for that purpose. The degree of combativeness and social mobilization our countrymen have attained forced social sectors that were until recently loyal to the regime to withdraw their support for the dictatorship. Today, Pinochet survives thanks only to the support of the Armed Forces, the document of the military exiles asserts and points out that the Armed Forces are responsible for the poverty and terror our countrymen are suffering.

The document issued by the organization of Chilean military in exile concludes by saying: Officers, noncommissioned officers, corporals, soldiers, and conscripts: take positions by siding with the people and do not let yourself be dragged into the fratricidal adventures of Gen Pinochet. As Chileans and soldiers, we tell you that the future of the fatherland, as well as that of the Armed Forces is in your hands.

The document of the organization of Chilean military in exile ends by stating: For a sovereign and free fatherland and for an Armed Forces at the service of the people.

First Accident in Soviet Union

LD281758 Moscow TASS in English 1755 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS — The accident at the Chernobyl atomic power station is the first one in the Soviet Union. Similar accidents happened on several occasions in other countries.

In the United States, 2,300 accidents, breakdowns and other faults were registered in 1979 alone, according to the public organization called Critical Mass.

The major causes of the dangerous situation are the poor quality of reactors and other types of equipment, unsatisfactory control over the technical conditions of the equipment, non-observance of safety regulations and insufficient professional training of personnel.

The atomic power station North Anna-1, Virgina near Washington D.C., is topping the list of accident-prone stations.

A major accident occurred in 1979 at the atomic power station in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, where radioactive substances leaked due to a reactor breakdown.

As a result, radioactivity raised to a level dangerous to human health. In order to avoid casualties, the local authorities were compelled to evacuate thousands of residents from the area around the station and nearby regions.

A year later, eight people were doused with radioactive water as a hose became torn during maintenance work at the atomic power plant in Zion, Illinois. Overall, 40,000 litres of contaminated water poured into the atomic plant building.

Similar accidents also were registered at the atomic power station near New York City, at the atomic power plant in Aiken, South Carolina, and some others.

Moscow World Service Report

LD291127 Moscow World Service in English 1100 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] A government commission has been set up to investigate what caused the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station in the Ukraine where a reactor was damaged and efforts are being made to eliminate the consequences of the accident and help the victims. The disaster was the first one at Soviet nuclear power plants in more than 30 years. The use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes is the vital necessity for humanity because of the gradual exhaustion of conventional fuels. Drastic measures are being carried out to guarantee the power reactor's reliability and safety. Nevertheless, our observer notes, as this accident and many others at nuclear power facilities at Western countries show that the application of nuclear power even for peaceful purposes can be dangerous — all the more obvious what a horrible threat nuclear weapons and their testing pose to the nations.

AFP Report

AU281746 Paris AFP in English 1744 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 28 (AFP) — An accident has occurred in a Soviet nuclear power station damaging a reactor, Soviet news agency TASS reported Monday, quoting official sources and referring to casualties. The accident happened at a station in Chernobyl in the Kiev area of the Ukraine, TASS said, without specifying when it took place.

Measures were being taken to deal with "the consequences of the accident" TASS said, adding "the victims are being assisted". The agency did not say whether the casualties were dead or injured. A government committee of inquiry had been set up.

Meanwhile Swedish Defence Ministry said an abnormally high rate of radioactivity had been recorded on Monday afternoon by several monitoring stations in Finland, Sweden, Denmark, and Norway. The ministry said that the rate would not be a danger to human beings although regional specialists said that the rate was ten times higher in Finland than in Sweden and Norway.

Swedish Energy Minister Birigitta Dahl said the radioactivity registered in Sweden could have been carried by "winds from the Black Sea, from a region of the Soviet Union or from another country". Any question of a nuclear test or missile test accident had been ruled out, the Swedish military observatory at Hagfors reported.

Information about accidents and disasters of any sort are rarely announced in the Soviet Union immediately after they have happened.

The first stage of the Chernobyl nuclear plant was put into service in September, 1977 and two further stages in 1980. Its total power capacity is of three million kilowatts.

An abnormal rate of radioactivity was found on the clothes of nuclear power station employees at a nuclear power plant at Forsmark north of Stockholm leading to the evacuation of 600 employees. The radioactivity rate, at a few millirems an hour, was however not thought high enough to warrant the evacuation of the population. Experts in Stockholm had at first thought that the abnormal rate in the air in several parts of Sweden came from this power station.

Sweden decided, after a referendum, to dismantle its nuclear power stations between now and the year 2010.

In Denmark, the Risoe nuclear research laboratory west of Copenhagen registered a low level of radioactive fallout Monday afternoon. Experts said the level of radioactivity — five times more than normal — was comparable to that reported in Sweden and Finland but at no time was dangerous. The laboratory spokesman added that the level suggested however that the Soviet reactor had melted.

Life 'Normal' in Kiev

AU290723 Paris AFP in English 0717 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 29 (AFP) — A Soviet journalist contacted by telephone in Kiev said everything was "normal" in the city, 150 kms (95 miles) south of the nuclear plant at Chernobyl, the scene of a major accident on Saturday.

The journalist on the local Communist Party daily PRAVDA UKRAINIA told Agence France-Presse that "everything is normal here". He refused to make any comment on the catstrophe, saying "I can't tell you anything, information is given out in Moscow."

Telephone lines with Kiev were particularly busy on Tuesday morning and it took several hours to get a line. It was not possible to obtain the slightest indication as to possible emergency or security measures being taken or advice which might have been given to the local population.

Air links between Moscow and Kiev, the third biggest city in the country, appeared to be normal, according to information received from the airport here.

Reactor Plant Produced Plutonium

AU290804 Paris AFP in English 0758 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Berlin, April 29 (AFP) — The Soviet nuclear plant which had a major accident at the weekend was chiefly producing plutonium for military purposes, a West German physicist said in an interview on a West Berlin radio.

According to Jens Scheer, professor of nuclear physics at Bremen University, the production of electricity was "only secondary". He added that the plant at Chernobyl in the Ukraine was of a type regarded as not very reliable and "experts have been fearing an accident for a long time".

Woman Sentenced for Fraud Reportedly Executed

AU241558 Paris AFP in English 1551 GMT 24 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 24 (AFP) — A woman sentenced to death for fraud two years ago in the southern city of Gelendzhik on the Black Sea coast has been executed, the weekly LITERATURNAYA ROSSIYA reported this week. Berta Borodkina, a 59-year-old widow nicknamed "Iron Bella" had been arrested, expelled from the Communist Party and tried for embezzling funds from her catering firm and for distributing kickbacks.

Analysts noted that executions are rarely made public in the Soviet Union and there had been no previous cases of a woman being put to death in this country for many years. Western sources estimated the number of executions in the Soviet Union at 100 a year.

From [date indistinct], the Soviet press had already highlighted a major corruption scandal in Rostov, Soviet Russia, that led to two executions and stiff jail sentences on several officials. The publicity given to the case had been seen as a sign of Soviet Mikhail [as received] Gorbachev's determination to combat corruption and speculation.

Prosecutor's Office Discusses Bank Frauds

PM221336 Moscow TRUD in Russian 17 Apr 86 p 2

[Unattributed report: "At the USSR Prosecutor's Office"]

[Text] The USSR Prosecutor's Office and its organs at the local level have checked on how legislation on safeguarding socialist property is being observed in the State Workers' Savings Bank system.

It was established that the USSR State Workers' Saving Bank Board and republic and oblast boards are still not fully ensuring the fulfillment of party and government requirements on stepping up the struggle against embezzlement and other abuses committed for personal gain.

Establishments of the State Workers' Savings Bank are guilty of serious shortcomings in the selection of cadres, including those for leadership posts, and instances of people being hired for jobs involving material responsibility who have a previous criminal record or proteges who subsequently become organizers and participants in various crimes are not isolated occurrences. The monitoring and auditing service is failing to prevent embezzlement and abuse or to detect them in time. In the Pochapintsy village savings bank, Ternopol Oblast, former inspectors Platosh and and Senkiv misappropriated deposits worth more than R150,000 over a period of 12 years. During that time higher organizations there carried out 43 audits of documents, 18 spot checks, and 17 checks on the acceptance and transmission of valuables, but not a single organization discovered any violations.

Instances where leaders and also workers in the monitoring and auditing services have connived with law-breakers or even become direct accomplices in crime are not infrequent. Adazhiy, inspector in the Dolynyany village savings bank, Chernovitsy Oblast, misappropriated money when receiving deposits over several years. Her accomplices were the chief of the central savings bank, accountants, and auditors, whom she bribed to hush up the crime. All have been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment.

The accounts monitoring service was not efficient enough. The methods it adopted were ineffective and do not meet modern requirements.

The low standard of accounts monitoring is shown, for example, by the fact that out of 33 cases of embezzlement of money detected in the Uzbek SSR in 1984-85, only 3 were detected by subsequent monitoring of accounts. In the Ukraine SSR during the last 5 years, less than one-fifth of all embezzlements detected in savings banks were revealed by monitoring of accounts.

The role and responsibility of the actual accountancy apparatus for safeguarding socialist property has been undermined. The chief accountants of republic and oblast savings banks to all intents and purposes failed to keep accounts, carry out analyses and monitoring, or elaborate measures to prevent the embezzlement of state resources.

Law-enforcement organs, upon detecting cases of embezzlement in savings banks, regularly inform the leaders of oblast and republic boards about the causes and conditions favoring the perpetration of crimes, but effective measures to remove them have not been taken.

The USSR Gosbank Board, together with the USSR People's Control Committee and the USSR Finance Ministry, examined on the basis of material provided by the USSR Prosecutor's Office the question of safeguarding socialist property within the State Workers' Savings Bank system. The USSR State Workers' Savings Bank Board was seriously criticized for negligence in its work. Specific measures designed to step up the struggle against embezzlement and abuse and obtain redress for damage caused to the state were outlined. The implementation of these measures was monitored. Officials guilty of shortcomings in cadre selection and placement and in the organization of accounting and the monitoring of subordinates' activity were strictly disciplined.

Lenin's Teachings Regarded as Key to Social Progress

PM251220 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Apr 86
First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "The Unfading Light of Great Ideas"]

[Text] Today the peoples of the Soviet Union and the socialist countries and all progressive mankind are ceremonially marking the 116th anniversary of the birth of Vladimir Ilich Lenin — a great man, thinker, and revolutionary.

The magnitude of Lenin's impact on the destinies of the world stands out more vividly now than ever before. His name has become one with the present and the future of civilization, marking the actual beginning of its communist era. The teaching and work of the founder of the Bolshevik party and of the first socialist state is rightly recognized as a major contribution to the treasure house of universal human knowledge and experience.

"The talented continuer of the work of Marx and Engels, Vladimir Ilich Lenin comprehensively developed their teaching in new historical conditions, provided the answer to the fundamental questions of the present time, equipped the workers movement with the theory of socialist revolution and socialist building, and with a scientific system of views on problems of war and peace," the CPSU Program notes.

Time has no power over Leninism. Its invincible strength lies in its ability to correctly reflect objective socioeconomic laws and to absorb everything new that leads to social progress. To adhere to Leninism means to engage in a tireless creative quest, to be able at every new historical stage to rise above customary but now obsolete notions, and to combine a bold orientation toward the future with strict realism.

This is the broad Leninist view that our party has taken of the current crucial stage in the life of the Soviet society and the present-day world as a whole, having put forward the concept of the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development at the April (1985) plenum. This concept was approved and further elaborated at the 27th CPSU Congress which is rightly described as the congress of strategic decisions. It approved the new edition of the CPSU Program, provided the answers to fundamental questions raised by life itself, and theoretically substantiated the ways of our further progress.

Transforming the energy of ideas into the energy of action — this is what is most essential, most important now. The year has started quite well in the national economy as a whole. There have been noticeable changes for the better in key industrial sectors. The volume of industrial output increased by 6.7 percent in comparison with the first quarter of last year. Labor productivity rose by 6.3 percent. In the countryside, purchases of livestock and poultry increased by 7.6 percent in comparison with last year, and of milk and eggs by 6.0 percent. The inspired, creative labor of millions during the Leninist subbotnik was a vivid manifestation of patriotism and concern for the common good. However, the Communists are not given to deluding themselves with their successes. In V.I. Lenin's words, it is necessary to advance energetically and singlemindedly to scale new heights. It is a vital necessity and the patriotic duty of every Soviet worker, and party members first and foremost, not to flag in their efforts, to fulfill the targets at their work places conscientiously, to a high standard, and with a complete understanding of their responsibility for the common cause. Only if this condition is fulfilled will we be able to achieve the very high targets set for this year and the 12th 5-Year Plan as a whole.

Following Leninist tradition, the party regards the galvanization of the human factor as a natural result of the improvement of all aspects of human activity. Concern for people's specific needs and interests and their spiritual and moral edification must be constantly in the field of vision of party, soviet, and economic organizations, trade unions, and the Komsomol. Heightened attention to social questions, science, and culture — this, according to Lenin, is the best policy and most efficient management.

Lenin regarded democratism and the living creativeness of the working people as the main strength of the development of the new system. The development of the socialist self-management of the people is assuming an even greater significance now when we are tackling most complex tasks in the sphere of production, culture, and management. And here every real step toward broader publicity, intensification of control from below, and deepening of the democratic principles in the work of state and public organizations and the development of constructive criticism and self-criticism is valuable. To utilize the democratic nature of socialism to the maximum effect relying on the initiative and creativeness of the masses remains the invariable condition of the acceleration of society's development.

The party's experience confirms with utmost clarity that little can be changed in any sphere of our life if we do not change our way of thinking, our psychological approach, if we do not revise our labor organization and the style and methods of work. And here too it is necessary to clearly see and distinguish between those who have truly begun to reorganize themselves and those who only pay lip service to the new trends while changing nothing in practice. This kind of "innovation" was described by V.I. Lenin as useless fuss, as creating a semblance of work, but which in effect poisons our institutions and our minds. The paramount duty of party organizations is strengthening the spirit of professional competence and efficiency and of a truly proprietary attitude to work everywhere and erecting a barrier against any manifestations of backwardness, sluggishness, and complacency.

The entire international activity of the CPSU and the Soviet state is imbued with fidelity to Lenin's ideas. Gradually, the Leninist principles of proletarian, socialist internationalism and of peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems are being translated into practice. Today, when the threat of nuclear annihilation hangs over mankind as a result of the aggressive, adventurist imperialist policy, the need to establish a comprehensive system of international security as outlined by the 27th CPSU Congress is becoming ever more imperative. At the same time, the Soviet Union's peaceable intentions and appeals are not a sign of weakness. We will not be caught unawares, we will be able to respond to any challenge. We remember well Lenin's behest that while engaging in peaceful building we must protect the defense capability of the Soviet state, be constantly on the alert.

Destiny has assigned the Soviet people the happy task of initiating a great new cause — building a society of the working people for the working people, paving the way toward communism. Along this path we draw strength from the clear fountainhead of Leninism. Rejoicing in our successes, persistently eliminating shortcomings, realistically assessing our achievements, and thinking about the future we turn to Lenin and consult him again and again. He had, has, and will continue to have a share in all our achievements. He was, is, and will continue to be our attentive and wise mentor.

Turkmen Supreme Soviet Discusses People's Soviets

GF271234 Ashkhabad Domestic Service in Russian 1545 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Excerpts] The Turkmen SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium has met and reviewed the resolutions adopted by the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium in its 31 March meeting on the tasks of the soviets of people's deputies following the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress which highly evaluated the role of the soviets of people's deputies as well as other leading political events which affect the life of our party and the Soviet people.

As has been pointed out, the documents of the 27th CPSU Congress have clearly outlined the role of the local soviets of people's deputies in realizing the innovative course of the party to accelerate social and economic development in the country, to improve the standard of living of the Soviet people, and to further deepen the democratization of our society.

According to these demands, the Turkmen SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium has adopted a resolution in which it obliges the soviets of people's deputies in the republic to discuss, during their sessions in May this year, the tasks of the soviets which stem from the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress; to create an atmosphere of self-criticism, in light of the current demands of the party, in order to analyze [words indistinct] organizational, political, and educational work; and to devise and carry out prospective plans to fulfill the decisions of the party congress.

As clarified by the 27th CPSU Congress that the soviets are responsible for all aspects of life in their territories, it is imperative that they effectively and persistently make use of the authority vested in them to implement and to accelerate economic, social, and cultural development. The implementation of this task must be based on intensification of production, labor productivity, and the lowering of the prices of goods.

The task of the soviets of people's deputies is to introduce the achievements of science and the latest technology, to upgrade the mechanism of control over the fields of national economy, and to consolidate order and discipline.

The soviets must exert more pressure on the accounting organs [words indistinct] for absolute implementation of the allocated tasks; to devote continuous attention to improving medical, trade, cultural, and domestic services for the citizens; and to meet the needs of the citizens for schools, kindergartens, and preschool institutions.

It is of vital importance to upgrade the style, method, and the executive authority of the soviet organs and to raise the level of responsibility of their workers in order to achieve the ultimate goal.

It is important that in all organs and departments of the government an atmosphere hostile to shortcomings and a bureaucratic solution of problems is created in order to promote wide development of labor productivity and self-criticism.

The Turkmen SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and its departments must concentrate efforts to solve the main problems in order to accelerate economic and social development, to strive to raise the standard of living in the republic, and to enhance the unified national economy complex in the country.

The need has been stressed to use [word indistinct] of the regular reports of the Council of Ministers and the ministries and the departments of the republic before the Turkmen SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium and its departments; to raise the level of the leadership of the local soviets of people's deputies; and to ensure natural cooperation among the organs of people's control, trade unions, the Komsomol, and other social organizations. [Word indistinct] the prospective measures adopted by the Turkmen SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium to implement the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the 23d Congress of the Turkmen Communist Party Central Committee will be submitted to the regular session of the Supreme Soviet of the republic for final approval.

[Text] At a plenum of the Central Committee of Tajikistan's Komsomol in Dushanbe today, the tasks of the republic's Komsomol organization in implementing the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress were discussed.

Noting the increased political and labor activity of young people, the plenum participants talked in self-critical terms about the slow restructuring of the primary Komsomol organizations at a time when work is being done in a new way. Sluggish thinking and parasitical and consumerist attitudes can still be observed among a certain section of youth. The plenum examined an organizational question.

In connection with his transfer to party work, Comrade Sultanov was released from his duties as first secretary of the Central Committee of the Tajik Komsomol. Comrade Alimov, who has been working in the apparatus of the All-Union Komsomol, was elected first secretary of the Tajik Komsomol. Comrade Makhkamov, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Tajik Communist Party, took part in the plenum.

Preparations Under Way for Economic Reorganization

LD290427 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1430 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] In the USSR State Committee for Material and Technical Supply, preparations have begun for transferring associations, enterprises, and organizations of a number of ministries and departments to material and technical supply on the basis of wholesale trade. Starting next year scientific and technical institutes, planning and design organizations of all ministries and departments along with their experimental production plants, the ministry of construction, road, and municipal machine building, and a number of nonproduction ministries, will be given the opportunity to order, without preliminary claims being made and using their own resources at the territorial supply organization, everything needed for the successful fulfilment of their plan tasks. This kind of method will provide for much more flexibility and mobility in production, which are so necessary for accelerating the rate of scientific and technical progress.

'System of Relations' Changed

LD281331 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0715 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 28 Apr (TASS) — TASS observer Boris Grishchenko writes:

Preparations have begun in the USSR for transferring associations and organizations in a number of ministries and departments to a system of material and technical supply through wholesale trade. The simplicity of placing a current order comes from the fact that only the production task now serves as the basis for obtaining resources, and for the order to be met, the enterprise must have a system of asset organization [organizatsiya sredstv].

This arrangement is in accordance with the 27th CPSU Congress policy of intensifying production and perfecting the economic mechanism, a policy based on increasing the independence of enterprises and organizations with an accompanying rise in their responsibility for good final work results.

Examples from the recent past show that material and technical supply has often been a problem area in the development of production.

Deficiencies in this sphere also were exploited by those who, instead of seeking internal resources, sought to somehow justify their own errors by talking about "objective difficulties."

This departure from rigid funding changes the system of relations in the raw material market. Previously, the USSR Gossnab worked directly with almost 250,000 customers. Naturally, it was not easy to maintain order in such an extensive setup. The new system puts an end to bureaucratic pencil-pushing; instead, enterprises and supply organizations are now engaged in useful and important work. They are preparing a scientific foundation for production and material resource consumption requirements for the 2d year of the 5-year period, and devising guarantees for the unconditional satisfaction of all orders from enterprises and building sites.

Economist Views Need To Restructure Management

PM281030 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 24 Apr 86 p 3

[Article by Doctor of Economic Sciences R. Belousov: "Centralism and Independence. The 27th CPSU Congress on the Reform of the System for Managing the Economy"]

[Text] Moscow — One of the most important tasks set by the 27th party congress is to create an integrated, efficient, and flexible system of economic management, a system which will enable the potential of socialism to materialize more fully. We are not talking about partial improvements, regardless of how important they may be, but about a radical reform, a qualitative restructuring of the entire system for managing the economy. Why is it necessary?

The point is that the current system of management was established a few decades ago and clearly bears the imprint of the historical conditions and tasks of the first 5-year plan periods, the epoch when socialist building was first embarked on. The management forms, methods, and levers which were introduced at that time made it possible to implement industrialization and collectivization, to ensure the material backing for victory in the Great Patriotic War, and to swiftly restore the national economy during the postwar period. They also made it possible to withstand the rigorous economic competition with the capitalist world's leaders and to attain military-strategic parity with the United States. This must not be forgotten; but we must not ignore the fact that these forms and methods of planned management of the economy have exhausted themselves with the passage of time, even though its principles are immutable.

This fact has invariably been taken into account in the party's economic policy, and measures have been implemented to improve economic management. It is sufficient to recall the attempts to find approaches toward a new combination of sectorial and territorial management in the late fifties, the economic reform in the sixties, the quest for new approaches toward planning and incentives in the late seventies, and the economic experiments in the early eighties.

Nevertheless, and despite all their theoretical and practical value, all these measures were, for various reasons, inconsistent and partial. Therefore, they could not have produced the global effect of bringing the entire economic management system in line with the level attained in the development of productive forces. This is why the 27th CPSU Congress set the task: to implement a profound restructuring of the economic machinery, relying on the principle of democratic centralism. The meaning of this restructuring is to orient all management tiers toward intensification of social production and enhancement of labor efficiency and quality.

Here we face a complex theoretical and practical problem concerning the optimal combination of democratic centralism and the self-management of labor collectives. It is evident that the national economy cannot function without one single body determining strategic goals and coordinating the efforts to attain them. Nor can it function, however, without local initiatives in the fulfillment of plan targets. Historical experience shows that any attempt to combine central and local functions leads to the overloading of some elements and the weakening of others. The art of managing is the skill to delineate accurately, and at the same time to combine organically, the economic and organizational functions of central organs, labor collectives, and local organs of management.

The 27th CPSU Congress set the task, on the one hand, to step up the activeness of centralized leadership in the implementation of the party's economic strategy and, on the other hand, to enhance the role and independence of associations and enterprises and their interest in and responsibility for the attainment of the best end results. The basis for this ought to be provided by true financial autonomy and direct dependence of the level of collectives' incomes on the efficiency of their work.

Such an approach makes it possible to overcome the extremes which are still encountered in the treatment of democratic centralism in the management of the economy. Centralism, with the national economic plan and the state budget as its main forms, is one of socialism's fundamental advantages. It ensures a uniform approach toward the solution of problems affecting the interests of the whole people, translates into practice the relations of socialist ownership, and makes it possible to achieve comprehensive and coordinated development of sectors and regions in the country. Thus it counters the centrifugal forces of departmentalism and parochialism. Centralized control of the economy in the interests of the people, with the working people's participation, and subject to monitoring by the working people, makes it possible to bring into action some very weighty sources of economic growth. This is where centralism couples with democracy, and the new tasks objectively demand that this "coupling" becomes even tighter.

In practical terms this means that central economic departments and sectorial ministries must stop taking upon themselves the solution of numerous specific questions and must shed their operational activity. Questions concerning the entire economy and its sectors will remain within their powers, but henceforth their solutions must be sounder and better substantiated.

At the same time, the task has been set to extend the powers of collectives and local organs. For this purpose, they will be provided not only with rights but also with the necessary resources. Labor collectives must earn funds for the retooling of production, for salary increases, for housing construction, and for the solution of other social problems. Until recently, financial autonomy was targeted on the recoupment of current expenditure, in other words on ensuring simple reproduction; henceforth, the technical and social development of enterprises and associations must be self-financed. This means that their collectives become responsible for expanded reproduction.

Another key idea of the management reform is the transition to economic methods at all levels of the national economy. We are talking about restrictions on peremptorily-volitional decisions which, in practical terms, often turn into voluntarism and inflict considerable material and moral damage. Now, when management organs make decisions, they must consider thoroughly the interests of labor collectives and regions, with priority being given to the interests of the whole people.

The statement that man is the main productive force is not just empty words. One can recall that one of the reasons behind the decline of economic growth rate in the late seventies and early eighties was the fact that this period saw a weakening of the incentives for the development of the individual and that the machinery which encouraged people to work with total dedication according to their abilities was beginning to wear out and age. Leveling, in terms of labor remuneration for individual workers and of incentives for collectives, became widespread within the system of both material and moral incentives. It became customary to compensate for the losses of laggard enterprises, ministries, and regions at the expense of those which operated efficiently. This undermined financial autonomy, gave rise to parasitism, and dampened any enthusiasm for innovation and progressiveness.

The restructuring of the economic machinery presupposes the rejection of the practice of subjective distribution of incomes. When an absolute profit ceiling is set for an enterprise in advance and, in fact, regardless of end results, while any above-plan income treated as "free" surplus is transferred to the budget, the collective naturally loses all interest in seeking reserves to effect savings and increase profits. A gradual transition from financial apportionment to the taxation principle is envisaged under the new economic management conditions. Either absolute figures for mandatory payments into the budget or for deductions payable to higher-ranking organizations, or firm normatives for the proportional distribution of planned and above-plan profits will be set for enterprises in advance and for a long-term period. Collectives acquire a real interest in increasing swiftly and steadily their net income — the source of the funds for development, material incentives, social and cultural measures, and housing construction.

The application of economic methods of management is impossible without stepping up the role of goods-money relations. It is these relations that must provide a flexible coupling between production, distribution, and consumption. The most important advantage of these relations is the fact that the machinery of their operation forces every producer to boost quality and reduce expenditure, which means seeking out and swiftly implementing the achievements of science and technology, advanced experience, and innovation. The idea is simple enough: Prices are used to impose on enterprises a rigorous normative for socially necessary expenditure. If their individual costs are below this normative, they earn additional profits. If they are above it, nobody introduces any amendments, losses are not made good, and they are forced to reorganize themselves.

Another important avenue of the reform of the economic machinery is the organization of the wholesale trade in means of production. At present the turnover stage is virtually nonexistent in the process of their reproduction. The consequences are highly lamentable: Enterprises are forced to create larger reserves of material values; funds turnover is slowing down; and material and technical supplies suffer from chronic disruptions. The system of advance requisitions for materials and components hinders the introduction of new articles and extends the time taken for their assimilation.

The planned reform of management envisages that it will acquire a modern organizational structure taking into account the trends toward concentration, specialization, and production sharing. All collective labor needs an organization which ensures order and coordination in actions and gives these actions a certain direction and purposefulness. Now we are faced with the need to seek new and more efficient structures of coupling science and production, integrating related production processes, and creating territorial-production and intersectorial associations. Industry is basically switching to the two-tier system of management and the basic tiers — enterprises and associations — are being strengthened. This restructuring is not a goal in itself. Its purpose is to ensure improved quality of management and, as a result, attain high end results from the nationwide labor cooperation.

But perhaps the main avenue of the restructuring of management is its comprehensive democratization. Working people in our country have always participated in the solution of state and economic questions but mainly through their representatives on soviet, party, and trade union organs. The new approach involves the awakening of mass initiative and creativeness — the driving force which is capable of practically implementing the planned qualitative restructuring of management. It is for these purposes that labor collectives have been given the right to solve directly a broad range of questions concerning production and social development.

The need for this is evident. We all are the joint owners of the means of production. The relations of socialist ownership not only give each one of us rights but also impose a great responsibility. The essence of this responsibility is simple: Whether you want it or not, whether you understand it or not, if you are passive in management, if you allow yourself and others a couldn't-care-less and indifferent attitude toward the people's wealth, you must bear both material and moral responsibility for this.

In order to accelerate economic growth, it is necessary to set all reserves in motion. They do exist; and if everyone were to look around more carefully, they will be found. The only thing that is needed is not to tolerate losses or a slack attitude toward the work at hand. This is the main condition for efficient economic management, and without it, it is impossible to achieve a better life for each and every one.

In another interview Vladimir Timofeyevich Charykov, chief of the Labor, Wages, and Industrial Safety Administration at the USSR Ministry of Railways, says that the experiment is to be implemented at a number of other railways: Oktyabrskyay, Pribaltiyskaya, Lvov, Odessa, Moldavia, Yuzhnaya, Severokavkazskaya, Alma Ata, Central Asia, and the Minsk underground. Charykov says that over 30,000 workers have been freed in the first quarter of this year. In 1986 alone, through a reduction of 45,000 workers involved in rail transportation on these lines, labor productivity over the network as a whole will rise by (?1.7) percent. Charykov considers that the introduction of this experiment will allow labor productivity on the railways to be increased by 17-20 percent by the end of the current 5-year plan, and will free over 200,000 workers for the national economy.

Spring Sowing Progress Throughout Nation Reviewed

[O. Pavlov "Agricultural Review": "Springtime Reckoning"]

[Text] The week that has passed brought heavy rainfall over a large part of the country. Temperatures in Estonia and Latvia dropped so low that the ground was temporarily covered with snow. Yet farms in 12 union republics engaged in field work. It is true that sowing was not being done everywhere, but the soil was being prepared and fertilizers were being applied. Spring has actually, one way or another, come upon us earlier than in previous years, but the decision of how, when, and what should be done in the fields is entirely in the crop farmer's hands.

It has to be noted that work proceeds at a good pace provided that weather conditions permit it. Rostov Oblast machine operators, for example, have organized their work well under complex conditions. They have had to resow winter crops over quite a large area and, in addition to that, they have a large area allocated to spring crops — almost 2.6 million hectares. This includes an area of about 1 million hectares for grain and pulse crops. The oblast's farms have now sown more grain crops than in any other territory of the RSFSR. But only time will tell what the harvest yields will be. It is not always possible to make good all the damage suffered by the winter crop fields.

Unfortunately, this is not the first year that extensive resowing work has to be done in Belgorod, Voronezh, and Kursk Oblasts. This fact indicates that the standards of winter crop and perennial grass cultivation there need to be seriously examined. Nor is this the first year that we speak of poor harvest yields from grain crops in Rostov, Voronezh, and several other oblasts, which are by no means suffering from the worst natural and climatic conditions. It must be noted that considerable potential is concentrated there within agricultural science establishments. It is impossible to claim that the corps of specialists at rayon level is understaffed or that agronomists on farms are inadequately trained. Moreover, resources and efforts have been invested in the introduction of industrial technologies in winter crop fields. Yet, recently we have observed with alarm the development of the situation in these oblasts, which determine the level of the country's grain production.

Good news has started arriving now. Rain has come to the southern Ukraine following the earlier heatwave. But winter crops have been damaged even there. Of course, the southern region has a chance to make good the damage by means of crops like corn. All this, however, involves additional expenditure of labor and funds.

There is, of course, no need to paint an entirely black picture. Modern crop farmers, particularly those who have mastered the intensive technologies, are capable of managing harvest yields even under complex weather conditions. It was noted at the 27th party congress that the assimilation of intensive technologies will make it possible, in 1985 alone, to reap an additional 16 million metric tons of grains and a significant quantity of other produce.

The potential of new technological solutions in crop farming is extremely high. It is only necessary to make full use of them, to not simplify the solutions, and to rigorously observe all agrotechnical regulations and technological discipline. It is also necessary to constantly augment one's knowledge.

A certain amount of conservatism is, unfortunately, still extant in agronomical circles. On the one hand, this is understandable: Unchecked and at times, even nonsensical innovations were forced on agronomists too persistently and clumsily in the past. The cause suffered, the soil suffered, and people lost their taste for creative work. Now, however, is the time to display independence, to shoulder responsibility for bold decisions, and to wage an active struggle for innovations. This includes technology. Alas, not everything is running smoothly. For example, Kurgan Oblast's agro-industrial committee and scientists recently verified thoroughly the standard of their agronomists' knowledge of industrial technology, bearing in mind that these agronomists had undergone a far from brief training. One-third of specialists were graded as "failed." This is why harvest yields in the oblast are patchy and why there are so many shortcomings in the fields.

...Meanwhile, the front of field work is expanding. Lithuania, Belorussia, Orel, Ryazan, Tula, Vladimir, the Volga Region, Uralsk Oblast, the Far East — this is roughly the front line of springtime sowing. Siberia and north Kazakhstan have yet to embark on it. This is understandable. The best time still lies ahead. Now, it is necessary to prepare the equipment and implements as best as possible, and here and there it is still possible to improve the quality of the seeds.

Work has begun in the vegetable plantations in the south. North Osetia's farms have completed the sowing. Seeds of new, regionalized varieties of radishes, carrots, green peas, sweet peppers, cucumbers, tomatoes, and edible greens have been sown in well-tilled, fertilized soil. Introducing industrial technologies in the cultivation of vegetable crops, the farms plan to open the vegetable deliveries season somewhat earlier than usual.

The work that has to be done in the fields increases day by day. It is, however, important that springtime reckoning should not be just a matter of days or hectares, but should be primarily aimed at high end results, which would set the tone for 5-year plan period.

Progress in Current Agricultural Work Evaluated

PM281535 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 15 Apr 86 Second Edition p 1

[Editorial: "Arable Farmers out in the Fields"]

[Excerpt] The extensive use of advanced methods of work organization is a characteristic sign of this spring. The scale on which intensive techniques are being applied in arable farming has increased in the country as a whole. This work requires a high level of skill and responsibility. A formal attitude to advanced methods, just going through the motions, cannot be allowed. It must be ensured that these techniques universally produce a handsome increase in yields and repay the outlay with interest. Specialists of farms and agro-industrial enterprises must help arable farmers fully master the innovations and introduce zonal soil-conservation arable farming systems, since the accelerated development of crop cultivation is to be achieved to a large extent on that basis.

The tasks facing arable farmers are not easy, they demand great exertion of effort. In recent years arable farming yields have stood still in some places and there has been no increase in the crops grown. This particularly concerns many farms in Voronezh, Vladimir, and Ural oblasts. A radical improvement in the state of affairs in crop cultivation is needed if a dramatic turnaround is to be achieved. It is specially necessary to execute every agrotechnical method to a high standard and to sow high-quality seed on well-prepared soil at the best time. Party organs and kolkhoz and sovkhoz leaders must inculcate in people intolerance toward shortcomings and routine and a desire to achieve the highest possible results with the least expenditure of labor and resources.

Special attention must be paid to reclaimed land. Care must be taken to ensure that irrigation and drainage systems are well prepared for the season. But this has not been considered everywhere. In Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, for example, large-scale sowing of cotton has begun, but not all the hydroengineering systems have been repaired yet. Collector and drainage lines are sometimes inoperative. Some farms are making poor use of scientifically based crop rotation. Land reclamation workers and farmers must increase the yields on improved land more quickly and seek to obtain the planned harvests. A careful attitude to water and other irrigated land resources counts for a lot here.

Spring field work is proceeding best of all where people are making skillful use of equipment. Pacesetters have long since fixed their equipment and checked it down to the last detail. Motor vehicles have been handed over to experienced machine operators working according to the collective contract method. Schedules have been drawn up, routes worked out, and care taken to ensure that units are efficiently maintained. Nevertheless, sowing work caught engineering service workers unawares in a number of places. A considerable number of tractors were still not ready for use on farms in Kostroma and Perm Oblasts and the Udmurt ASSR at the beginning of April. There are many Kirovets tractors in disrepair in the Kazakhstan virgin lands. There are frequent interruptions in the supply of spare parts to repair workers. For example, a number of farms in Georgia lack tractor parts, sprayers, and other mechanisms. Clearly, people have been paying less attention to current work in some places. The situation must be put right as quickly as possible.

During sowing time the place for specialists belonging to rayon agro-industrial associations and agro-industrial committees is in the fields and on the farms. It is important that rural workers reorganize themselves to work in the new way and develop a taste for creativity from the very outset of the harvest campaign. What management bodies must do now is not command or dictate the methods of sowing or soil cultivation but help to get things going and help the assimilation of progressive labor organization procedures and methods, financial autonomy, and the contract system. There is no place for red tape, speechifying, or an armchair style. During sowing, specialists must continue assimilating the new economic management mechanism and revealing its potential in practice.

The spring harvesting season has also reached the non-Chernozem Zone. It is a region of large potential. Substantial investments were made in the region's agro-industrial complex in the last two 5-year plans. However, they are still not yielding the required return. Many farms have low harvests. Reclaimed fields are making a poor return on investment. The task facing rural workers and their agro-industrial partners is to achieve a breakthrough and bring the production potential created there fully into operation. Life demands that grain and vegetable growing be developed more energetically and that more feed be procured for livestock. It is also necessary to pay increased attention to the non-Chernozem Zone's traditional sector — flax growing. The position there is not gratifying either. Sowing time is approaching, but there is a lack of long-stemmed flax seed in Kalinin and Pskov oblasts. No concern was shown to purchase it in good time.

Field Preparation in Non-Chernozem Zone Reported

PM251540 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Apr 86
First Edition p 1

[V. Yakovlev "Agricultural Review": "The Wide-Open Spaces of the Non-Chernozem Zone"]

[Text] The USSR Central Statistical Administration reports that by 21 April spring crops had been sown on 26.2 million hectares in the country. Grain and pulse crops (excluding corn) accounted for 13.1 million of them. Cotton growers and workers on beet plantations are increasing the scale of their operations: In the past week they have sown hundreds of thousands of hectares. The vegetable growers in the southernmost farms have different preoccupations: They are already tending the crops.

The busy period has also arrived for the farmers in Russia's non-Chernozem Zone. As is customary, the spring work program was opened by the detachments whose job it is to top-dress the winter crops and perennial grasses. This work is currently being done all over the region.

There is a solicitous attitude toward the fields on many farms in Tula Oblast. In the last 5-year plan they considerably increased production and purchases of grain. The farmers are placing the emphasis on intensive techniques: They provide an increase of nine and more quintals of grain per hectare compared with conventional techniques.

But stagnation in the grain sector has not yet been overcome in most rayons. Harvests are poor and the return on expenditure is poor. The state has allocated a large amount of mineral fertilizer to the non-Chernozem farms. It should provide a large quantity of extra products. But because of mismanagement and violation of agricultural techniques the opposite often happens. For example, kolkhozes and sovkhozes in Bryansk, Vladimir, and Ryazan Oblasts have increased the doses of mineral fertilizers for grain crops. But instead of increasing, yields have fallen. This was due to the excessive acidity of some fields and the careless use of the fertilizers.

In a number of places the accelerated development of the grain sector is being hampered by stagnation and by production leaders who are clinging to their grandfathers' agricultural methods. The advantages of intensive techniques in grain farming are clear for all to see. But they are slow to take root. Some people report that they are placing land under intensive cultivation, but they then use the old methods on it. Technological discipline is often violated on such fields in Kostroma and Yaroslavl Oblasts. The result is, of course, that a large quantity of products is lost. Last fall kolkhozes and sovkhozes in the Mordovian and Mari ASSR's failed to meet targets for sowing winter crops by intensive techniques.

The kolkhozes and sovkhozes of the non-Chernozem Zone possess a mighty technical potential. They have over 500,000 tractors alone. A vast pool of other machinery has been created. According to specialists, spring field work can be carried out at the very best times using that kind of equipment. But not everyone is managing to. Tardy preparation of units is largely to blame. At a time when speed is of the essence, some people are still being let down by "rear services." At the beginning of April a large number of tractors werestill awaiting repairs at workshops in Vologda, Ivanovo, Kirov, and some other oblasts. In Komi ASSR 14 percent of the grain drills were awaiting repairs.

There are large areas of new land in the non-Chernozem Zone. It can provide good harvests. But on many kolkhozes and sovkhozes drained land is giving a meager return. It is important now for farmers and reclamation organization personnel to make sure the improved land is in good order.

But not all people are conscientiously preparing the new arable land for the growing season. The reclamation workers of Mobile Mechanized Column-11 turned over to the "Smychka" Kolkhoz in Pskov Oblast around 700 hectares that had not been properly prepared. Consequently, the large farm, which lies near the village of Besedino, is using only one-half of its land. The drains are already partially blocked with mud, although it is less than two years since the system was introduced. The grass sown last year has rotted. The defects were there for all to see. But kolkhoz chairman V. Lukashevich and the other personnel who agreed to accept the land behaved in an unprincipled way and turned a blind eye to the poor-quality drainage and soil preparation. The reclamation workers were told to repair the damage. Although the new sowing season is just around the corner, the people responsible for the unfinished work have not put in an appearance.

Mass sowing is about to begin in the wide-open spaces of the non-Chernozem Zone. The region's farmers are joining the rest of the country on the path of acceleration.

Sowing Campaign Under Way; Good Conditions Reported

LD241359 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1500 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Text] The sowing campaign is under way in all union republics except Estonia. According to data we received today from the USSR Central Statistical Administration, by the beginning of the week spring crops had been sown on over 26 million hectares. Half of this area was taken up by grain crops. Widespread sowing is going ahead now along the Volga. In the last few days, sowing began in Penza and Ulyanovsk Oblasts. Farms of the south of the non-Chernozem Zone are sowing spring crops. In the last few days there was precipitation over a significant territory of the country which has replenished stores of moisture. This creates good conditions for the young shoots. In the Ukraine and North Caucasus, the sowing of millet, buckwheat, and rice has begun. Grain corn, sunflower, and sugar beet crops have already been sown over a significant area. These days the farms of the southernmost regions are beginning to sow soya, a crop that requires warmth. In the republics of Central Asia, cotton sowing is nearing completion. Feed crops have now been sown over a significantly greater area than in previous years in the country.

'Progress-26' Docks With 'Mir'-'Soyuz T-15'

LD262235 Moscow TASS in English 2230 GMT 26 Apr 86

[TASS announcement]

[Text] [no dateline as received] — The Progress-26 spacecraft docked with the manned orbital complex Mir — Soyuz T-15 at 01.26, Moscow time, on April 27, 1986 [2126 GMT 26 April].

The mutual search, rendezvous, tethering and docking were carried out by means of the onboard automatic equipment of the spaceships. The processes were monitored by the mission control centre in cooperation with the ground command instrumentation complex as well as by cosmonauts Kizim and Solovev. The cargo spacecraft docked with the station on the side of the service compartment.

The Progress-26 spacecraft delivered fuel for the joint propulsion unit, food, water, complementary equipment and apparatus for the Mir station, as well as mail.

According to telemetric data and crew reports, the onboard systems of the manned complex Mir — Soyuz T-15 — Progress-26 are functioning normally. The state of Leonid Kizim's and Vladimir Solovyev's health is good, and they are feeling well.

[Signed] TASS, April 27.

Crew Unloading 'Progress-26'

LD280847 Moscow Television Service in Russian 0730 GMT 28 Apr 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast]

[Text] The flight of the Mir — Soyuz T-15 — Progress-26 orbital station is continuing. Today, Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev will basically be involved with the unloading of the transportation vessel. The crew will carry out a 2-hour physical training session, and will carry out geophysical experiments in line with the program for the study of the environment. According to reports from the orbit and according to telemetric data, the flight is proceeding normally. The state of health and the sense of well-being of both cosmonauts is good.

Technical Problems Discussed

LD272305 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1730 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Summary] Cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev have been working in orbit for over 2 months. Today they started to unlaod the latest Progress-26 cargo craft that is moored at the Mir station. Our correspondent Petr Pelekhov talked to the cosmonauts during one communications session.

[Begin recording] [Pelekhov] Are you happy with the station, are there any problems?

[Cosmonaut] On the whole we are satisfied with the station, but problems and failures also crop up, as is invariably the case with complex technology. However we get over them. For example, we had a big problem with the communications system. We could not adjust it for a long time, but now, as you see, we are talking without major interruptions so this problem has been solved as well.

Transferring additional equipment to the station and checking the operating condition of the systems will end the first stage of our work at the station. It is pleasing to think we will have completed everything in the flight plan for that period. This work has been interesting and varied.

[Pelekhov] Yesterday you mentioned some difficulties in connection with Africa, you did not get a good view of something over there...

[Cosmonaut] We worked yesterday on behalf of geophysicists who want to obtain data about the distance at which a cosmonaut can discriminate colors, but in the Southern Hemisphere, in Africa, the color spectrum of their vegetation has already become limited, so to speak...and I told earth that they should pick regions for observation where the color spectrum is wider and better so that we can fulfill all tasks in the interests of geophysics.

Progress of 'Astron,' 'Vega' Projects Updated

LD251545 Moscow TASS in English 1545 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 25 TASS — The astrophysical station Astron which was put into a high elliptic orbit of an artificial earth satellite on March 23, 1983, has been in operation for the fourth year now.

In the course of the flight, nearly 500 radio-communication sessions were held. In the course of these sessions, according to the joint programmes of scientists of the USSR, the GDR, France and Italy, diverse research of stars, galaxies, nebulae and Halley's Comet was carried out. A number of important scientific results have been achieved by ultraviolet and X-ray telescopes installed in the Astron station. Thus an unusually high content of superheavy elements was found in the atmospheres of some stars, a new type of star flares has been discovered, earlier unknown peculiarities of ultraviolet radiation of active galaxies have been detected, the character of the change in the velocity of outflow of matter from very hot stars has been determined.

The information on Halley's Comet received from the Astron station complements the measurement data from the automatic interplanetary stations Vega-1 and Vega-2. According to estimates of experts, in one passage near the sun, the Halley's Comet loses nearly 400 million tons of substance from its nucleus.

Even after completion of the studies of the comet the Vega stations continue measuring the characteristics and properties of the inter-planetary environment. At present Vega-1 is at a distance of 217 million kilometres and Vega-2 — 198 million kilometres.

According to the data of telemetric measurements, the onboard systems and scientific instruments of the automatic stations Vega-1, Vega-2 and Astron are functioning normally.

SOVIETS LINK CHERNOBYL ACCIDENT TO ARMS CONTROL

LD291347 Moscow World Service in English 1310 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Yuriy Soiton commentary]

[Text] It has been announced in Moscow that an accident took place at the nuclear power plant in Chernobyl, the Ukraine. Here's what our commentator Yuriy Solton writes:

One of the station's nuclear reactors was damaged and a special government commission of enquiry was set up to investigate the causes of the accident. The consequences of the accident are being dealt with and aid is being given to those who were injured. The accident is the first in more than 30 years of the operation of nuclear power plants in the USSR. This fact shows that they are highly reliable but however carefully nuclear power plants may be planned to protect the people and the environment it is impossible to foresee everything. There is always a degree of risk involved in using nuclear raw materials. According to THE NEW YORK TIMES for instance, in 1985 alone the United States Administration had to close down six nuclear power plants because they threatened the safety of the population.

The consequences of a major accident at Three Mile Island, Pennsylvania, in 1979 are still felt in the United States today. That accident was caused by the criminal neglect of the plant's owners for the basic safety measures which resulted in a discharge of radioactive substances into the atmosphere and a great deal of damage to the health of local residents. Many of them are still suffering from exposure related diseases.

Accidents and leaks of radioactive substances have also taken place in Britain and other countries. All these accidents took place at nuclear power plants using the power of the atom for peaceful purposes. One can easily imagine the amount of damage that may be caused by an accident at a military factory. Nuclear factories manufacture warheads whose yields are hundreds of times greater than that of the American atom bomb that devastated Hiroshima in 1945. An accident involving a military nuclear factory or a nuclear missile on combat duty would have terrible consequences, and indeed there have been quite a few occasions when American missiles were on the brink of such an accident.

The power of the atom can bring enormous benefits and indeed it is bringing them, but the same power put into warheads is capable of wiping out all life on earth. The only way to remove that grim prospect is to abolish all nuclear weapons once and for all. The Soviet Union is proposing that this be done by the turn of the century and that is a realistic task if a responsible approach is adopted to it.

[Text] Geneva April 29 TASS -- The preparatory committee of the second conference to review the operation of the convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and on their destruction is in session here. The main purpose of the conference is to discuss ways for further consolidation of the important document. The preparatory committee will determine a date for the holding of the conference and will consider some other organisational matters. Open to signature in 1972, the convention became one of the first measures of real disarmament and an important contribution to the creation of a system of international treaties and agreements which curb the arms race. More than a hundred countries are now parties to the convention.

GENERAL CLAIMS U.S. ATTEMPTING TO UNDERMINE SALT II

PM291055 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 27 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Major General Yu. Viktorov article: "SALT II: The United States Is Preparing To Undermine (the Treaty)]

[Text] Sea trials of the new (Ohio class) submarine Nevada equipped with 24 Trident-1 ICBM launchers are to begin in the United States on 20 May. In order not to exceed the limit of 1,200 launchers for MIRVed ICBM's and SLBM's permitted under the Soviet-U.S. SALT II treaty, the United States must either dismantle two of its old corresponding number of Minuteman missile launchers.

The prospect of this kind of "disarmament" in the face of "Soviet military might" has sparked off a storm of indignation in the conservative right wing of the U.S. Republican Party that has been seized by a fit of chauvinism. There has probably never been such a protracted and embittered struggle waged within the administration as the current struggle concerning the question of compliance with the provisions of the SALT II treaty. Downright hysterical appeals to write off this document as obsolete have been heard. At the same time, Pentagon officials have openly demanded that the aforementioned Poseidon submarines be retained in service.

Furthermore, C. Bennett, member of the House Armed Services Committee has proposed that the "16 Poseidon ballistic missile launchers be replaced by a minimum of 30 vertical nuclear-tipped Tomahawk cruise missile launchers." "By arming ourselves with Poseidon submarines modified as powerful cruise missile carriers," he explained his 'option' in THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, "we would obtain more sea-launched nuclear warheads than we have now." The zealous advocates of a "strong America" also favor another direct violation of the SALT II treaty; they are proposing that existing Minuteman-2 missiles (with one warhead) be replaced by Minuteman-3 missiles (with 3 warheads).

Clearly, the people across the ocean intend to scrap the SALT II treaty which, though unratified, has been observed until now. They are seeking, in particular, the unconstrained deployment of sea- and ground-launched long-range cruise missiles. They would like the Pentagon to be able, in addition to completing the MX missile tests, to complete the development [razrabotka] of another new ICBM -- the Midgetman. According to the Baltimore newspaper, THE SUN, the U.S. Air Force has already concluded contracts totaling near $1.5 million for planning and design work connected with the Midgetman, while Congress has appropriated $624.6 million for the current fiscal year alone.

These and other demands to preserve and develop the U.S. "deterrent" at all costs have been given a "fitting" propaganda backing. For the umpteenth time, a frenzied ballyhoo inspired by the "hawks" has been launched in the United States to "accuse" the Soviet Union of "having violated" treaty obligations. The absurdity of these attacks has been refuted more than once and convincingly. Moreover, the provocative problem around the Soviet-U.S. agreements has provoked doubts even in the United States itself. "In all probability," THE NEW YORK TIMES, for instance, wrote recently, "it was highly irresponsible on the part of the administration to officially accuse the Soviet Union of having violated the overall quantitative limits stipulated by SALT II, while up-to-date [operativnyye] data published by the Committee of the Chiefs of Staff indicate that the Russians are quite conscientiously abiding by the required limits."

However, despite the real state of affairs, the fabrications concocted in Washington to cast doubt on the USSR's honesty continue to be widely used by the U.S. Administration with the aim of duping the public and extorting funds to launch a new round of the arms race.

And -- most important -- they are used by the White House to justify its own intentions to disregard Soviet-U.S. agreements in the future, agreements which have so far prevented the Pentagon from building up its militarist "muscles" at an "astronomical rate" as the military-industrial complex would have it.

It is well known that rather than the United States, the USSR has very serious grounds to question the compliance by the other side with accords reached in the past. Is it perhaps an indication of the Washington leadership's serious attitude toward its obligations when the United States consigns to oblivion the accords elaborated jointly with the USSR defining the aim of the new talks on nuclear and space arms, for instance? Judging by appearances, the people in the White House prefer not even to mention their recent "desire" to seek an end to the arms race on earth and to prevent the arms race from spreading to space.

Washington officialdom has long been seeking to undermine the SALT II treaty, violating, or teetering on the brink of violating, a number of its articles and provisions. The "technique" used in this kind of action has been rehearsed down to the smallest detail. First, the Pentagon's needs are identified, that is to say it is determined which treaty or which particular article is hampering it from creating and deploying new arms. Then a suitable counterpart is chosen among Soviet arms limited under a given agreement. At the next stage, false "arguments" are concocted, designed in the intention of their authors if not to pillory the "violator," then at least to cast doubt on the USSR's honesty. The assistance of the news media is enlisted. And another orgy of anti-Soviet propaganda is launched. The fact that all the arguments are pure and simple lies does not worry anyone.

The inspirers and organizers of the arms race in the United States were in dire need of arguments of this kind now when the West European NATO countries with whom Washington consulted on the stance to be taken on SALT II reacted negatively to the "evasive maneuvers" staged by the White House. They let the United States know without beating around the bush that its "halfway measures" (such as proposing to put the two Poseidon nuclear submarines into dry dock) are nothing but a clear and provocative violation of the treaty. The West Europeans reaffirmed that their governments would not be pleased by any steps taken by Washington with the aim of undermining the treaty or directly violating its provisions.

These are just some of the facts which reflect the attitude of the United States to its treaty obligations. However, having released a dirty wave of accusations against the Soviet Union, the Washington administration was put under pressure by its West European allies and sober-minded people in its own country. It then resorted to a diversionary maneuver. Hypocritical noises were made on the lines of "America must go another mile to meet the Soviet Union." Compliance with adopted treaty obligations is depicted as some kind of "favor"! In its approach to treaty obligations, the Soviet Union proceeds from the premise that they must be strictly complied with. That is, complied with by all who accepted them.

DAILY COMMENTS ON U.S. REJECTION OF TEST BAN

PM291336 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 28 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[V. Lukin article: "The Reasons for the Explosions in Nevada"]

[Text] The nuclear explosion carried out by the United States in Nevada on 10 April sounded an alarm throughout the world. It dispelled the still glimmering hopes of hundreds of millions of people that the U.S. Administration would nevertheless respond to the Soviet Union's appeal and join its unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions that was announced on 6 August 1985.

The United States carried out a new nuclear explosion the other day, and it is reported that the White House has scheduled a program of further explosions in Nevada. Washington is trying to present its entire nuclear orgy as if it were an ordinary, routine matter. But the international public correctly regards U.S. actions as a crime against humanity. The U.S. leaders have rejected the unique opportunity afforded them of taking right now the first practical step toward nuclear disarmament and the elimination of nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

This opportunity did not come about by itself. The Soviet Union and the other socialist countries have been waging a consistent struggle to achieve a general and complete ban on nuclear weapons tests. The vast majority of countries in the world are also in favor of this.

After exhausting every means for obtaining agreement from its partners at talks on this problem, the Soviet Union, as a sign of goodwill, stopped all its nuclear explosions beginning on the 40th commemoration of "Hiroshima Day" through 1 January 1986, and subsequently through 31 March this year, urging the other nuclear powers, above all the United States, to follow its example.

Both in 1985 and this year, Washington's only "response" has been nuclear explosions in Nevada. Therefore, as of 31 March, the Soviet Union has had every reason to resume its own nuclear explosions. During those 8 months, in which the other side escalated its tests, the Soviet Union showed restraint. It was, of course, impossible to forego forever its own defense and national economic interests. However, in response to the appeal by the leaders of the "Delhi Six," our country extended its moratorium until the first U.S. nuclear explosion.

The moment of truth had arrived: The whole world was awaiting the answer to whether the U.S. Administration really favored the elimination of nuclear armaments or whether its verbal assurances were just hot air and a cover for its line of continuing the race. Washington, unfortunately, did not heed the voice of reason.

The Soviet Government statement on the explosion carried out by the United States on 10 April says bluntly that Washington's irresponsible actions "conceal the intention to continue to threaten mankind with a nuclear sword and maintain mankind in dread of universal destruction, which the selfish, imperial ambitions of the U.S. military-industrial complex have again placed above the interests of mankind."

What, then, are the real motives behind this sharply negative U.S. attitude toward a nuclear test ban? The main reason is that the present administration has not abandoned its futile gamble on achieving military superiority. And nuclear weapons are allocated an important role in these plans.

According to Western press reports, the Pentagon is carrying out nearly 20 programs to create [sozdaniye] new types of nuclear war munitions. Most of them are already testing stage. These include nuclear charges for the latest MX, Trident-2, and Midgetman ICBM's and bombs for the new B-1B and Stealth bombers. It has also become known that so-called third generation nuclear weapons, in which nuclear-pumped X-ray lasers predominate, were undergoing tests as part of the "star wars" program long before the President declared his notorious SDI. In 1985, for example, almost one-fourth of the 18 nuclear tests in Nevada were used to continue the process of proving them.

A group of congressmen, in a letter to Reagan, demonstrate on the basis of actual figures that more than 95 percent of nuclear tests (784 out of 817), throughout the years these tests have been carried out, have had the aim of checking the quality of newly created [sozdannyy] charges or refining [otrabotka] fundamentally new types of nuclear weapons.

Improvement in nuclear munitions also stimulates the development [razvitiye] of the means of delivering them. In their turn, the new delivery vehicles spur on the development [razrabotka] of even more sophisticated combat charges, and so forth. A closed circuit is created out of which it is possible to break only by banning nuclear tests. Ending nuclear explosions would thus freeze any further development [razvitiye] of the technology of nuclear combat munitions and their delivery vehicles. There would also be a simultaneous halt to the quantitative buildup of nuclear charges. The remaining combat munitions would, through obsolescence, gradually lose their reliability and combat capability. There would be a powerful incentive to reduce them to the point of complete elimination.

But the most important thing is that the nuclear tests today are opening up the way for an arms race in new spheres. What is involved is the creation [sozdaniye] of weapons in the United States for "star wars" and the emergence of a qualitatively new threat to the world security. Nor does the Pentagon for the most part hide this. In addition to the testing [otrabotka] in Nevada of an X-ray laser triggered by a nuclear explosion, the Pentagon plans other tests to create [sozdaniye] nuclear microwave and accelerator weapons, kinetic energy nuclear weapons, and various other types of space-strike arms. But again this dangerous turn of events can be prevented by banning nuclear explosions.

What does Washington's stubborn refusal to resolve the problem of completely ending nuclear tests mean if not an intention on its part to continue to seek military superiority over the USSR and NATO bloc superiority over the Warsaw Pact?

To camouflage their negative approach, the U.S. leaders devise various "arguments." Unconvincing statements about the United States "lagging behind" in carrying out nuclear tests in recent years is now the most popular. The facts, however, indicate the opposite: To date, the United States has carried out more nuclear explosions than all the other nuclear powers combined. In the last 5-10 years, the United States has regularly outstripped the Soviet Union in terms of nuclear tests by one-third. And in 1985, the United States carried out 18 tests, whereas the USSR carried out only 9, and a number of them were for peaceful, national economic purposes. Thus in terms of nuclear weapons tests, the United States has not only substantially outstripped the USSR but is constantly increasing the gap in its favor. And given the incontrovertible figures, the claims about some kind of "lag" indicate that the White House would like to reserve the "right" to continue creating [sozdavat] more and more new types of nuclear weapons and whipping up the arms race. The United States and NATO also claim that the Warsaw Pact has an "advantage" over the NATO bloc in conventional arms. Therefore, it is said, NATO needs to retain its nuclear "deterrence" potential. And nuclear tests are required if its efficiency is to be maintained.

Here the U.S. and NATO leaders deliberately resort to deception in an attempt to intimidate their populations with the USSR's "superarmament." In actual fact, the balance of conventional weapons between NATO and Warsaw Pact forces is not only close to parity but is even in the West's favor. On the whole there is rough equality.

It is well known that the United States has blocked many talks in the disarmament sphere -- on nuclear and space arms, on chemical weapons, on conventional weapons, and on armed forces in central Europe -- by citing difficulties in verification [kontrol]. Washington's cheating on questions of verification [kontrol] was exposed before the whole world public during the Soviet moratorium on all nuclear explosions. The Soviet side put forth bold, constructive proposals to organize effective verification [kontrol] of the ending of nuclear tests. As the Soviet leadership has pointed out, verification [kontrol] is not a problem for us.

Above all, the USSR, the United States, and many other countries in the world possess sophisticated national technical means capable of highly reliable monitoring [proverka] of nuclear explosions.

Moreover, the United States and NATO have a geographical advantage in that they have set up a network of seismic stations around the USSR's territory. They number around 200, as opposed to the Soviet Union's approximately 20, that is to say a ratio of 10:1. Even American experts in the control [kontrol] sphere acknowledge that the system is quite capable of registering even the weakest nuclear explosion.

It is quite possible to reach agreement on international monitoring [proverka] measures and to take up the proposal of the leaders of the "Delhi Six" on creating special stations on their territory to monitor [nablyudeniye] fulfillment of an accord ending tests. The Soviet Union advocates the most strict monitoring [proverka], including on-the-spot inspection [inspektsii na meste]. Time has shown, however, that the United States does not want an end to nuclear tests or a reliable verification [kontrol] system. And the various "arguments" are merely attempts to disinform the world public. As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, it is ready at any time to return to the question of a joint moratorium on nuclear explosions if the United States for its part states that it will not carry out such explosions.

Our country, pursuing the peace-loving course of the 27th CPSU Congress, opens its doors to any form of talks on a general and complete ban on nuclear weapons tests and is ready for any form of accord on this vitally important question of the nuclear space age. The main thing is to achieve a practical result.

ZHOLKVER COMMENTS ON WEU TALKS IN VENICE

LD300634 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Aleksandr Zholkver commentary]

[Excerpts] A session of the council of the West European Union [WEU] opened today in Venice at the level of ministers of foreign affairs and defense. For a news commentary, our Political Observer Aleksandr Zholkver is at the microphone:

West European agencies put as item number one on the agenda a discussion of the new USSR proposal on reducing conventional weapons discussed by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev at the SED congress in Berlin. I managed to attend the congress, and I saw with my own eyes at the Press Center, where there were accredited over 400 foreign journalists, the great interest immediately raised by this initiative, which envisages a considerable reduction in all components of infantry and tactical air forces of the European states, and also of the corresponding forces of the United States and Canada stationed in Europe.

This still unabating interest is fully understandable. After all, in Europe there are two 3 million-strong groups facing each other, equipped with the very latest weapons. Incidentally, the so-called conventional weapons are becoming increasingly powerful and sophisticated, approaching in their combat characteristics, mass destruction weapons. All this naturally worries densely inhabited Europe. It is precisely for this reason that there is such active support there for all ideas intended to diminish the level of the dangerous military confrontation on the European Continent. One cannot fail, however, to mention something else. At the meeting of defense ministers of the 13 NATO West European countries, that was recently held in Madrid, the talk was, unfortunately, not about reducing, but about building up those same conventional weapons. Indeed, the present session of the WEU council plans to discuss military programs, including the participation of Western Europe in U.S. star wars plans. All this, naturally cannot but cause alarm. The situation in Europe is too complex and dangerous to welcome in words the Soviet proposals for reducing weapons, while in deeds to engage in increasing weapons.

CEMA SCIENTISTS DISCUSS DEVELOPMENT ISSUES, PROBLEMS

LD290946 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 2102 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Prague, 28 Apr (TASS) -- A wide range of cooperation issues in the sphere of research in genetics, selection, and seed breeding of grain crops was discussed at a session of scientists and specialists from eight socialist countries held in Prague. Particular attention was given to resolving questions deriving from the comprehensive program of scientific and technical progress of the CEMA member-countries through the year 2000. Those participating in the session pointed out the existence of reserves which are in need of being utilized in a more purposeful manner. It was pointed out in particular that for a number of organizational and juridical reasons, insufficient work is being carried out in the Bulgarian People's Republic, GDR, USSR, and CSSR in fulfilling the working programs for cooperation in studying genetics and physiology, and in developing quality technology. Measures were adopted at the session to further interaction between the scientists and specialists of the CEMA countries in this sphere.

An SFRY delegation participated in the session in accordance with an agreement between CEMA and the SFRY Government.

Fulfilling the resolution of the 40th sitting of the CEMA session, the leaders of the countries' delegations held consultations on the further development of sectorial cooperation. They discussed questions of developing direct ties in scientific, technical, and economic cooperation, including with regard to strengthening and broadening international specialization and collaboration in the production of mining equipment, introducing electronics and automation into management and production at coal enterprises, and also a number of other questions.

The commission session examined and approved measures to fulfill the targets stemming from the resolutions of the 41st (extraordinary) sitting of the CEMA session and a number of sessions of the CEMA Executive Committee. The commission took note of the unified program of scientific research, technical and planning studies and drafting of agreements on cooperation in creating experimental installations and industrial enterprises for processing coal into other types of fuel. In addition, it examined the results of implementing the community members' joint scientific and technical developments in the coal industry sphere during 1981-1985.

It was pointed out at the session that introducing into production in the CEMA countries the results of completed topics of scientific and technical cooperation ensures a package of measures aimed at further raising the technical standard of production, increasing productivity, and improving working conditions in the coal industry. A number of other questions of scientific, technical, and economic cooperation in the sphere of the CEMA countries' coal industry were also examined. During the session a protocol was signed on the SFRY's joining the agreement on multilateral cooperation in the sphere of coal machine building for underground coal extraction. PM211246 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[TASS report: "CEMA Committee Session"]

[Text] The 38th session of the CEMA Committee on Cooperation in the Sphere of Planning Activity was held in Moscow 15-16 April.

Participating in it were I. Iliev, deputy chairman of the Bulgarian Council of Ministers and chairman of the State Planning Committee; L. Berenyi, deputy chairman of the Hungarian National Planning Office; Hoang Quy, first vice chairman of the SRV State Planing Commission; H. Mueller, deputy chairman of the GDR State Planning Commission; J. Fernandez Santana, vice chairman of the Central Planning Board of the Republic of Cuba; P. Jasray, deputy chairman of the Mongolian Council of Ministers and chairman of the State Planning Commission; M. Gorywoda, deputy chairman of the Polish Council of Ministers and chairman of the Planning Commission of the Council of Ministers; S. Birlea, chairman of the Romanian State Planning Committee; N. Talyzin, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR Gosplan; and S. Potac, CSSR deputy premier and chairman of the CSSR State Planning Commission.

In accordance with the agreement between CEMA and the SFRY Government, M. Sindic, general director of the Federal Social Planning Institute, participated in the work of the CEMA Committee on Cooperation in the Sphere of Planning Activity.

Ja'far Hamid Muhammad, representative of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen [PDRY] and PDRY deputy planning minister, participated in the committee session as an observer.

The session was chaired by N. Talyzin, the USSR's representative on the CEMA Committee on Cooperation in the Sphere of Planning Activity.

The committee examined the results of the coordination of plans for 1986-1990. It was pointed out that a new step has been taken in developing and deepening the CEMA countries' all-around cooperation and in implementing the decisions of the economic summit conference. The scale of economic ties has increased, the forms of cooperation have been enriched, and there has been an increase in the extent of the countries' cooperation in jointly solving important and complex problems if socioeconomic development.

The reciprocal deliveries of machinery, equipment, fuel, raw material goods and materials, agricultural products, and consumer goods, agreed on in the course of coordinating the plans, attest to the further improvement of cooperation, the deepening of socialist economic integration, and the efficient utilization of the advantages of the socialist division of labor.

Certain work has been done to improve the qualitative aspect of economic ties, to raise the technical standard of the products being delivered, and to accelerate scientific and technical progress in the CEMA countries.

The committee approved for submission to the CEMA session the report on the results of coordinating the CEMA countries' national economic plans for 1986-1990 and the draft concerted plan of the CEMA countries' multilateral integration measures for that period.

It was pointed out that the mobilization of the countries' own efforts and the results achieved in the course of coordinating the plans widen the potential for active interaction among the community countries' economies and create conditions for the national economy's steady development and for enhancing its efficiency in accordance with the tasks set by the fraternal countries' communist and workers' parties in the current 5-year period.

The leaders of the central planning organs agreed to continue work with a view to revealing new ways and opportunities to further expand cooperation, to develop production collaboration and specialization, and to increase mutual commodity turnover.

The countries' representatives on the committee reported that the national 5-year and annual plans reflect the obligations stemming from the agreements concluded on implementing the Comprehensive Program of the CEMA Countries Scientific and Technical Progress Through the Year 2000. Views with regard to preparing work on coordinating national economic plans for 1991-1995 were discussed.

The committee examined questions connected with the construction of the gas pipeline from Yamburg to the USSR's western border.

The committee session took place in a friendly and businesslike atmosphere.

They welcomed the peace initiatives of the USSR and other countries of the socialist community directed at stopping the arms race and liquidating nuclear arms, at preventing the militarisation of outer space.

Representatives of the public of socialist countries expressed alarm in connection with the increasing military activity of the United States in the Far East and the Pacific area. In this connection the participants in the conference especially emphasised the importance of the constructive proposals outlined in the April 23 statement of the Soviet Government to create an atmosphere of goodneighbourhood and friendship between countries of the Asian-Pacific region.

The conference adopted a statement which on behalf of the public in socialist countries firmly condemns the acts of barbarous aggression perpetrated by the United States against Libya.

They stated their full solidarity with the Libyan people firmly resisting Washington's [word indistinct] on its freedom and independence.

WEEKLY 'INTERNATIONAL OBSERVERS ROUNDTABLE'

LD277206 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1130 GMT 27 Apr 86

["International Observers Roundtable" with Dmitriy Antonovich Volskiy, member of the NOVOYE VREMYA editorial board; Vadim Nikolayevich Nekrasov, observer of KOMMUNIST; and Viktor Nikolayevich Levin, All-Union Radio commentator]

[Text] [Levin] Hello, esteemed comrade radio-listeners! In discussing this week's most important events, I would like to remind you of the conclusion of the work of the 11th SED Congress; of the Soviet-Afghan talks that took place in Moscow, and also, incidentally, the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution in Afghanistan, which is being marked today. The Soviet Government statement on issues of guaranteeing cooperation and security in the Asia and Pacific Ocean region and the World Peace Council session, which ends its work today in the Bulgarian capital, Sofia, deserve a good deal of attention. The visit to Moscow by the Czechoslovak minister of foreign affairs, Comrade Chnoupek, also occurred at the same time. All these events I cited lie in one category: the category of the struggle of peace-loving forces and the struggle of the Soviet Union and other countries in the socialist community for the consolidation of peace and for the triumph of ideals of social justice. Naturally, however, there are also events on another level which overshadow the development of the international situation and which again and again remind us that the international situation remains complex and tense. In this sense of events, one should first cite yet another nuclear blast carried out in the U.S. State of Nevada, and the continuing imperialistic and anti-Libyan campaign of threats, which are also accompanied by definite actions.

[Nekrasov] Well, I think, Viktor Nikolayevich, that these events cannot be examined in total isolation from one another. They represent a definite chain, a chain in U.S. policy that leads, so to speak, from regional conflicts to neoglobalism. This is a new philosophical doctrine which, in effect, turns out not to be a philosophical doctrine after all. It turns out to be, so to speak, some sort of instructions on state terrorism. From there, neoglobalism leads to a threat to universal peace, which we clearly see in this series of nuclear blasts that have not coincided fortuitously, of course, with the aggression against Libya.

[Levin] This is absolutely true. The juxtaposition of these two events is obviously not fortuitous because the aggression against Libya, judging by everything, should have, up to a certain point, somewhat stifled the echo of the nuclear blast. The goal, in essence, was to redirect all the anger at these U.S. acts, to transfer the conversation to the problem of international terrorism. Currently this is being heard about almost around the globe. It has already become known that at the forthcoming meeting of the big seven, Reagan, the President of the United States, wants to make this almost the main theme of conversation.

[Volskiy] Yes, they are already trying. The Americans are currently trying to ascribe to those actions that are being undertaken under the pretext of a so-called struggle against terrorism not their own proper, so to speak, American characteristics, but to make them the collective actions of the NATO countries. They are even trying to attach Japan and their other allies to the actions, that is all those forces that the United States and the Reagan administration want to unite under their hegemony on a global scale.

[Nekrasov] Well, the fact that they want to does not yet mean that they will be able to do it.

[Volskiy] Of course.

[Nekrasov] In any case, to date, in the outwardly expressed positions of Europe, that is NATO Europe, the part of Western Europe that is part of the North Atlantic camp, they seem to have made substantial concessions to Washington. But in fact, for the time being, one cannot feel any shifts in the direction of subordination to this new trend of neoglobalism.

[Volskiy] But all the same, Vadim Nikolayevich, here I think one cannot fail to see the other side as well: The fact is that certain circles in Western Europe are manifesting a good deal of acquiescence to what, to tell the truth, is very severe pressure from the United States and the Reagan administration. They are at times acting to the detriment of their own national interests. Take for example the reports about the flight of U.S. aircraft across French territory. We do not know how correct these reports are and maybe they are not quite accurate, but nevertheless they indicate the mood of certain circles.

[Nekrasov] You know, I think that to a significant extent this is blackmail that is coming from the other side of the ocean, because currently even the Paris newspaper LE MONDE has noted that the real French position is being falsified across the Atlantic. It is being falsified deliberately, by political figures as well as in the press. They are saying France secretly wanted to take part in defeating Libya. They are ascribing to it a whole series of, so to speak, pro-U.S. actions, which ostensibly do not manifest themselves on the surface. That is to say, they want to compromise the French position.

[Volskiy] By the same token, they are exerting pressure on the general position of the West European countries.

[Nekrasov] That is precisely why all this is being done.

[Volskiy] All the same, however, it appears that the ruling circles in Western Europe should adhere to some more intelligent positions in these issues of regional conflicts. All this aggression against Libya has shown that the United States could very easily draw Libya -- especially in the Mediterranean basin -- into conflicts for which they have no need at all, and which run counter to their national interests. Well, take for example what has happened in Libya. All that, after all, happened on the shores of the Mediterranean Sea, the same sea, across which the Europeans get their oil, which lies directly on their borders, which forms NATO's southern flank, where the U.S. 6th Fleet operates, where a great quantity of nuclear weapons is sited, in that zone which Churchill once called the soft underbelly of Europe. In the Mediterranean, there may occur the sort of clash of various factors that will threaten, as a result of U.S. policy, the security of Western Europe itself. Is that not true?

[Levin] Absolutely. Here another question arises. After all, the North Atlantic bloc defines as its zone of operations the European Continent and the seas adjacent to it, so to speak, but by no means does it extend its zone of operations to Africa.

[Volskiy] Although, Viktor Nikolayevich, on the contrary, the Americans have been pushing it all the time, for many years now, in that direction, and to the Middle East...

[Levin, interrupting] That is the point.

[Volskiy] ...and to the Persian Gulf, and to Africa.

[Levin] That is absolutely true, that is to say, the United States is clearly trying to give the North Atlantic bloc military-police functions that are geographically wider than those laid down in the bloc itself. This point also greatly worries the Europeans. It must be said that although, of course, the very fact that when it came time for the Security Council vote on the resolution condemning the United States for its act of aggression, the fact that not only the United States, and not only Britain -- which had participated directly in the attack on Libya, having allowed U.S. aircraft to fly there from its bases -- but also France voted against. This, of course, indicates that the United States still has opportunities to twist arms. And, of course, this places a certain responsibility on representatives of Western states.

One cannot fail to take notice to the, I would say, haste with which the West German Government set about expelling Libyan diplomats from its country. On the whole, we not quite validly say that the current FRG Government is following the U.S. adventurist course very actively. This is leading the FRG Government itself into an extremely complex situation. This week -- incidentally, once again it was this week -- the West German Bundestag debated the issue of an agreement between the FRG and the United States on the issue of West German firms taking part in the Strategic Defense Initiative, in the program of creating [sozdaniye] space-strike weapons. The opposition, already on the basis of documents, which, incidentally, the government tried to hide from the public, the opposition showed very clearly that the FRG is embarking on the sale of its own interests. And, I would like to add, Western Europe looks with different eyes on many international problems, problems of fundamental importance. Here I would like to return to the proposal, a very important proposal, which, on behalf of the Soviet Union, was set forth by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev at the 11th SED Congress. The proposal is for a significant reduction in armed forces and arms on the entire European Continent, from the Atlantic to the Urals.

[Nekrasov] To conclude the discussion on the previous subject, I would like to note that the situation in Western Europe was, in my view, very well summed up in the conversation between the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee and the head of the Swedish Government, Carlsson. During their talks, it was stated that there remain great opportunities for positive actions in Western Europe, but that there is not sufficient political will. What is now interesting in this situation is that many people in Western Europe see our move, which is in itself of fundamental importance -- and I shall dwell on this issue later -- they see it also as a sign from a great European power, the Soviet Union, to the other European countries, above all the West European countries. In the situation being created by the U.S. actions it is as if the Soviet Union is saying: And what about you, West Europeans? Where is your attention directed? What might you let yourselves be dragged into? It is precisely from this point of view that the impact of our proposals, of our firm, principled, flexible, and peace-loving course is being seen, as well as its impact on the European situation.

[Volskiy] At this point, Vadim Nikolayevich, it may be appropriate to also recall that it was just this week that the Soviet Union put forward a constructive initiative concerning a completely different zone -- the opposite zone, one could say, looking at the globe from above -- the Pacific Ocean region. That region is a very important one. I think that in its economic and especially in its potential economic significance, it could, at some point in the future even surpass the Atlantic basin. Naturally, everyone who is striving for a peaceful future and for cooperation, must also strive to make this cooperation extend to that very large and important zone. All the more so, the Soviet Union which is a Pacific Ocean power with, let us remember, the BAM [Baykalo-Amurskaya magistral] and all our plans concerning the Far East, Maritime Kray, Sakhalin and so on.

The United States is attempting to isolate the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries from the system that they want to create in that area -- a closed system that they call the Pacific Ocean Community. It is closed in its capitalist relations, but it has a dual objective. On the one hand, by creating this community they want to increase the opportunities for neocolonialist exploitation of the developing countries in the Pacific Ocean and Asia, and on the other, they want to transform the economic structure under creation there into a type of platform or base for stepping up military preparations and military cooperation among the countries of this zone under the hegemony and domination of the United States and the Pentagon. In other words, they want to create a sort of equivalent to NATO. They are already attempting to transform the entire zone not simply into a field of action for their separate forces, but also into a kind of fist aimed from the East at the Soviet Union and the socialist community.

[Levin] Here I would like to give an example from, admittedly, a different sphere, but which it seems to me can very clearly sum up what we are talking about. I have before me a telegram from the UPI agency containing the report of House Representative Bill Nelson, a Democrat from Florida, and a representative of the state where the John Kennedy Space Flight Center is located, who flew on the Columbia space shuttle in January of this year as an observer. This Bill Nelson has now stated that, in his view, one of the future Soviet-U.S. summit meetings should be held in space, so that, as he stated, the U.S. and Soviet leaders can look at the problems of life and politics in a new way. Nelson bases his point of view on the fact that when he looked down at the Earth from space he saw that, first, the Earth is very beautiful and second, it looks so fragile and lost in the black void of space. There is no need to persuade us of this. The entire foreign policy program of our party that was worked out by the 27th CPSU Congress proceeds from a new philosophy of international relations, from an understanding of the fragility of our planet and the need to exert maximum effort to preserve it. The U.S. Administration must be persuaded of this. It simply cannot understand this. True, it says the right things, but its actions are in diametric opposition to the conclusions reached during, for example, the Geneva meeting between the U.S. President and the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. In these conditions we are stubbornly and persistently continuing and shall continue our constructive search for solutions to international problems.

Now, I would like to recall once again that after the last nuclear explosion, which in essence blew up the unilateral Soviet moratorium, we stated: The United States is forcing us to begin testing nuclear weapons so that our country's security interests will not suffer. However, we confirm once again that we are willing at any moment to immediately cease nuclear tests on the basis of mutual accord with the United States. We are willing to immediately begin talks on the conclusion of a treaty completely banning nuclear tests.

The new initiative concerning military confrontation in Europe is also yet another constructive step organically resulting from our foreign policy strategy and I think it would be worth concentrating a little more attention on it today. Vadim Nikolayevich, you promised to speak on this subject, so it is your turn.

[Nekrasov] It is completely obvious that all the proposals contained in the speech by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee at the 11th congress in Berlin finish off and perfect the international security structure proposed as early as in Comrade Gorbachev's 15 January statement. In that statement, if you remember, it was said in general terms that conventional weapons and armed forces would also become the subject of agreed reductions. Detailed proposals have now been advanced regarding this. Admittedly, they do not contain any kind of rigid plan on how to reduce, in what quantities, and precisely how to monitor all this. They are, so to speak, reference points for negotiations.

But, in this way, the West's whole pseudo-argument proving that medium-range weapons allegedly cannot be removed from Europe because there is no guarantee that Soviet conventional armed forces would not then prevail over all of Europe, becomes obsolete. This, of course, does not correspond to reality and the figures are well known. Nonetheless, this type of propaganda goes on and on.

The new Soviet proposals that finish off the edifice of our large-scale proposals on the creation of a nonnuclear world by the 21st century -- these proposals also show that, given good will on all sides, we can as soon as possible move to the new political thinking our country is calling for. In general, it must be said that there is a lot of talk in the world just now about what should specifically constitute this political thinking. Well, I think that our side has sufficiently clearly set forth its content. It is not simply a discussion of the need to realize the new realities and the critical nature of the new era; such discussion can from time to time be heard in the West as well. It is also an indication of the need to act, to act boldly, decisively, and constructively. Meanwhile, some people in the West would like to restrict themselves to the first phrase for the time being; to talk about the need for new thinking and discuss its philosophical meaning without getting down to action, while the world situation demands action as soon as possible. Now that our proposals are on the table and have become known to world public opinion, a dissatisfied grumbling can again be heard in the West. For example, Paris' LE MONDE again states that the Soviet Union is appealing to public opinion once more. When its proposals are put on the negotiating table, the public's attitude has already taken shape. Diplomatic negotiations, they claim, are not carried on in this way. Well, one can answer this by saying that it is a Leninist tradition to appeal to the peoples. It has its origins in our Decree of Peace in 1917. However, that is not the most important point.

[Levin] The Vienna talks on the reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe are proceeding through diplomatic channels. But due to the position of the Western powers, we have been talking for 13 years and have achieved nothing. Presumably, that is precisely the course of diplomatic negotiations onto which they would like to push us: negotiations that get bogged down in details and trivialities, negotiations where they would erect every possible obstacle. Moreover, when we adopt one of their positions, they immediately renounce it. While we set the question on a different plane, and this different approach, fundamentally different approach is also vividly demonstrated in this initiative...

[Volskiy, interrupting] And it is also demonstrated in our Pacific Ocean initiative...

[Levin] ...of course...

[Volskiy, interrupting] ...as it has a completely specific, precise political objective: to hold a prospective conference of the countries of the Pacific basin or some kind of pan-Asian forum, in order to discuss security issues, also particularly of economic security.

[Nekrasov] I would say that in this case we are acting on the basis of the Helsinki precedent. That was precisely the course along which the events in Europe developed when the pan-European conference was being prepared. Experience has shown that that course is very fruitful.

[Volskiy] That is precisely why it seems to me that the new political thinking is particularly manifested -- aside from everything else, of course -- in the need for a clear, specific, and constructive objective; not just negotiations for its own sake.

[Levin] Quite so! And it is precisely we who have lately been very vividly demonstrating the constructive nature of our approach through removing those problems which, from the West's point of view, allowed them to block our peaceful initiatives. This is the primary problem of monitoring.

Let us consider the proposals for significant reductions in all elements of ground forces and tactical air forces of the European countries, as well as the corresponding forces of the United States and Canada stationed in Europe, put forward by Comrade Gorbachev. It is directly said that reliable monitoring should be ensured at every stage of that process. This may be equally a question of national technical means and of international forms of verification, including, if necessary, on-site inspection.

Let us consider the proposal on chemical weapons, put forth by the Soviet Union in Geneva at the disarmament conference. Speaking at the 11th SED Congress, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev said the proposal would be here soon. Here we are: We have not kept anyone waiting. In these proposals, too, a special place is also given to questions of monitoring.

The Western powers, by the way, have always been saying that the Russians do not want monitoring. Forgive me, but we want monitoring no less than the Western powers. And we want monitoring that is no less reliable. The question is of course different: What should be monitored? That is the fundamental question today. The United States proposes that we monitor the continuation of the arms race and the continuation of nuclear explosions, while we propose monitoring cardinal reduction in armaments, monitoring the halting of nuclear tests. Our is a fundamentally different approach.

But now, different arguments are being sought. A few days ago I read a statement by a high-ranking representative of the U.S. State Department, who said that the cessation of nuclear tests under current circumstances could allegedly undermine the West's fighting efficiency and undermine West Europeans' faith in U.S. alliance obligations. But, of course, one can weave words any way one likes. What lies hidden behind those words is an entirely defined policy of striving to accumulate and improve nuclear weapons, and to conduct tests to that end.

[Nekrasov] In connection with this, it would be interesting to note the great struggle that has now started in the corridors of power in Washington regarding the observance or nonobservance of the terms of the SALT II treaty.

[Levin] The underlying cause here lies in the fact that the sea trials for Nevada, the eighth Ohio-type nuclear missile submarine, are to begin in May. That is when the United States could overstep the limit set by the SALT II treaty. The formulation itself, however, is simply quite interesting.

[Nekrasov] Yes, you know, the interesting thing is that of the Washington proponents of SALT II, back stage not up front, who do you think they are? The chiefs of staff.

[Levin] The military.

[Nekrasov] The military. The professional military who know the real situation and who understand that the SALT II treaty serves the security interests of the United States. They are experiencing pressure from the politicians who would like, using the example of SALT II and U.S. renunciation of that treaty, to predetermine the fundamental question: Would any new agreements with the Soviet Union on limiting the arms race be possible under the present administration? If one looks at the essence, that is the issue the struggle is centered on.

Should the U.S. side proceed with violating the conditions of this treaty, which they have not satisfied but undertook to observe, it would signal that Washington does not want any agreements.

At the moment they are trying to involve the U.S. allies in that struggle. Nitze has gone to Europe as a White House special envoy, Rowney is setting off for the Far East and Canada. Their mission is to survey the allies' views as they did in connection with our proposal to remove medium-range missiles from Europe. But the question is, what relation, fundamentally, do these countries bear to Soviet-U.S. bilateral negotiations on strategic weapons? They do bear a relation. Some time after the Americans back-tracked on the issue of medium-range missiles, it transpired that during that period a special alliance was formed between the Washington hawks and the right, ultra-right political circles on the Rhine. Now, too, the U.S. right-wingers are trying to involve their friends in other countries in this game in order to frustrate the possibility of further fruitful results in Soviet-U.S. dialogue on limiting and reducing armaments.

[Volskiy] It seems to me that roughly the same kind of tactics by U.S. reactionary circles can be also observed with respect to so-called regional conflicts. They also involve their allies in these conflicts, thereby hampering them in their efforts to assist in resolving these conflicts or, at least, in playing some neutral role. The dangers of this cannot fail to be felt even by those who generally count themselves among the friends of the United States.

[Levin] In connection with this, I would like to mention the FRG's position in respect to our proposal for significant reductions in armaments and armed forces in Europe. You know, it has been a long time since I heard such positive pronouncements in response to our peaceful initiatives...

[Nekrasov, interrupting] And I would add here, on a very wide front, starting with the defense minister, Woerner,...

[Levin] ...quite so,...

[Nekrasov] ...a leading Christian Democrat.

[Levin] ...while Weinberger, the U.S. defense secretary, in an extensive answer to a journalist's question -- What can you say about the latest proposals from the Soviet Union regarding the reduction of conventional forces in Europe? -- he said: This should be treated with caution. These are perfidious machinations by the Russians. They are trying to drive us out of Europe. That is, here, too, he tries in every possible way to immediately create a blind alley situation. But it seems that the force of life is asserting itself and the power, the power of attraction held by the Soviet peace initiatives is so great that we can already speak of a definite influence on the minds of not only representatives of the public at large but also of government circles in a number of West European countries. Once more we have the basis to say that the Soviet Union's Leninist foreign policy, which in the CPSU Central Committee May Day slogans is defined as a policy for strengthening peace and security of the peoples and wide international cooperation, is producing quite tangible results.

[Nekrasov] As Fidel Castro said when speaking at our congress, the situation requires of all of us, that is the socialist countries, nerves of steel, crystal-clear policies, and granite firmness.

[Levin] Good words. Our program time, comrades, has run out. Thank you for your attention. Good-bye.

IZVESTIYA WARNS OF CONSEQUENCES OF LIBYA RAID

PM291419 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 27 Apr 86 Morning Edition pp 4-5

[Konstantin Geyvandov "Political Observer's Opinion": "Sow the Wind and Reap the Whirlwind"]

[Text] The wave of protests against the U.S. armed aggression against Libya is spreading like the outward-spreading ripples created by a stone thrown in water. The Western news media state that the governments of "moderate" Arab countries, normally, as they put it, well-disposed toward the United States, have joined the others in condemning the U.S. actions. Saudi Arabia said that the attack "goes against all international norms." Egypt stressed that it views Washington's action "with anxiety and concern." Arab League Secretary General C. Klibi believes that the U.S. aggression against Libya may make irreversible changes in U.S. relations with the Arab peoples. When you consider that the vast majority of Arab and Muslim countries are members of the Nonaligned Movement, it would be no exaggeration to say that their attitude toward the U.S. military adventure in the southern Mediterranean is expressed in concise form in the resolution by the nonaligned states Coordinating Bureau roundly condemning it as unprovoked aggression.

Many U.S. mass media organs are now saying that Washington miscalculated and did not expect such a loud protest in the "Third World" — and especially in the Arab countries — when it was planning and executing its criminal anti-Libyan action. It seems that the Washington strategists' basic mistake was to underestimate the ability of others to think and to analyze. A whole series of experts and specialists in various Arab countries have analyzed the aims of the U.S. military adventure against "Libyan terrorism" and have reached the conclusion that it was a smokescreen, the real purpose being to demonstrate U.S. armed might in the Near East in the context of U.S. and Israeli confrontation with the Arab world.

Many Americans are reaching a similar conclusion, seeing a direct link between the U.S. aggression against the Libyan Jamahiriyah and fundamental Near East problems which have formed the basis of the bloody conflict in the region for some decades now. "President Reagan," the U.S. paper THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, wrote a few days after the attack, "is waging an undeclared war against Libya. Why? By attacking it, the United States has shown itself to be Isreal's active military ally in its war against the Palestinians. The U.S. military action against Libya was therefore an episode in the continuing conflict associated with Isreal's holding on to the Arab territories it has occupied since the 1967 war." Incidentally, as the American press has shown, the Isrealis supplied their senior partners with most of the intelligence data for the anti-Libyan action. This also explains why Washington is trying to turn everything upside down. Instead of joining all interested parties in eradicating and eliminating the cause of the problem, it is exploiting the consequences of the problem for its own selfish purposes. There is no doubt that the fundamental question and primary cause of the crisis in the Near East is the protracted Arab-Israeli conflict. The terrorism practiced by Israel as state policy and the terrorist acts perpetrated by some Arabs from time to time out of desperation are the result of it. But the Reagan administration, instead of contributing to an all-embracing and just Near East settlement, resorts to acts of state terrorism, thereby disrupting this process. Moreover, U.S. Near East specialist (U. Bimen) from Brown University does not rule out the possibility of an "escalation of U.S. actions in the region and their development into a full-scale war."

The U.S. Administration's hostile intentions toward the Arab and Muslim states are evidenced by a multitude of facts, including pronouncements by administration spokesmen. Most interesting of all are the statements by President Reagan himself according to which he does not rule out the possibility of a repetition of the armed aggression against Libya.

As if confirming the authenticity of these words, the U.S. Navy has left two aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean indefinitely, in case the order is given for a new strike against the Libyan Jamahiriyah. NATO is constantly carrying out military maneuvers there. Pentagon spokesmen point out that any new strike would be bigger than the one carried out in mid-April, and as a CBS radio and television company correspondent stresses, far less attention would be paid to avoiding civilian casualties.

Just as much anxiety is being caused in the Near East countries by the U.S.-Israeli allies' provocative intrigues in another part of the region — around Syria. The aforementioned (U. Bimen) recently wrote: "Syria... is the country Washington would most like to attack, but it cannot affort to do so." After the military adventure against Libya, I think that scarcely anyone would be prepared to predict what the United States can and cannot afford to do. But even if one follows (Bimen)'s premise, one should not discount Washington's Israeli henchmen who are always ready to do any dirty work for it. And it is obviously no accident that threats against Syria are issuing almost daily from Tel Aviv and the noise of saber rattling on the borders with it is growing ever louder. In light of this it is inevitably worrying to read in the Libyan paper AL-SHA'B, citing informed sources, that when preparing for the aggression against Libya the U.S. National Security Council decided to give the go-ahead for a "deterrent strike" against Syria.

The adventurist U.S. policy in the region, implemented on the basis of the doctrine of neoglobalism, poses, as we can see, a mortal threat to peace and security and is having a devasting destabilizing effect on the Middle East with essentially unpredictable consequences. One can therefore appreciate the apprehension and nervousness being felt in connection with the U.S. aggression against Libya in certain Arab countries which cooperate closely with the United States, and in military spheres in particular. According to a report in the paper AL-AHRAR, deputies from Egyptian opposition parties represented in the National Assembly (parliament) have demanded that the Egyptian Government renounce military cooperation with Washington, in particular the practice of holding joint maneuvers. They noted that the U.S. aggression against Libya had demonstrated once again that U.S. interests contradict the interests of the Arab peoples, including the Egyptians.

Judging by the Arab and Muslim world's essentially unanimous and resolute condemnation of the U.S. armed aggression against Libya, Washington is not likely to get away with its crime, certainly not in the long term. He who sows the wind should be prepared to reap the whirlwind.

MOSCOW COMMENTS ON REAGAN'S TALKS IN BALI

LD291535 Moscow World Service in English 1310 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Vladimir Korolev commentary]

[Text] American President Ronald Reagan has come to Bali in the framework of his tour of the Asian Pacific region. Vladimir Korolev comments:

If you think that the master of the White House has come to that Indonesian island to admire beautiful women noted for their art of dancing, you are mistaken. Currently the place is the scene of a conference held by foreign ministers from the Association of South East Asian Nations, ASEAN, which involves six countries. According to reports, economic problems stand high on the agenda of the conference. Lately they have aggravated, generating concern among the ASEAN members.

Washington is generous with its promises of economic aid. Obviously, Reagan will also promise assistance. But, as life has shown, the United States never gives aid for nothing. The world press said in this connection that in exchange for the promises of aid, Reagan will again seek to gain from the ASEAN countries their consent to take part in the so-called Pacific community. According to Washington's plans, the proposed economic grouping will later turn into another military bloc like NATO in Europe. It's not accidental that's its already determined members, Japan and South Korea, pursue openly militaristic policies. Obviously, the idea is to use the ASEAN countries as beach-heads in the framework of the proposed bloc.

The Soviet Union opposes the plans for knocking together blocs and counter-blocs in Asia and in the Pacific. As its government said on 23 April, new blocs should only lead to greater tensions in the region.

REAGAN TAKING ANOTHER 'U.S. DOCTRINE' TO ASIA

LD290322 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1404 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 28 Apr (TASS) — TASS Political Observer Askold Biryukov writes: By all accounts the U.S. intends to "favor" Asia with yet another U.S. doctrine. The one who intends to do this is none other than President Reagan himself during his forthcoming visit to the Indonesian island of Bali. As the Japanese SANKEI SHIMBUN reports, in "Reagan's doctrine" for Asia "new measures will be specified for collective security in the countries of the region," with special stress being laid on the "reasons and significance" for the deployment of U.S. bases in the Philippines. The paper also notes that, in accordance with this "doctrine," Japan "will be required to expand its economic aid to the countries of the region."

So, following the fiasco of the "Nixon Doctrine," Washington now intends to go ahead, in coordination with Tokyo, with efforts aimed at creating a structure in the region that would ensure that the U.S. maintains its economic and political interests and subsequently simplify attaching the countries of the region to the United States in the military-strategic sense. This conclusion is supported by all the latest pronouncements by political and military representatives of the administration and visits by Washington's emissaries to the countries of the region. From what has been said, a fairly accurate picture may be drawn of the intentions of the Washington strategists to turn the Asia-Pacific region into the same line of deployment of forward-based nuclear and other weapons as Western Europe and the Atlantic, which adjoins it, have already become. The treaties and agreements the U.S. has already concluded with Japan, South Korea, the Phillipines, Thailand, Australia, and certain other countries could already have helped to fulfill this task. These same tasks are also obviously behind the setting up of the so-called "Pacific community," dreamed up by Washington and Tokyo originally as an exclusive regional grouping, but which could later be transformed into yet another militarist bloc required to serve a policy of confrontation with the socialist countries of Asia and the interests of the U.S and Japanese monopolies, which are striving for the economic enslavement of the developing countries of the region.

Meanwhile, something quite different is expected in those countries that are suffering from unjust trade-economic ties with the United States and Japan. At the session of the permanent committee of ASEAN, which was held in Manila this month, grave dissatisfaction was voiced at a number of protectionist measures adopted by the U.S. Congress and, in the opinion of the ASEAN countries, aimed against the association's export production.

The U.S. is also evidently active in another area, that of imposing their military aid on the countries of the region, drawing these countries into military production and cooperation with military programs, which merely leads to depleting their national resources. We have not even mentioned the Pentagon's importunate efforts to expand in these countries the network of its military bases and strategic dumps, the deployment of mass destruction weapons and the means of delivering them, and the attempts to turn the countries of the region into a bridgehead of the struggle against the socialist countries and the national liberation struggle of the peoples.

It was not by chance that the MANILA TIMES notes that the U.S. attack on Libya compelled the Filipinos to look in a different light at the U.S. bases at Subic Bay and Clark Field; would they not, like their British "sisters," become direct participants in the next aggression that the White House is so close to?

The Indonesian MERDECA poses the question: Will the U.S. President bring good will with him to Bali? Reagan's latest pronouncements, the paper points out, show that the United States approaches world problems on the principle of the "Diktat of U.S. interests." Now, it writes, the most important thing for Indonesia is to be prepared to repel any pressure, whether it be promises in the field of the economy and defense, enticement to renounce its independence and active foreign policy or any forms of interference in its domestic policy.

What the paper says reflects the whole depth of the mistrust of the independent countries in the region of Washington's course, which is destructive to international relations. It may be supposed that these countries will be able to asses on merit Washington's latest "doctrine" for the Asia-Pacific region.

FORMER CIA EMPLOYEE ON U.S. ANTI-LIBYA ACTS

LD290943 Moscow World Service in English 0900 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] In an interview for the Soviet news agency TASS, the former chief of a CIA office, John Stockwell, has revealed that the American air raid on Libya had been part of a bigger operation by U.S. special services against that country. Back in 1972, he said, there was a special group set up (?at) the CIA to coordinate operations against the Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi and his government. His anti-American policy was not to the liking of the United States. Since then there have been repeated attempts to overthrow Al-Qadhdhafi. John Stockwell noted that in the past the CIA had time and again staged blasts in various countries so that they could then charge this to the forces that the United States sought to discredit. As is known, Washington accused Libya of organizing an explosion in a West Berlin discotheque and used this as a reason for bombing Libyan cities.

U.S. WILLING TO SACRIFICE LATIN REGIMES FOR AIMS

LD282359 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Vyacheslav Lavrentyev report]

[Excerpts] UPI reports that in Haiti a peaceful demonstration, organized in memory of the victims of the dictatorial regime of Duvalier, was fired upon by police; eight people were killed. Vyacheslav Lavrentyev comments:

Washington intends to use exactly the same maneuver in Paraguay, as well, where the loyal friend of the United States, General Alfredo Stroessner, has been in power for 30 years. Now reports have appeared in the U.S. press that the Paraguayan dictator is preparing to go to West Germany for treatment, and will stay there, possibly, for an indeterminate period. Hints are being given in the White House that this could not have happened without pressure from President Reagan. People have also started talking about the possible withdrawal from the political scene of the Chilean dictator Pinochet. Recently, for the first time in many years, critical notes sounded from the lips of official U.S. representatives, addressed to Pinochet. What is going on? Why has the U.S. Administration suddenly substituted anger for favor regarding its puppets? It is perfectly understood in Washington that the trend in world development now is such that dictators are doomed, come what may. That is why they are trying to acquire for themselves the maximum benefit. Both Chile and Paraguay are associated with systematic violations of human rights, terror and repression in the international community; Washington, without thinking for long, puts these countries into the same category as Nicaragua and Angola, in order to have an excuse for interference in the internal affairs of those sovereign states. Both the Nicaraguan contras and the terrorists of the Angolan UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] faction are presented by Reagan as fighters for the ideals of democracy, to which Washington lends all kinds of support. And the fact that the majority of Nicaraguans and Angolans stand firmly on the side of their revolutionary governments, and that human rights are observed in those countries -- the U.S. Administration assiduously keeps silent about these facts. The events taking place in Haiti, Paraguay, and Chile show that Washington, in certain circumstances, is ready to sacrifice regimes that are in principle useful to it. But this is not done for the sake of the restoration of democracy in those countries, rather for the sake of implementing those same imperial interests, for the sake of justifying the Reagan policy of neoglobalism.

U.S. AIRBORNE DIVISION TO REHEARSE ANTI-NICARAGUA MOVES

LD272110 Moscow World Service in English 2000 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] The United States 82d Airborne Division is moving its units to Honduras for maneuvers to rehearse offensive operations against Nicaragua. The 82d Division took part in the United States invasion of the Dominican Republic in April 1965 and 18 years later in October 1983 it took part in the occupation of Grenada. In the last few days a number of representatives of the Reagan administration have come up with more threats against Nicaragua.

NEW SOVIET AMBASSADOR TAKES UP POST

HK290910 Hong Kong AFP in English 0902 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Beijing, April 29 (AFP) -- The Soviet Union's new ambassador, Oleg Troyanovsky, considered one of the Kremlin's top diplomats, arrived here Tuesday to take up his post, East European sources said.

The posting [of] a diplomat of his stature here reflects the importance the Soviet Union accords to its links with China, Western diplomats here said. Relations between the two, which had a major falling out in the early 1960's, have improved since negotiations on normalization began in 1982.

Mr Troyanovsky, 67, who arrived on a flight by China's national airline CAAC from Moscow, replaces Ilya Shcherbakov, 73, who is retiring after holding the post since 1978.

A diplomat since 1944, the new ambassador represented his country at the United Nations from 1976 to last March. He was ambassador to Tokyo from 1967 to 1976 and is an Asian specialist.

The son of the first Soviet ambassador to the United States, Mr Troyanovsky also was an interpreter for late Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev. He made several visits to China in the 1950's.

Yang Dezhi stressed that the relations between the armies of the two countries "meet the interests of the USA and the People's Republic of China", that there are broad prospects for the development of friendly exchanges between the armies of the two states, and that the visit is a manifestation of the "striving for new friendship".

PAPER NOTES XINHUA REPORT ON USSR ECONOMIC REFORM

PM150829 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 12 Apr 86 p 3

[TASS report: "RENMIN RIBAO Article"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Apr -- An article by a XINHUA political observer carried by RENMIN RIBAO reports on the restructuring of the economic machinery and the management system in the Soviet Union.

It notes the topicality of the changes begun in the USSR, whose essence is a break with the former extensive methods of economic management which had a negative effect on production efficiency and the pace of scientific and technical progress and economic growth. It also emphasizes the decisive nature of the course set in the direction of improving the economic machinery and the management system as a whole.

In this connection, the author cites the words of M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in the party Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress: "It is obvious that economic management needs constant improvement. But the present situation is such that it is impossible to limit ourselves to partial improvements — what is needed is a radical reform."

The article singles out such avenues of the restructuring of the economic machinery in the USSR as the enhancement of the activeness of centralized leadership in the attainment of the fundamental goals of economic strategy, the expansion of enterprises' independence and the introduction of real financial autonomy, the transition to economic methods of leadership at all levels of the national economy and the consequent improvement of the system of price formation, finance, and credits, ensuring the best possible combination of sectoral and territorial management of the economy, the comprehensive democratization of management, and so on.

The XINHUA political observer, quoting from the Soviet leader's statement at the congress concerning the need to abandon prevailing stereotypes in thinking and practice, describes the basic aspects of the economic experiment conducted in USSR industry, the innovations in the management of the country's agro-industrial complex, and the new forms and methods for organizing and providing incentives for agricultural workers' labor.

"It will take time and energetic efforts to restructure the economic machinery under our country's conditions with its vast and complex economy. Difficulties may arise, and we have no guarantee against miscalculations, but the main point now is to move in the chosen direction purposefully, step by step...." The RENMIN RIBAO article ends with this quotation from M.S. Gorbachev's report.

JAPANESE AMBASSADOR ADDRESSES USSR ON NATIONAL DAY

LD292350 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Address by Japanese ambassador to the USSR, Yasue Katori, on the occasion of Japan's national day; from the "Vremya" newscast; Katori remarks in Japanese with superimposed Russian translation]

[Text] Respected viewers, I am very glad that I can today, in my capacity as ambassador of Japan to the USSR, greet the whole of the Soviet people. This is a jubilee year: It is 30 years since the restoration of diplomatic relations between our two countries in 1956. A beginning to that momentous year was made by an event, so important for Japanese-Soviet relations, an official visit to Japan by the USSR minister of foreign affairs which took place after a 10-year interval. In the course of that visit the ministers of foreign affairs of the two countries discussed issues of Japanese-Soviet relations and international problems of mutual interest, and thereby restored a political dialogue between both countries. Talks were also conducted concerning the conclusion of a Japanese-Soviet peace treaty, and an accord was reached on their continuation. We believe that both countries should together set about fulfilling the main task, to conclude a peace treaty, having settled the issues which, at the time of the normalization of diplomatic relations between our countries, it had been envisaged to solve at subsequent talks.

The political dialogue between Japan and the USSR, having received such a stimulus, will be continued. This year a visit to the USSR by the minister of foreign affairs of our country, Mr Abe, is envisaged; the leaders of our two countries have been invited to visit one another; and I wish from the bottom of my heart that, by our mutual efforts, this dialogue might receive a stable development, and might bring concrete results. Our relations have developed, and are developing, progressively in many areas -- economic, trade, scientific, cultural, and others. In March this year intergovernmental consultations of the two countries were held on trade and economic issues. Apart from this it is planned to activate cultural links between both countries. To establish a deeper mutual understanding between the public of both countries in the most varied areas -- such a path may at first sight appear to be roundabout, but precisely such a road, in our opinion, will be the shortest road for the development of Japanese-Soviet relations on a long-term and stable basis.

In conclusion, on behalf of the Japanese Government and the Japanese people, I would like to wish all of you health, great happiness, and prosperity. Thank you for your attention.

JAPAN'S EXPANDED 'RIMPAC' PARTICIPATION CRITICIZED

OW260851 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1000 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Nikolayev commentary]

[Excerpts] Listeners, five Japanese missile destroyers left Sasebo port on 21 April to participate in "Rimpac-86," a large-scale military exercise called in full, the Pacific Rim Joint Exercise. In connection with reports of various news agencies, Radio Moscow commentator Nikolayev has the following:

"Rimpac," or the Pacific Rim Joint Exercise, has been held every 2 years since 1970 in the waters of the central Pacific near the Hawaiian Islands by the U.S. Navy and the navies of its allies. Japan joined the "Rimpac" military exercise for the first time in 1980. At that time, Japan dispatched 2 escort ships, 8 antisubmarine patrol aircraft, and 700 Self-Defense Forces [SDF] members to areas near the Hawaiian Islands.

What should be pointed out here is that at that time, democratic public opinion and the opposition parties in Japan immediately took the SDF's "Rimpac" participation as an outrageous violation of the peace-oriented Constitution that prohibits deployment of forces overseas.

Nevertheless, turning deaf ears to the opposition voiced by public opinion organs, the Japanese ruling clique has continued to expand Japan's participation in "Rimpac" year after year. This year, Japan will deploy a fleet of eight vessels carrying antisubmarine helicopters and P3C antisubmarine patrol aircraft to join in the "Rimpac" exercises scheduled to start in May. Moreover, Japanese submarines will join "Rimpac" for the first time this year.

The United States did not invite New Zealand to join "Rimpac-86," as New Zealand refuses to allow port calls by American vessels carrying nuclear weapons. In New Zealand's place, the British naval vessels will participate in the joint exercise for the first time. What is noteworthy is that Britain was precisely where the American fighter-bombers that recently raided Libya's peaceful cities were located and it was none other than Britain that had completely cooperated in every U.S. aggressive attempt in various areas, including the Pacific region.

The coming "Rimpac-86" is a sort of continuation of "Team Spirit," the provocative military exercise conducted in areas near the Soviet borders. In this connection, it is certainly not groundless for Japanese papers to point out that "Rimpac" has become more and more aggressive in nature year after year. For example, it was pointed out in ASAHI SHIMSUN that there was sufficient reason to believe that the exercise for seizing the Hawaiian Islands included in "Rimpac" was planned as a sham operation for attacking Soviet bases on the Kamchatka Peninsula and the Kuril Islands.

ASAHI SHIMBUN also writes that Britain's participation and Japan's expanded participation in "Rimpac" signifies another step forward along the dangerous road of turning the Japan-U.S. alliance into a military alliance for both offensive and defensive operations similar to NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In direct opposition to those countries that attempt to intensify tension in the Pacific region and always flex their muscles, the USSR has persistently maintained that efforts should be made to seek constructive solutions to the issue of security in the region. For example, it is stated in a 23 April Soviet Government statement that the implementation of confidence-building measures and a reduction in the activity of navies in the Pacific Ocean would play a major stabilizing role in the region.

The strengthening of confidence in the Pacific region and the promotion of mutual understanding among the peoples of this region should not be based on an attempt to put various countries at odds with each other nor to divide them into groups, but based on cooperation on the basis of peace, equality, and mutual benefits. This will meet the wishes of all the people in this region, including the Japanese people.

FURTHER COMMENTARY MARKS AFGHAN ANNIVERSARY

Gains on Revolution 'Irreversible'

LD260709 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 2050 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 26 Apr (TASS) -- TASS Political Observer Askold Biryukov writes:

On 27 April it will be 8 years since the victory of the April Revolution in Afghanistan, which laid the foundations for a fundamental reconstruction of the life of the Afghan people and for the construction of a new society in this ancient country based on the principles of social justice and the equality of all citizens, ethnic groups, nationalities, and tribes of the Republic.

For all of these 8 years, the Afghan people, under the leadership of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan have been building a new life in the country, literally with a hoe in one hand and a rifle in the other. From the very first days of victory, it encountered the frenzied opposition and the direct aggression of the forces of imperialism and reaction, headed by the United States of America, and of the deposed exploiting classes, which formed the backbone of the counterrevolution that had settled abroad.

Despite the fact that the struggle to defend the revolutionary attainments forces the Republic to divert significant forces and resources from the carrying out of peaceful creative tasks, the cardinal changes in the political, economic, and social spheres that were mapped out by the DRA leadership are being unswervingly realized in the country. Broader and broader strata of the people are being drawn into the execution of tasks of a nationwide character, including the representatives of the tribes, the clergy, the intelligentsia, and business circles. The social basis of the revolution is being extended. Numerous facts of life in present-day Afghanistan attest that the attainments of the revolution, which serve as the basis for the development of the country on the path of progress and social justice, are irreversible. It is precisely this circumstance that arouses fits of bestial fury among the enemies of the DRA.

Particular malice is displayed toward democratic Afghanistan in official Washington. A day does not go by without them staging some sort of anti-Afghan show there, or without them coming forward with some kind of anti-Afghan act. The U.S. Administration now no longer restricts itself to the framework of "secret operations" by the CIA against Afghanistan. Armed interference in the affairs of sovereign Afghanistan, with whom, by the way, the United States of America maintains diplomatic relations, are conducted openly today, showing full contempt for the UN Charter and the elementary standards of international law.

This unending interference from outside by Washington and its allies is the sole reason that the Afghan-Pakistan talks on a political settlement have not yet led to results, despite the responsibility, flexibility, and good will being demonstrated by the Afghan leadership.

The Soviet Union shows immutable solidarity with the Afghan people, who are conducting a courageous and self-sacrificing struggle against interference by the forces of imperialism and reaction. It invariably supports the DRA in its aspiration to achieve a political settlement that would effectively stop and guarantee nonrenewal of the armed interference in its internal affairs. In the struggle for peace, justice and social progress, all democratic forces of the planet are at one with the DRA.

USSR Links With DRA Viewed

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Vladimir Pasko]

[Text] Today the Afghan people are celebrating the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution. Eight years is not a long time for a country. All the same, its present leadership has something to talk about. Socioeconomic reorganization is being consistently carried out, the national economy and culture are developing, and the process of democratizing political and public life is continuing. The achievements could be even greater if it were not for the wiles of the enemies of the revolution. Marking the date, the PRESS TRUST OF INDIA agency notes that as a result of subversive acts by dushmans, almost 2,000 schools, dozens of hospitals, and almost 1,000 peasant cooperatives have been destroyed in Afghanistan. Nevertheless, over the same period, more than 1 million people have completed courses to eliminate illiteracy, the number of hospital beds in the country has almost doubled, and the number of doctors has grown by almost 50 percent.

A most important factor in the rise of the Afghan national economy is cooperation with the USSR. Our people, said Babrak Karmal, addressing the delegates of the 27th CPSU Congress, will never forget the great, incomparable aid of the USSR. Only the homeland of Lenin is capable of establishing such relations with a developing country. A few days ago in Moscow, a treaty between the governments of the two countries was signed on the main directions for economic and trade cooperation as well as a protocol concerning cooperation questions for the 5-year period. Examining the results of the visit to the USSR by Keshtmand, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the country, the PDPA Central Committee Politburo expressed gratitude to the CPSU and the USSR Supreme Soviet presidium for their fraternal international aid. On the occasion of the national holiday the leaders of the USSR and Afghanistan exchanged telegrams of greeting.

DRA Politburo Member Interviewed

LD271644 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0918 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia, 27 Apr (TASS) — The years that have elapsed since the victory of the April Revolution in Afghanistan have been a period of a broadening and consolidation of people's power, especially at its new stage, Anahita Ratebzad, member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo has stated. Every effort has been made by the party to rectify the errors that were once allowed to occur. The Afghan people have correctly understood this striving and support the domestic and foreign policy course of the Afghan leadership, she told Yuriy Tyssovskiy, a TASS correspondent, in an interview. The last few years, when many positive decisions have been adopted in the interests of the toiling sections of the DRA's population, must be regarded as particularly fruitful. The unity of the party around its Central Committee, with Babrak Karmal at its head, is getting stronger. The security of the Army has grown immeasurably despite the ferocious resistance of the revolution's enemies who are striving by every means to wreck these processes. In recent years the working masses of the Afghan people have rallied together around the party and there has been the creation and strengthening of the public organizations of trade unions, young people, women, and other groups of the populations, which have now been brought together in the Fatherland Front and are taking an active part in the construction of a new life under the PDPA's leadership. Much has been accomplished in the sphere of the nationalities policy within the framework of which Pushtus, Tajiks, Turkmens, Baluchis, and Pashais have received complete equality of rights, Anahita Ratebzad said.

Recently tribal jirgas have been held throughout the whole of Afghanistan and they have revealed the true scale of the people's cohesion around the central authorities. The jirgas expressed support for the PDPA's action program and representatives of the tribes advocated a strengthening of friendship with the great Soviet people. Of exceptional importance is the High Jirga of Border Tribes, which was held recently and which adopted a decision to prohibit the dushman bands being sent into the DRA from Pakistan from passing through the territory controlled by the Pashtun tribes. These decisions were not to the liking of the imperialist powers and this has led to the well-known events in the Khyber Pass area.

At present democratic elections are being held to choose local authority bodies. Representatives of the people including peasants, the workers, and the intelligentsia; women from all sections of the working people and all ethnic groups are being elected to these bodies.

On the war front the Afghan People's Army is inflicting more and more crushing blows on the dushman rabble. Many of the counterrevolutionaries are feeling disenchantment with the "ideals" of the Muslim extremists and are going over to the side of people's power, which is doing everything possible to involve them in useful activities for the good of the revolution.

The Reagan administration is striving by every means to step up the "undeclared war" against Afghanistan and to eliminate the achievements of people's power. It is feeding its agents among the dushman bands with handouts of millions of dollars and is providing them with the latest weaponry. However, it is evident to everyone that these attempts are doomed to failure. The DRA is striving to live in peace with its neighbors including Pakistan and Iran. As for our relations of friendship with the Soviet Union, Anahita Ratebzad said, this friendship will remain forever in the hearts of the Afghans.

PRAVDA Analyzes DRA Economy

PM291542 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 27 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Special Correspondent V. Okulov article: "The Country's Businesslike Rhythm: 8 Years of the April Revolution in Afghanistan"]

[Excerpt] Kabul, Apr -- Spring began a month ago in Afghanistan. The new year that it began according to the Muslim calendar -- the year 1365 -- also marked the beginning of the 5-year plan -- the country's first since the April Revolution. The Draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the DRA for 1986-1991 have been published in the press and submitted for discussion. This document has been discussed openly and by all the people.

The Basic Guidelines, approved by the DRA Revolutionary Council after nationwide discussion, summed up the results of the country's work in past years. Despite the complex situation caused by the undeclared war, tangible improvements have been achieved in the economy. The volume of national income exceeded the prerevolutionary level. Agricultural and forestry output increased in comparison with prerevolutionary production. Some 335,000 landless or small landowning families received allotments during the land and water reform.

Throughout these years Afghanistan's economy has been subjected to fierce attacks by the counterrevolution: Damage amounting to around $1 billion has been caused by the subversive actions of bandit formations, whose main stronghold is on Pakistani territory.

Dissatisfaction with what has been done and sharp criticism of the shortcomings hindering the revolutionary process in Afghanistan were expressed in the decisions of the Republic's Revolutionary Council adopted last fall and in the theses on the need to broaden the revolution's social base. A difficult campaign has been launched to implement them. New people -- nonparty people, representing various sections of Afghan society such as the clergy, merchants, and private businessmen -- have appeared at all levels of state leadership. Increased attention has been paid to the peasantry -- the main reserve for extending the social base of people's power.

GNP must be considerably increased by relying on internal resources and the all-around and selfless assistance of friendly states, primarily the Soviet Union. The land and water reform will be largely completed. This will lead to the formation of the new social structure of the countryside where the main figure will be the middle peasant.

The undeclared war launched against the DRA by the forces of international imperialism and reaction headed by Washington cannot halt the revolution's creative progress. In the period preceding the 8th anniversary of the victorious April Revolution reports have been coming in from enterprises in Kabul and the provinces which a few years ago would have appeared fantastic. The workers of the ("Milli Bas") transport company have been celebrating the jubilee of the revolution by taking part in voluntary work -- the above-plan repair of machine tools. Thousands of citizens have taken part in planting greenery and cleaning the streets of Kabul. Workers of the Pol-e Charkhi textile factory have resolved to do 18 hours unpaid overtime by 27 April.

Labor competition is a factor of considerable importance for achieving the goals of the 5-Year plan.

"This year," S. (Purdeli), chairman of the Central Trade Union Council, said, "competition is taking place under the slogan 'All for victory over counterrevolution.' It is oriented toward strengthening labor discipline, saving raw materials and semimanufactures, and utilizing production reserves."

Another aspect of the trade unions' activity is that of helping to improve working and living conditions and defending workers' interests, particularly at enterprises in the private sector. A private employer, S. Purdeli concluded, sometimes endeavors to bribe a trade union activist whom he needs.

Different problems beset another interlocutor of mine -- M. Lyutfi, a young-looking, energetic, and respectable enginner and owner of the Kabul Metal Factory: He cooperates and gets on well with his trade union. His only complaint is that they hold meetings in working time. And this must not affect production.

"I see good prospects for the development of industry on the basis of the idea of broadening the revolution's social base," M. Lyutfi considers. "Only it must be carried out more vigorously. I know many people who are prepared to invest their money in developing the national economy. The bureaucratic obstacles in the way of investing capital must be removed more resolutely." "This is a familiar problem," S. Mangal, chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers, told me. "We are now greatly simplifying the procedure for issuing permits for the construction of private sector enterprises." The chairman of the state planning committee emphasized the role which technical and economic cooperation with the USSR plays in implementing the Republic's labor plans. Important new projects will be created in many sectors of the national economy with the USSR's assistance. Afghanistan is also being helped by other socialist countries, as well as India and certain UN organizations.

...The Afghan people are living to a businesslike rhythm. They are fully determined to overcome the difficulties created by the legacy of the past and by the intrigues of enemies and to implement the plans outlined by people's power.

Addresses Commission

[Text] Delhi, 28 Apr (TASS) — Indian Foreign Minister Bali Ram Bhagat has called Indian-Soviet friendship an important factor for peace in Asia and throughout the world. Addressing the 10th anniversary session of the intergovermental Soviet-Indian Commission for Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation which opened here today, he highly appraised the multifaceted and mutally advantageous relations with the Soviet Union. Indian-Soviet friendship has stood the test of time, said the minister. He noted that cooperation with the Soviet Union is of huge significance for India in conditions of persistently unequal economic relations between the leading capitalist countries and the developing countries.

Our country firmly advocates nuclear disarmament, noted B.R. Bhagat. The Indian Government welcomed the comprehensive program for a staged nuclear disarmament put forward by the Soviet Union with the aim of totally eliminating nuclear weapons by the end of the present century, as well as the non-admissibility of the militarization of space.

In his speech the co-chairman of the commission, Ivan Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, stated that Soviet people are greatly satisfied with the high level and the multilateral nature of Soviet-Indian relations based on the sound foundation of the Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Cooperation between the USSR and India. This is an example of relations of a new type between states with differing social systems, based on principles of full equality, mutual respect, sovereignty, and noninterference in the internal affairs of other countries.

PAKISTAN, U.S. DISCUSSING NEW ARMS AGREEMENT

LD291538 Moscow TASS in English 1429 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] New Delhi April 29 TASS — A Pakistani military delegation has visited the United States to discuss the supply of newest U.S. armaments to Islamabad as part of a new military-economic agreement between the two countries, which is worth more than four billion dollars.

UNI news agency reported that the agreement provides for supplying Pakistan in 1986-93 with up to 18 F-16 fighter-bombers in addition to 40 such nuclear-capable planes already in service with the Pakistani Air Force.

U.S. readiness to facilitate the militarization of Pakistan indicated, in the opinion of local commentators, that the Ziaul Haq regime has become increasingly useful as a vehicle for projecting U.S. interests in Southwest Asia.

In return for large deliveries of arms and dollar hand-outs Pakistan has allowed the United States to turn its territory into a staging area for escalating an undeclared war against Afghanistan and granted the Pentagon access to military bases in Baluchistan and in other parts of the country, CNS news agency said.

A grave threat to security in the region is posed also by Islamabad's persistent attempts to persuade Washington to supply it with newest electronic equipment for spying on neighbouring countries as well as nuclear technology needed by Pakistan to develop nuclear weapons of its own.

AFGHAN 'TERRORISTS' DESTROY QANDAHAR MOSQUE

LD291729 Moscow TASS in English 1635 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Kabul April 29 TASS — Afghan terrorists trained by the U.S. CIA exploded Kherka Mubarak mosque in Qandahar, Afghanistan's ancient capital. The mosque was laid down in the 18th century by the founder of the Afghan state Ahmad Shah Durrani.

Commenting on the event, member of the board of the Central Council of the National Patriotic Front of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, prominent Islamic figure Maulani Mohammad Salem Aleni told a correspondent of the NOVOSTI press agency: "The new crime cf Afghan counterrevolution caused an outbreak of indignation of the entire Afghan people. The encroachment on our sacred place, which is treasured by all followers of Prophet Muhammad must show to the whole Islamic world the essence of so-called "Mujaheddins" -- mercenaries of the United States CIA.

This is the 255th mosque blown up by counterrevolutionaries who are described in Washington as "defenders of Islam". They killed more than 250 mollahs and other Islamic dignitaries, burnt down several libraries where books sacred to all Moslems, including several hundred volumes of the Koran were consumed by the flames. Last autumn, the British "Javelin" missile fired by counterrevolutionaries destroyed the cupola of the mosque in Herat. Among the people who were praying in the mosque 14 were killed and more than 70 wounded.

Mohammad Salem Aleni pointed to the efforts of the DRA Government to protect the monuments of Islamic culture, to defend Islam, the government's care for the needs of Moslems. Hundreds of millions of Afghani is allocated every year for the repair and restoration of mosques, their heating, aid to Moslems making the pilgrimage to Mecca. Here is just one example. The Idga mosque in Kabul is one fo the most treasured mosques in Afghanistan. It is in that mosque that Emir Amanulla Khan spoke after a prayer in 1919 to proclaim Afghanistan's independence from British colonialists. In the years of the rule of the Nadir dynasty, the Idga mosque was in disuse. Grain was kept in it. The DRA Government spent over two million dollars to restore the mosque. And now, on the eve of the eighth anniversary of the April Revolution, the symbol of Afghan independence, Idga mosque is functioning again.

USSR-DRA JOINT ELECTRICITY PROJECTS REPORTED

LD261317 Moscow TASS in English 1115 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Kabul April 26 TASS -- Big contracts in power industry between the ministry of energy and public works of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and the all-union foreign trade association Technopromexport have been signed here today.

The Afghan side is to be supplied with equipment and materials for building the "Mazari-Sharif -- Jarkuduk", "USSR-Kunduz" and "Holm-Puli-Humri" electric transmission lines. A contract was signed for a feasibility study for building the Sarobi-2 cascade of hydroelectric power stations and for drawing up a project of an electric transmission line crossing over the Panj River.

Cooperation between the USSR and the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan in energetics is broadening with every passing year. The construction of the "USSR-Kunduz" and "USSR state frontier--Mazari-Sharif--Holm" electric transmission lines is to be completed this year. The commissioning of these electric transmission lines will establish mighty centres for the development of industry and agriculture of northern Afghanistan and ensure Kunduz, Shirhan, Mazari-Sharif and other towns with electricity. The construction of the Sarobi-2 cascade of hydroelectric power stations will make it possible to do away with the shortage of electric energy in the area of Kabul.

Afghanistan's biggest hydro-electric power station "Naglu", which increased electricity generation in Afghanistan by 40 per cent, and the "Puli-Hubri-2" hydro-electric power station, the main source of electric energy in the Balkh Province, were built in the previous years with the USSR's assistance.

KAPITSA MEETS WITH AQUINO, DISCUSSES U.S. BASES

HK291417 Manila MANILA BULLETIN in English 29 Apr 86 pp 1, 9

[Excerpts] A high-ranking Soviet official informed President Aquino yesterday that there are many areas that the Philippines and the Soviet Union could explore to their mutual advantage. Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister M.S. Kapitsa, during a call on the president, pointed to joint economic enterprises, such as those in Singapore, and landing rights for Soviet commercial planes which, he said, would "bring in a lot of money." Kapitsa said there are many problems in the world, especially in the Southeast Asian region, that need to be discussed by President Aquino with her "counterpart" in Russia. Stressing that these discussions must be carried out on the highest levels, the Soviet official hoped that Mrs Aquino would accept the invitation of the Soviet Union to visit the country. He promised that "Leningrad would be more beautiful than Paris."

President Aquino said that to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the establishment of Philippine-Soviet diplomatic relations, she would appoint an ambassador to Moscow after consulting with her foreign minister who is now in Bali, Indonesia. The Philippines has had no chief of mission in the Soviet capital since Ambassador Luis Moreno Salcedo was transferred to the United Nations in New York about five years ago. Only a charge d'affaires, Romeo Fernandez, has been administering the Philippine Embassy in Moscow.

Kapitsa also took occasion to accused [as published] the United States of forming a new military alliance in the Pacific region that the USSR feared would eventually expand into a North Atlantic Treaty Organization-type group. He pointed out that the U.S. and Japan have indicated the creation of the new alliance that would first be called Pacific Economic Community. But eventually, he said, the organization would become an "Asian NATO" comprising the U.S., Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and the underdeveloped Southeast Asian nations. "The Soviet Union has called attention to this plan and has asked why, instead of such dubious alliances, more trade and technological relationships were not established," Kapitsa told Mrs Aquino. He stressed that instead of a military alliance envisioned by the U.S., a Pacific Conference should be called to discuss a non-nuclear zone in the area, the reduction of naval presence, and broader economic relations. "Energetic measures must be taken to reduce, to halt the slide into nuclear war," Kapitsa said. "The situation in the Pacific is especially disturbing. This lake that should be what it is called, peaceful, is instead an arena fraught with the possibility of war." Noting that the ocean is "dotted with military bases and patrolled by warships," the minister called for a ban on nuclear weapons, the reduction of conventional armies and naval presence. He said his mission here is "to begin to build a bridge between Moscow and Manila, and for that task to succeed with the necessary speed it is important that the bridge be constructed from both sides of the river." Kapitsa declared that the Soviet Union respects the independence of nations and believes in non-interference in their affairs. It also respects the choices of the people, and "the Filipino people could not have made a more excellent choice than Corazon Aquino."

[Text] A meeting took place in Berlin on 22 April between Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED CentralCommittee and chairman of the GDR Council of State, and other leading figures in the SED. Members and candidate members of the SED Central Committee Politburo took part in the meeting.

Mikhail Gorbachev warmly congratulated the German comrades elected to the leadership of the Central Committee and emphasized that the forum of the GDR communists, which has ended, is an important milestone on the path to the construction of a developed socialist society in the republic, a worthy contribution to the strengthening of the positions of socialism in the world and to the consolidation of the friendship and cooperation between the SED and the CPSU, and between the GDR and the USSR, on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and of socialist internationalism.

Erich Honecker thanked the delegation of the CPSU, led by Mikhail Gorbachev, for their participation in the 11th SED Congress and stressed that this visit to the GDR represents a new high point in the shaping of the indestructible fraternal alliance between our parties, states, and peoples.

An exchange of views on the most important tasks in the implementation of the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress and the 27th CPSU Congress took place. It was noted with satisfaction that the congresses have demonstrated the full agreement in the SED and CPSU views and positions on fundamental questions of socialist and communist construction and on foreign policy, and the firmness of the fraternal alliance between the two parties, between the peoples of the GDR and the Soviet Union.

Both sides noted that the SED and the CPSU are solving the tasks of social development on the path to a comprehensive intensification of production and an acceleration of scientific-technological progress, in the perfecting of socialist democracy and the education of the working people in the spirit of socialist internationalism.

The participants in the meeting, noting the positive development of economic and scientific and technical cooperation between the USSR and the GDR, stressed that it is necessary to expand and perfect cooperation and production specialization, especially in heavy engineering, the development of direct relations between enterprises in industry and agriculture, and between research institutions, and the organization of joint associations and firms from both states, or with the participation of third countries.

The high level of relations between the SED and the CPSU and their Central Committees was praised. These relations rest on long-standing, profound, internationalist traditions; are developing on the basis of the great teachings of Marx, Engels, and Lenin; and are characterized by full mutual trust.

In the exchange of views on topical international issues, the two sides made a common assessment of the tense situation in the world.

Serious concern was expressed at the fact that the U.S. Administration and their closest NATO allies are stubbornly continuing their line of further aggravating the arms race, extending it into space, and destroying the existing military-strategic balance.

The Soviet Union, the GDR, and the other fraternal countries counter this course, which is full of dangers for mankind, with the policy of the consolidation of peace and the recognition of the right of every people to independent development under conditions of security and noninterference. In this connection, the importance of the joint initiatives of the Warsaw Pact states on questions of disarmament, the program submitted by the Soviet Union for the elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons, and the new proposals for the reduction of military confrontation in Europe presented in Mikhail Gorbachev's speech at the 11th SED Congress, was emphasized.

The participants in the meeting are most deeply convinced that the situation on the European Continent could be changed considerably for the better if a major state such as the FRG were to really tread the path of detente and the establishment of good-neighborly relations. Unfortunately, the policy of the present FRG Government is running in the opposite direction, a fact that is attested to by its support for the U.S. plans for the militarization of space, the transformation of West German territory into a launchpad for Pershings and cruise missiles, and the encouragement of dangerous revanchist forces.

At the end of the talk, Mikhail Gorbachev, on behalf of the CPSU delegation and the Soviet Communists, wished the members of the SED and the whole people of the GDR successful fulfillment of the great tasks which the 11th congress has set.

The meeting took place in the spirit of complete unity, cordiality and friendship.

[East Berlin ADN International Service in German at 0952 GMT on 22 April includes the following list of Soviet participants in the Gorbachev-Honecker meeting:

Tour of Machine-Building Plant

PM250838 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Special correspondents Ye. Grigoryev, V. Kabanov, and M. Podklyuchnikov dispatch: "New Goals Lie Ahead; the 11th SED Congress Has Ended"]

[Text] The top forum of the GDR Communists ended in Berlin today. For 5 days delegates discussed the results of the great and intensive work that was carried out in the past 5 years, they set new targets for the republic's progress along the path of building a developed socialist society, and they examined the problems of strengthening peace. The congress again demonstrated the unity of the party's ranks and the cohesion of the GDR working people who are rallied around their Marxist-Leninist vanguard. The congress was held under the banner of the indestructible combat alliance and fraternal friendship between the SED and the party of Lenin, between the German socialist state and the Land of Great October.

Today the CPSU delegation was cordially received by the collective of the Berlin "7 October" Machine-Building Combine.

Recently, the leading enterprise of this combine was presented with the honorary banner of the SED Central Committee for excellent results achieved in the precongress socialist competition under the motto "Honor in Labor!" A wide range of modern metal-cutting tools for the machine-building and bearing industry are manufactured here. For many years now orders from Soviet industry have accounted for a considerable proportion of the leading enterprise's production program. Its collective maintains close links with Moscow's machine builders at the Sergo Ordzhonikidze plant.

"With great interest we read in the newspapers M.S. Gorbachev's speech, which he delivered in Tolyatti," H. Neblung, the SED Central Committee party organizer at the combine and secretary of the SED organization at the combine's leading enterprise told us. "We recall the Soviet leader's words when he called on the VAZ plant collective to set the tone in car design worldwide. After all, it is possible! We in turn, will begin to supply Soviet car builders with high precision automated flowlines as of next year. We want to develop and improve cooperation with Soviet machine builders with the aim of surpassing the highest achievements in the world.

Talking to workers, engineers, and technicians at the enterprise, to young production workers and veterans, we felt that a special, festive mood reigned in the collective.

...A group of machine-building workers met M.S. Gorbachev and members of the CPSU delegation at the plant gates. They warmly welcomed the guests.

Kh. Vartsekha delegate to the 11th SED Congress and the combine's director, briefed them on the collective's efforts in implementing the task of production intensification and tackling the problem of enhancing the quality of the high-performance automated machine tools manufactured here on the basis of new technology, robotics, and micro-electronics. He also spoke about the reconstruction and modernization of equipment that is under way in the shops.

In the small-scale mechanization shop the guests were welcomed by students of the enterprise's vocational technical school who spoke Russian. They presented the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee with a file containing their first labor report and a souvenir which they had made. M.S. Gorbachev was intrigued by foreman V. Traut's workstation. Microcomputers with visual display units help the foreman efficiently control his section, make decisions, and influence the whole work process.

Much work is in store for the plant in the new 5-year plan period whose directives were approved by the congress yesterday. Machine tool production is to increase by almost 50 percent. This is to be achieved without additional manpower or material resources. For this reason paramount attention is being paid to savings measures at the plant. At No 2 shop the CPSU's envoys were shown a new gear-grinding tool for machining cylindrical cogs. It is also controlled by a computer. D. Ritzel, the leader of a group of design workers described how, with the help of microelectronics, the tool helps save materials. In the same section is the designer's work station, which is linked to a computer-design system. Other machine tools, systems, and automated lines equipped with modern computers were demonstrated.

Within the plant and its shops friendly conversations between M.S. Gorbachev and members of the labor collective were held. Reinhard Matern, a grinder, spoke with pride about the sophisticated machine tools that he helps produce. They are exported to the Soviet Union. Incidentally, at the time of the SED congress, the combine had already fulfilled 30 percent of its annual plan for deliveries of flexible automated systems to the USSR. Talking to young people, the head of the CPSU delegation noted in particular that it is necessary to treasure and develop the friendship and cooperation between our countries which took much effort and hard work to establish.

D. Wagner, a team leader, asked M.S. Gorbachev to autograph his team's book. He spoke about his visit to machine builders at the S. Ordzhonikidze plant in Moscow and about close cooperation with them. The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee expressed heartfelt wishes of further success to the team.

In one of the shops a friendship meeting was held. On behalf of the collective, Kh. Neblung, SED Central Committee party organizer greeted the guests. He gave the floor to M.S. Gorbachev. His speech was listened to with great interest and attention and was frequently interrupted with stormy applause. The head of the CPSU delegation presented the collective with a commemorative gift -- a sculpture depicting the revolutionary impulse of the first communist subbotnik. On behalf of the labor collective and to the sound of stormy applause, M.S. Gorbachev was presented with a Red Banner with the portrait of Ernst Thaelmann. The International was played.

A plenum of the SED Central Committee has been held. Erich Honecker was elected general secretary of the SED Central Committee.

The 11th SED Congress was an important event in the life of the fraternal party and all the republic's working people, German workers and peasants. It demonstrated the great international prestige of the GDR's Marxist-Leninist party. The decisions adopted by the congress open a new stage in the development of the German socialist state.

The final day of the congress proceedings coincided with an important date -- the 40th anniversary of the foundation of the SED. A ceremonial soiree devoted to this glorious jubilee and the conclusion of the 11th SED Congress was held in Berlin today.

Under the leadership of the Marxist-Leninist party a socialist state has been built and is strengthening on German soil. The 11th SED Congress opened up new prospects for this state, prospects of creative work for the good of the working people.

IZVESTIYA Report on Tour

PM241315 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 22 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 1

[TASS report: "CPSU Delegation Visit"]

[Excerpt] Berlin, 21 Apr -- Berlin workers greeted warmly and cordially, as the closest of friends, M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and the members of the CPSU delegation who today visited the pilot enterprise of the 7 October Machine Tool-Building Combine.

The CPSU Delegation was welcomed by G. Schabowski, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of Berlin party Bezirk; the high-ranking Soviet guests were presented with flowers. Workers with red flags and banners chanted "Friendship! Freundschaft!"

H. Warzecha, general director of the combine, spoke on ways of developing the enterprise and of plans for the future. M.S. Gorbachev and the comrades accompanying him visited the enterprise's shops and were acquainted with the work of the many-thousand-strong collective. Automatic lines and machine tools are produced here, including for the bearing industry. Almost 90 percent of all machine tool equipment manufactured by the combine is exported, and more than half is exported to the Soviet Union. The combine is a reliable partner of many Soviet enterprises.

During his tour of the plant the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee showed an interest in the work of party organizations, the working and living conditions of workers and specialists, the introduction of new industrial processes, and experience in the use of electronics and automatics.

Sector chief K. Lehmann and foreman W. Kraut spoke about the electronic system in operation at the enterprise, which makes it possible to considerably facilitate inventorying in the supply department and simplify operations connected with the supply of materials to workplaces and their work load in accordance with the manufacturing time of an order. The use of this highly productive equipment, they noted, makes it possible to release 65 people for work in other production sectors and to optimize control over the course of the entire production process.

A group of young workers and vocational and technical school students greeted the leader of the Soviet delegation. They talked about their work and study and of their great interest in the life of their contemporaries in Lenin's country.

Young people must take the baton from the older generation and carry it further, the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee said. This also concerns our friendship. We often say the word "friendship." But not everything has simply fallen into place. It all began with the fact that the German people suffered great losses and destruction, and the Soviet people lost 20 million people in the war. We had to walk a long road -- from confrontation to friendship -- in order to live with one another today as friends, to work together, and to communicate. To understand this we must study history. We must, he stressed, value and develop the friendship and cooperation between our countries, which we have achieved through great effort and work.

On completing his tour of the enterprise M.S. Gorbachev made an entry in the honored visitors book on behalf of the delegation: "The CPSU delegation attending the 11th SED Congress conveys to you an ardent, fraternal greeting from Communists and all Soviet people.

"The visit to your plant and our meeting with you has made an indelible impression on us. With all our heart we congratulate the collective of the combine's chief enterprise on its outstanding success in precongress competition and on its being awarded the honorary banner of the SED Central Committee.

"The many years of cooperation that have formed between your collective and the Moscow Sergo Ordzhonikidze Machine Tool-Building Plant are a good example for further developing cooperation between our countries in the spheres of the economy, science, and technology.

"We wish you more great success in your work for the good of the socialist GDR, and happiness and well-being in every family."

A mass meeting was held in one of the enterprise's shops. Addressing the meeting, worker and milling machine operator J. Lachenmayer and leader of the youth research collective T. Mitterer spoke on progress made by their collectives in fulfilling the high pledges made in honor of the 11th SED Congress and also on plans for the future. Fulfilling orders with quality, they stressed, is a point of honor for every worker. They made assurances that they will continue to work selflessly and make a worthy contribution to the cause of strengthening friendship and cooperation between the USSR and the GDR.

Warmly greeted by those present, M.S. Gorbachev addressed the meeting.

PRAVDA ASSESSES ISSUES, RESULTS OF SED CONGRESS

Congress Proceedings

PM281521 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 19 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Ye. Grigoryev, Yu. Kazmin, and M. Podklyuchnikov dispatch: "The Party's Word; PRAVDA Special Correspondents Report from Berlin"]

[Excerpts] Berlin, 18 Apr -- Specific and businesslike -- this is the way to describe the approach to the main issues of further socialist building as demonstrated at the 11th SED Congress. Today is the second day of the congress proceedings. The forum is discussing the SED Central Committee report delivered by E. Honecker yesterday.

The GDR working people's warm and cordial feelings for the Leninist CPSU and the land of Red October were vividly demonstrated today when M.S. Gorbachev, the head of the CPSU delegation, took the floor to deliver his greetings message. His speech was listened to with great attention and was frequently accompanied by applause. At that moment, those present in the hall felt particularly strongly and with great emotion how firm the cohesion between the CPSU and the SED is, and how indestructible is the unity of our countries and peoples inspired by the same noble aims.

The friendship and cooperation between the USSR and the GDR have many facets. They take the form of fruitful economic, scientific, and technical collaboration and joint solution of important national economic tasks. They are manifested in joint actions in the international arena aimed at strengthening peace and returning international relations to the channel of detente. From the party forum rostrum delegates are declaring their ardent approval for the comprehensive Soviet peace and disarmament program put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress. They angrily denounce the aggression against Libya mounted by U.S. imperialism and its dangerous actions against other freedom-loving peoples, and protest Washington's "star wars" plans.

The debate at the SED congress shows that the main issues which concern the GDR working people are the solution of tasks of peaceful creation and the struggle against the threat of war. At the supreme forum of the republic's Communists a creative quest is in progress for ways to further strengthen the socialist social system and to reliably protect the people's peacetime gains from perishing in a nuclear holocaust.

Editorial

PM281544 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 26 Apr 86 First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "United Goals, Common Tasks"]

[Text] The cause of socialism is making confident progress. Each supreme forum of the fraternal countries' Communists provide evidence of that. In these days before May the 11th Congress of the SED -- the Marxist-Leninist vanguard of the GDR's working people -- has been held in Berlin. A CPSU delegation headed by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, took part in the congress' work. The 11th SED Congress has been an important event in the life of the GDR and our entire fraternal community. The congress itself and the CPSU delegation's meetings with GDR Communists and working people were impressive manifestations of the combat alliance, sincere cordiality, and friendship between our parties, peoples, and countries. Approving the delegation's work, the CPSU Central Committee Politburo expressed satisfaction with the complete coincidence of the stances of our parties and states on all questions of socialist building and international policy. The joint desire of the Soviet Union and the GDR to further deepen fraternal cooperation in the economic, scientific, technical, spiritual, and other spheres for the sake of accelerating socialist society's development and in the interests of socialism and peace was highly assessed.

The congress was held at a time when the SED is celebrating its 40th anniversary. Its services in shaping the modern GDR have been great. In the center of Europe, in the homeland of Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels the theory of scientific socialism is being successfully implemented. All this due to the fact that the SED has invariably been guided and continues to be guided by Marxist-Leninist and proletarian internationalist ideas.

The GDR's working people have approached the 11th party congress with good results. Intensive methods have made it possible to ensure stable national economic development rates. Useful experience has been acquired in uniting science and production, making rational use of material and labor resources, and extensively introducing the achievements of scientific and technical progress.

The successes of the first socialist state on German soil are obvious and weighty. However, it was noted at the congress, we must look ahead and make further progress. All of the work of the Berlin forum was imbued with this aspiration toward new heights.

The socialist world is currently going through a special and crucial period. History has made it necessary for the fraternal countries to make fuller use of the advantages of the new social structure in order to accelerate scientific, technical, economic, and social progress and to enrich the socialist way of life with new facets. The attractiveness of socialism and the strengthening of its positions in the international arena will depend on this to a decisive extent. The task of curbing the nuclear threat, placing a barrier in the way of imperialism's aggressive aspirations, and maintaining and strengthening peace is more urgent than ever. Socialism's response to the call of the time is based on party congress decisions. It is understandable that in specific manifestations this response will be multifaceted, reflecting the special features of the fraternal countries' development. But in its fundamental basis the response is unified. Since we have common goals, we have a single -- communist -- philosophy.

In the fraternal parties and the socialist countries, including the GDR, there has been a broad, positive response to the documents and decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. This reaction on the part of friends and comrades-in-arms in a common cause is confirmation of the correctness of the path chosen and an inspiring incentive.

The results of the 11th SED Congress are also in line with common causes and joint tasks. The supreme forum of GDR Communists has done great and fruitful work. The decisions it has taken open up a new stage in the building of socialism in the GDR. It has armed the republic's Communists and working people with a clear action program to accelerate socioeconomic development on the most modern scientific and technical basis. There are clear-cut prospects for further improving the people's life.

The congress geared the party and all working people to comprehensively strengthen in every possible way the indissoluble fraternal friendship and alliance with the CPSU and the USSR and with the fraternal parties and countries of the socialist community. The objective need to accelerate the resolution of the complex tasks posed by the times requires the closest cooperation among the fraternal states in the political, economic, scientific, technical, and other spheres. The cooperation must now be raised to a significantly higher level.

The stronger socialism is, the stronger peace is. But socialism too needs peace to reveal all the potential inherent in our system. The fraternal countries also have common goals and tasks in this area. In the foreign policy sphere the decisions of the 11th SED Congress define the implementation of the comprehensive program put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress for ensuring universal peace and eliminating all types of nuclear weapons by the year 2000 as a main task. The USSR's constructive new peace-loving initiatives put forward in the speech by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee at the 11th SED Congress were ardently supported by the delegates to the supreme forum of GDR Communists and by representatives from the socialist countries' fraternal parties and other foreign delegations. The initiatives gave the forum a particular resonance.

The Soviet Union and the socialist community countries will continue to act with a full realization of their responsibility for the cause of peace. The Soviet proposals aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and curbing the arms race remain in force. The USSR also proposes reaching an agreement on a significant reduction in all components of ground forces and tactical aircraft in the European states and in the relevant U.S. and Canadian forces stationed in Europe. The fraternal countries attach great importance to saving mankind from chemical weapons.

Like the congresses of other ruling Marxist-Leninist parties, the supreme SED forum reaffirmed Communists' active resolve to constantly improve socialist society and to improve the attractiveness of the new social system as a graphic example. The fraternal parties and countries will continue to struggle selflessly shoulder to shoulder for the ideals of peace and justice and for the happiness of all working people.

IZVESTIYA VIEWS RESULTS OF 11TH SED CONGRESS

[Editorial: "Socialism and Peace Are Inseparable"]

[Text] "There is only one force on earth that is truly struggling for peace — the Soviet Union... The victorious march of socialism in the Soviet Union is our strongest argument..." These are the words of Ernst Thaelmann. They were spoken over 50 years ago, when the militarist circles of German imperialism were still only paving the way for Hitler's fascism.

Some 50 years ago... And they became prophetic. The banner of socialism now flutters proudly over one-third of the globe. The progress of all modern society is rightly linked with world socialism, with the powerful international formation.

Loyalty to the behests of the leader of the German Communists was convincingly confirmed during the recent celebation of the centenary of his birth by the working people of the GDR — the first socialist German worker-peasant state. Loyalty to the behests of the revolutionaries and Communists and the ideas of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, loyalty to their friendship with the Soviet Union, was the leitmotif of all the work of the recent 11th SED Congress. It is with its purposeful activity that the establishment and development of the GDR as an independent and sovereign state, the implementation of profound socioeconomic transformations in the country, and the rapid flowering of science and culture are inextricably linked. For 5 days the supreme party forum worked in the Berlin Palace of the Republic. In a businesslike, workmanlike atmosphere the delegates carefully discussed the SED Central Committee report delivered by Comrade Erich Honecker and wholly and fully approved the political line and practical activity of the party Central Committee since the 10th congress.

The directives adopted by the congress for the 5-year plan for the development of the GDR's national economy for 1986-1990 outline a large-scale program for further boosting the Republic's economy. It defines precisely the course toward the accelerated introduction of the widespread intensification of production processes on the basis of modern achievements of science and technology and toward the further consolidation of the unity of economic and social policy.

Analyzing the work that has been done and outlining the prospects for the future, the delegates spoke with sincere interest of the beneficial influence exerted on the political atmosphere in the Republic by the historic decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. Our German friends unanimously emphasized that the presence at the 11th SED Congress of the CPSU delegation headed by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev lent powerful impetus and special meaning to the work of the party forum.

The participants in the congress listened with great attention to the speech of the CPSU Central Committee general secretary in which he stressed the need, at the present extraordinarily crucial, essentially critical stage of history, to make fuller use of the advantages of the socialist social system to accelerate scientific-technical, economic, and social progress. This task can be successfully carried out only when collaboration between our countries in all spheres of public activity has been raised to a new, higher level in accordance with the requirements of the time.

Augmenting the might of socialism and strengthening the fraternal community's unity and cohesion -- that is the paramount duty of the Communists and all working people of the socialist countries.

The attraction of socialism and the consolidation of its positions in the international arena will depend to a decisive degree on the fulfillment of this very important task.

The CPSU Central Committee Politburo, having approved the work of the Soviet party delegation, has expressed satisfaction at the total coincidence of the positions of our parties and states on all questions of socialist building and international policy. It rated highly the mutual desire of the Soviet Union and the GDR to further intensify their fraternal cooperation in economic, scientific-technical, spiritual, and other spheres for the sake of accelerating the development of the socialist community, in the interests of socialism and peace.

Engaged in peaceful, constructive labor, our peoples consider it vital to do everything possible to preserve and strengthen peace and prevent a nuclear catastrophe. The final documents of the 11th SED Congress and the delegates' speeches discussing the party's foreign policy activity assessed highly the comprehensive program put forward by the 27th CPSU congress for ensuring world peace and aimed at freeing mankind from all types of nuclear weapons by the year 2000 and creating an all-embracing system of international security.

The unceasing nuclear explosions in Nevada, the provocative action against Libya, the fuelling of threats against Nicaragua, the support for the bandit groups in Angola, Afghanistan, and Cambodia, and many other similar acts of provocation cannot be viewed in isolation. This is all a manifestation of the overall course of the U.S. Administration, whose militarist orientation has been fully revealed now.

And it is therefore no accident that profound concern and grave alarm for the destiny of peace could be discerned in the speeches of the 11th congress delegates and guests and in the frank talks which the rank and file Communists and workers of Berlin had with the head of the Soviet party delegation. It was with a feeling of profound satisfaction that not only the participants in the congress but also tens of millions of television viewers who watched the direct broadcast from Berlin's Palace of the Republic welcomed the announcement of the Soviet Union's new initiatives, which open up broad opportunities for a radical reduction of conventional armaments in Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals.

Detente, trust, cooperation, the inviolability of existing borders, respect for each other's legitimate interests -- these are the milestones of the path we propose which will enable Europe to strengthen peace.

"A world without wars, without weapons, is the ideal of socialism," the CPSU Program stresses. The recent congresses of the fraternal Marxist-Leninist parties call the Communists and all working people of the socialist community countries to a tireless struggle for the ideals of peace and socialism.

FURTHER ON VISIT OF CYPRIOT FOREIGN MINISTER

Meets With Gromyko

LD291912 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1730 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] A talk took place on 29 April in the Kremlin between Andrey Andreyevich Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and Yeoryios Iakovou, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Cyprus. The guest from Cyprus and those accompanying him are in the Soviet Union on an official visit.

During the conversation mutual satisfaction was expressed that the first official visit by a Cypriot minister of foreign affairs in the history of bilateral relations is proceeding successfully and that it reflects the friendly nature of ties between both states.

Comrade Gromyko stated that the Soviet Union will continue to come forward in support of the independence, unity, sovereignty, and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus. Soviet policy is aimed against external intervention into the internal affairs of the Cypriots. The USSR desires a really just solution to the Cypriot problem within the framework of the United Nations, which would take into account the legitimate interests of both communities living on the island. To this end, in January this year the Soviet Union put forward proposals on the principles of a Cypriot settlement and ways of achieving it. The Soviet proposals found a broad positive response in the world.

Attention was paid to the fact that the whole region of the Mediterranean, North Africa, and the Near East is a place where tension is not lessening, but rather, increasing. Is there a guarantee that Washington's attack on Libya willnotbe repeated? There is no such guarantee. And that means the forces of aggression are pushing mankind toward the abyss.

Yeoryios Iakovou expressed gratitutde for the assistance that the Soviet Union is rendering to resolve the problem of Cyprus. His side assesses highly the Soviet initiative in the settlement of the Cyprus issue, stressing its importance and timelines. At the same time the problem of Cyprus is an international one, one that is impossible to resolve without an international conference. The Republic of Cyprus believes that at such a conference it would be possible to examine international aspects of the problems, which would also exert influence on the resolution of internal aspects.

Comrade Gromyko stated that the Soviet Union adheres to the same point of view. The problem of Cyprus must be resolved precisely at an international conference. The attention of the guests was drawn to the basic directions of the USSR's socioeconomic development and the foreign policy strategy of the Soviet state which was determined by the 27th CPSU Congress. Stress was laid on the importance of the concept of a nuclear-free world and the idea of creating the foundations of an all-embracing system of international security voiced by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary.

The foreign affairs minister of Cyprus conveyed to Comrade Gromyko friendly greetings and good wishes from Kiprianou, the President of Cyprus. Mutual satisfaction was expressed at the present level of traditionally friendly Soviet-Cypriot relations.

Comments on U.S. 'Aggression'

LD300532 Moscow TASS in English 1819 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 29 TASS -- Yeoryios Iakovou, minister of foreign affairs of Cyprus, paying an official visit to the Soviet Union, voiced worry over the aggravation of the situation in the Mediterranean because of the recent U.S. act of aggression against Libya. Armed aggression is not a method for the settlement of international problems, he said at a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists at the Press Centre of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR today.

There is a direct relationship between the settlement of the problem of Cyprus and increased tension in the region. The foreign minister expressed the confidence that the just settlement of the Cyprus problem would have a beneficial effect on the situation in the region as a whole.

Answering a question from a correspondent of the SANA news agency, Yeoryios Iakovou stressed that Cyprus was against the use of British military bases in the territory of the country for acts of hostility towards neighbouring states.

PRAVDA NOTES WEST EUROPEAN ATTITUDE TOWARD PEACE

PM241549 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Dispatch by own correspondent Yu. Kharlanov: "Europe: There Is No Other Path"]

[Text] Brussels, April -- They say that one swallow does not make a spring. The saying was thought up by people. But the swallow does not know it. Even if it is still cold the swallow is already flying to its home. And sooner or later spring begins.

This tradition is persistant, nevertheless, there is a reluctance or fear of doing something under cover of excuses like "mine is a small matter" or "it's no concern of mine." There are equivalents to these pseudo-wisdoms in every European language. And it would be a good thing if they were used only by individuals. No, this "self-abasement that goes beyond pride" is to be encountered more and more in Western Europe when talk turns to politics and the destiny of whole countries and the entire continent. A fixed stereotype has also already appeared: The destiny of mankind is resolved "only" in relationships between the two world "superpowers." The West European countries that are U.S. allies have no other way out in foreign and military policy except "solidarity" that that means subjection to instructions from Washington. True, the U.S. military adventure against Libya undertaken despite West European opinion has markedly shaken loyal sentiments, but will that be for long?

It is with a special feeling of discomfort that you follow this timid backward glance at the transatlantic power when talk turns to genuinely European problems, above all the continent's security. You can feel this right now, when the voice of reason and hope has again been heard from Moscow. It was heard when the Soviet Union supplemented its program for the gradual abolition of weapons of mass destruction by the end of the century with detailed proposals for a radical reduction in the level of military antagonism in Europe in the field of conventional armaments.

But to understand the difficult position in which Western Europe finds itself, those who, on the pretext of "Atlantic solidarity," are preaching subservience to Washington's militarist course should be reminded of the response to the Soviet nuclear disarmament program.

When, on 15 January, this program was made public, it seemed that everyone in the NATO countries welcomed it. Even the central organs of the North Atlantic bloc stated that the Soviet proposals would be studied painstakingly and comprehensively. But that was where the matter ended and the fruits of this study are so far not to be seen. On the other hand, the campaign has been unleashed with new force on the subject of how the U.S. allies allegedly have no cause to interfere in the business of nuclear arms limitation, that this problem is the exclusive concern of relations between Washington and Moscow.

At the instigation of U.S. General B. Rogers, commander in chief of the NATO forces in Europe, the propaganda of the thesis that the total elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe is not to the West European's advantage is now being propagandized from the roof-tops. Here the NATO propagandists are already beginning to make generalizations: "The European allies who used to approve the idea of abolishing medium-range missile weapons or the so-called zero option later expressed the view that the Soviet proposal entails a fundamental risk.

They are worried that the disappearance of these nuclear missiles will emphasize Soviet superiority in the sphere of conventional weapons and undermine U.S. nuclear guarantees of Western Europe's security."

Who is saying this on behalf of the 10 or so states many of which have still given no definitive answer on this problem? William (Drozdyak), THE WASHINGTON POST's Bonn correspondent. Of course, a categorical statement of this kind is one form of bringing pressure to bear on the West European public. But, alas, as the past shows, Washington's pressure, despite its use of the most insolent forms, has frequently been crowned with success here.

It is now quite hard for the (Drozdyaks) and those who stand behind them when the Soviet Union offers to engage specifically in the reduction of not only nuclear missile but also conventional armaments. The Soviet Union is suggesting reaching agreement on a substantial reduction of the European states' troops and tactical aircraft and the corresponding forces of the United States and Canada deployed in Europe. At the same time there would be a reduction in operational-tactical nuclear armaments. All Europe -- from the Atlantic to the Urals -- should become the zone of reduction. The USSR advocates reliable verification [kontrol] at all stages of the process with the aid of national means and international forms of inspection [proverka] including where necessary on-site inspection [inspektsiya].

The world welcomed with approval the new Soviet initiatives which, as AFP remarked, "have filled the last gap in the general plan, proposing a reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces in Europe. Specialists in the arms field, AFP notes, "have also appreciated the fact that despite the international crisis caused by the U.S. attack on Libya, the Soviet Union has not stopped its campaign, continuing to make new proposals to the West on disarmament issues."

However, not everyone was pleased by these proposals, which have deprived them of further grounds for alleging that the elimination fo nuclear armaments would give the Soviet Union unilateral advantages in conventional armaments. And now aid from the transatlantic ally has immediately come. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger has recommended to the West Europeans that they "treat with the utmost caution any plans of the Russians to alter the structure of forces in Europe... It is important that you realize that we must resist this."

In general, what is striking is the ease with which sovereign countries, which in other matters treat their sovereignty so scrupulously, are so obedient to diktat from the United States and NATO and take decisions which contradict their own national interests and are denounced by the public. For instance, the Belgian and FRG Governments intend to extend the period of military service as the NATO organs are demanding.

Since the Soviet Union put forward its proposals for eliminating medium-range missiles in Europe and substantially reducing conventional armaments, the most logical thing for the Netherlands Government would seem to be to take its time in pushing through parliment the bill authorizing the deployment of U.S. cruise missiles in the country. All the more so since according to the NATO schedule their introduciton is to begin in 1988. No, The Hague, under pressure from Washington and NATO, has displayed haste, even violating the Constitution and traditions. It is demanding that these important and contentious decisions be taken by parliment, not simply by a majority vote, but by a minimum of two-thirds of deputies' votes.

When you speak of all these illogicalities, your interlocutors, who are trying to justify them, as a rule make do with one argument: We are U.S. allies. But there are over 200 million Americans.

Why not be the allies of those people in the United States who assess realistically the situation and correlations of forces in the world? Why must they repeat their "zigzags," following each new U.S. Administration? Why follow the path leading to the brink of nuclear war? Why not come out with their own initiatives for preventing this catastrophe? "What do you mean?" they answer me, "one swallow does not make a spring."

Fortunately, in Western Europe and the world as a whole there are people who have not been hypnotized by this saying. I have attended an extraordinary congress of the Labor Party, the main opposition force of the Netherlands. During the congress a special ballot was held and a resolution was adopted demanding the rejection of the deployment of U.S. first-strike weapons on the Netherlands' soil.

And in Belgium, the trial at which the authorities tried to achieve the indictment of seven participants in antimissile demonstrations close to the air base in Florennes ended in a victory for the organizers of the antiwar demonstrations. A court ruling vindicating the participants in the demonstration was greeted tumultuously not only by the Belgians gathered in the hall, but also by the women taking part in antimissile demonstrations at the Greenham Common base, who had made a special trip from Britain.

In the Florennes City Park, representatives of Belgium's antiwar movements planted Japanese cherry tree shoots. "May this cherry orchard be a permanent reminder of the tragedy of Hiroshima nd Nagasaki and the need to prevent a nuclear catastrophe on earth," (I. Zekkin), a member of the peace movement Florennes, said.

"Nothing can justify any slackening of vigilance on the part of the peace movement, which has repeatedly demonstrated its force both in our country and in other West European countries," Claude Renard, vice president of the Communist Party of Belgium, notes in the NOUVELLE GAZETTE. "Genuine detente can only begin on the basis of specific measures that wil confirm the will of both sides to finally halt the arms race, which entails a mortal threat and the monstrous squandering of material resources."

"In the struggle for peace and the elimination of the nuclear threat, the contribution of every country and every people is of importance," I was told by Rene Urbani, chairman of the Communist Party of Luxembourg. "That is why the Luxembourg Communists have instructed me to submit a request to parliament. In it we demand a positive response to the program of peace, detente, and the world's transformation into a completely nuclear-free zone put forward by the USSR. And if Luxembourg, in supporting these noble aims, becomes the first swallow in the West, respect for it in the world would only increase."

The West European countries are not that weak and helpless in the international arena. Their concerns are not peripheral but at the very center of the policy of confrontation which NATO pursues where the two blocs meet. If they display the desire for resolute actions in favor of detente, it will be possible in a brief historical period to achieve a breakthrough, as the experience of the seventies has shown.

The program for reducing military antagonism in Europe was set forth by the Soviet Union. It is specific and realistic in the field of nuclear missile and conventional armaments. Headway along this path will not lessen, rather it will strengthen the security of all countries taking part.

Its fulfillment would demonstrate the reality of the peaceful alternative and would advance the solution of problems facing mankind and help reverse the process of man's slide toward nuclear catastrophe.

Of course, the implementation of this concept of security requires resolve and a persistent struggle and the breaking of traditions which have remained standing for centuries. But in the face of the threat of nuclear catastrophere there is no other path. It is time to take the first steps along this path.

...And the swallows have already arrived. They are circling over Brussels' parks. The spring, albeit a late one, has begun.

KHADDAM REITERATES REJECTION OF U.S.-ISRAELI PLANS

LD291250 Moscow TASS in English 1223 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Damascus April 29 TASS — The Syrian Arab Republic will continue countering the U.S.-Israeli plans for a Middle East settlement on a capitulatory and separate basis, Vice President 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam of Syria said here.

The USA, Israel and their assistants, he said, wish to withdraw from the agenda a just settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict and its core — the Palestinian problem. All of their plans are being directed at establishing the rule of U.S. imperialism and its strategic partner in the Arab east.

A.H. Khaddam stressed that a lasting comprehensive peace in the region can be reached only through the withdrawal of all Israeli troops from the occupied territories and recognition of the inalienable legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination and creation of an independent state.

TOLKUNOV DISCUSSES IMPRESSIONS OF TUNISIA VISIT

PM281022 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Visit Ends"]

[Text] Tunis, 24 Apr — A delegation of the USSR Supreme Soviet headed by L.N. Tolkunov, chairman of the Supreme Soviet Soviet of the Union, was in Tunisia on an official visit 16-23 April. The delegation included T.B. Guzhenko, USSR minister of the maritime fleet; A.S. Kishlar, Moldavian SSR minister of land reclamation and water resources; and A.D. Melikov, member of the USSR Soviet of the Union Public Education and Culture Commission.

At the end of the visit, giving his impressions, the leader of the delegation told a TASS correspondent: Our delegation visited Tunisia at the invitation of the Tunisian National Assembly. It was a return visit following the stay in the Soviet Union last summer of a Tunisian parliamentary delegation headed by National Assembly President M. Messadi. During our stay in this Arab country we have had friendly meetings and talks with Tunisian President H. Bourguiba, Prime Minister M. Mzali, National Assembly President M. Messadi, and other officials.

The Soviet delegation handed President H. Bourguiba a message from the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium.

We acquainted ourselves with the work of the National Assembly and its role in the life of the Tunisian state. In turn, our delegation passed on the Soviet Union's experience in state-building and reported on our country's socioeconomic development in light of the tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress.

During the friendly meetings with Tunisian leaders and parliamentarians, the state of parliamentary relations between the USSR and Tunisia was examined. The sides expressed the firm wish to develop them further and also to expand Soviet-Tunisian cooperation in the economic, scientific, technical, trade, cultural, and interparliamentary spheres and their desire to contribute to the cause of strengthening mutual understanding between our countries and peoples.

The USSR Supreme Soviet delegation, L.N. Tolkunov went on, briefed the Tunisian leaders on the new Soviet peace initiatives set forth in the Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress; the 15 January 1986 statement of M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; and other speeches by the Soviet leader. It explained the USSR's stance on the Middle East problem, the Palestinian question, and the situation in the Mediterranean in connection with the barbaric U.S. aggression against Libya -- an independent and sovereign state and UN member.

During the examination of international problems we noted with satisfaction that our stances are close or coincide on such key modern issues as the struggle against the threat of nuclear war and the arms race, the extension of the arms race to space, and for a radical improvement in the international atmosphere.

The Tunisian side kindly invited us to make a tour of the country and to acquaint ourselves with its socioeconomic development projects and its achievements in the sphere of culture and public education. Wherever we went, we saw the fruits of national liberation. The country is on the upturn, large-scale construction is under way everywhere. The national cadre training system has reached a high standard, and Tunisian engineers and technicians are designing, building, and managing complex modern enterprises themselves. Much attention is being paid to the development of trades. Tunisia's successes in the sphere of public education and its achievements in the sphere of health care and the preservation and enrichment of national culture are impressive.

We visited the cities of Monastir, Sousse, and Bizerte, where we met and talked to these provinces' governors and heads of national enterprises and acquainted ourselves with the life of the Tunisian population. We visited the island of Jerba, where an important tourist center is being built, and also Tunisia's national engineering college where the national cadres are molded and which has Soviet specialists on its staff. We also visited one of the biggest irrigation installations in northern Tunisia, the dam across the Jumin River, which was built with Soviet technical assistance, and the ship repair yard in Bizerte.

On behalf of the USSR Supreme Soviet, the delegation laid a wreath at the foot of the monument to Tunisian patriots who gave their lives in the struggle against foreign colonizers and for the freedom and independence of their motherland.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that the Tunisian people accorded us a warm and cordial welcome everywhere. The representatives of the Land of the Soviets were greeted by workers at national enterprises, builders of irrigation installations, and students at educational establishments.

We were also pleased to note that the Tunisian press and other news media which gave extensive coverage to the USSR Supreme Soviet delegation's visit emphaiszed that the visit will contribute to the strenthening of friendly relations and equitable and businesslike cooperation between the peoples of the USSR and Tunisia. We are taking home with us the pleasantest of impressions from our visit to the friendly Republic of Tunisia.

The USSR Supreme Soviet delegation left for home by air. It was seen off at the airport by M. Messadi, president of the Tunisian National Assembly, and other officials including V.L. Kizichenko, Soviet ambassador to Tunisia.

On 24 April the delegation returned to Moscow.

It was met at the airport by A.E. Voss, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of Nationalities, and other officials.

TASS CITES ETHIOPIAN PAPER ON U.S. PROVOCATION

LD271314 Moscow TASS in English 1213 GMT 27 Apr 86

[Text] Addis Ababa April 27 TASS -- The U.S. Administration banks on fanning up international tension, ignores efforts of peaceful countries aimed at curbing the arms race and preserving peace, writes the Ethiopian government newspaper ADDIS ZEMEN. Washington is working on the "star wars" programme which can bring about a disaster for all mankind, frequently exploiting space flights for spy purposes. Provocative actions of the present U.S. Administration at the U.N. against representatives of socialist countries is a graphic example of its imperial policy. The demand on cutting the personnel of their missions to the United Nations runs counter to the charter of the world organization, underlines the paper.

[Text] Khartoum April 25 TASS -- Political consultations and negotiations are under way in Khartoum between leaders of parties and public organizations with a view of forming a civilian government.

General elections to the Constituent Assembly are known to have been held in the Sudan on April 1-12. The Al Umma party won the greatest number of seats in the course of the elections. At a press conference held here, its leader Sadiq al-Mahdi put forward the idea of forming a coalition government on the basis of the political action programme proposed by the Al Umma party. One of its main aims, he said, is to make good the consequences of the rule of the overthrown Numayri regime.

CHAD REPORTED PREPARING FOR MILITARY OPERATION

LD261306 Moscow TASS in English 1247 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Paris April 26 TASS -- The Hissein Habre regime in Chad, supported by French and Zaire troops, is preparing a military operation against the country's northern areas, bordering on Libya, and controlled by the Transitional National Unity Government.

This is reported in a communique of the Transitional Government which has been distributed here. The document calls upon the Organization of African Unity to cut short preparations for broader foreign armed interference in to the internal conflict in Chad.

U.S., UK, CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES BEGIN JOINT EXERCISES

LD291319 Moscow TASS in English 1234 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 29 TASS — Joint naval exercises with the participation of the USA, Britain, Jamaica and six other east Caribbean nations have opened in the Caribbean. Taking part in the exercises codenamed "Ocean Venture - 86" are 10,000 servicemen of the U.S. Army, 14 U.S. ships and one ship from Britain and Jamaica each. In the course of the exercises troops will be landed in Grenada and Vieques Island in Puerto Rico.

EXERCISES MAY BE 'COVER' FOR PUNITIVE ACTION

LD291501 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0230 GMT 29 Apr 86

[From the "International Diary" program presented by Aleksandr Korshunov]

[Text] The United States backs up its threats with real actions. Exercises by U.S. troops and the U.S. Navy and also by the so-called Caribbean forces, the same ones that helped Washington to suppress the revolution in Grenada 3 years ago, have begun in the Caribbean Basin. According to official statements by U.S. military representatives, the "Ocean Venture-86" maneuvers are being carried out in order to demonstrate the U.S. ability to use its military might to defend its national interests. In the current tense situation in Central America, it cannot be ruled out that a punitive action against Nicaragua is being prepared under cover of just these exercises.

CIA-SPONSORED CONTRAS PLAN ATTACKS ON U.S. EMBASSIES

LD291403 Moscow TASS in English 1345 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Montreal April 29 TASS — The "contras" on the CIA payroll plan to launch terrorist actions against the U.S. Embassy in a number of Central American countries with a view to charging Nicaragua with these crimes and provoking reply measures against that country, the Canadian CBC radio broadcasting corporation reports. It follows from the CBC report that the plan devised by Somozists and their patrons envisages, among other things, a bomb explosion in the building of the U.S. diplomatic mission in Costa Rica and the killing of the ambassador. Similar acts of sabotage have been planned against the Presidential Palace and also the U.S. Embassy in Honduras.

Under the scenario written for them, the mercenaries intend to stage their terrorist actions in uniforms of the fighting men of the Sandinist People's Army. According to reliable information received from "contras" themselves, these actions will be enough to provoke the United States to direct intervention against Nicaragua.

Reportage on Chernobyl Nuclear Plant Accident

'Preliminary Data' on Accident

PM301004 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 30 Apr 86 Second Edition p 1

["From the USSR Council of Ministers" — KRASNAYA ZVEZDA headline]

[Text] As has already been reported in the press, an accident has taken place at the Chernobyl nuclear power station 130 kilometers north of Kiev. A government commission headed by Boris Scherbina, a deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers, is working on the spot [na meste]. It includes the heads of ministries and departments and leading scientists and specialists.

According to preliminary data, the accident took place in one of the areas of the fourth power-generating unit and resulted in destruction of part of the structural elements of the building housing the reactor, damage to the reactor, and a certain leak of radioactive substances. The three other power-generating units have been shut down; they are in order in the operational reserve. Two persons were killed during the accident.

Priority measures have been taken to eliminate the consequences of the accident. The radiation situation at the electric power station and the adjacent territory has now been stabilized [Moscow World Service in English at 1800 GMT on 29 April in a similar report uses the phrase "has now fallen off"] and the necessary medical aid is being given to those affected. The inhabitants of the nuclear power station's settlement and three nearby populated localities have been evacuated.

The state of the radiation situation at the Chernobyl nuclear power station and the adjacent territory is being monitored continuously.

'Stimulator' Damaged

GF291254 Baku International Service in Azeri 1200 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] The Soviet Government has issued a report in Moscow on the accident that has occurred in the Ukrainian SSR's Chernobyl nuclear power plant. One of the stimulators [muharrik] has been damaged. The results of the accident are being removed and those who have suffered are being helped. This is the first accident in the nuclear power plants in the Soviet Union. A government committee has been set up to investigate the causes of the accident.

Official Confirmation of Date

AU301048 Paris AFP in English 1039 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Helsinki, April 30 (AFP) — The Soviet Foreign Ministry told Finland on Wednesday that the Ukraine nuclear accident occurred Saturday, the Finnish news agency reported here. The ministry told the Finnish ambassador that no special precautions were planned to protect the local population, although radiation levels were "higher than usual".

The Foreign Ministry statement cited here was the first official confirmation of the date of the nuclear accident at the Chernobyl plant north of Kiev.

The Soviet ministry told the ambassador that radiation levels "around the place" of the accident were "higher than usual", but that "the authorities do not envisage special measures to protect the (local) population", the agency said.

Fire 'Cannot be Extinguished'

LD291443 Hamburg DPA in German 1408 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Bonn, 29 Apr (DPA) — According to information available in Bonn, the reactor core of the Soviet nuclear power plant in Chernobyl, near Kiev, has melted down for as yet unknown reasons. Such an accident is described as a super-MCA in nuclear safety terminology.

Reports say that the graphite, which has caught fire and which is needed for the process of nuclear fission, cannot be extinguished by normal means but only by starving it completely of air. As long as the fire is not under control, further chain reactions will take place with the release of radioactivity.

The research ministry pointed out that the best information about dealing with such an accident is to be found at the Juelich nuclear research plant. The ministry emphasized that currently there is no danger to the FRG.

Graphite Rods Probably Burning

AU291551 Paris AFP in English 1540 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Paris, April 29 (AFP) — The unexplained "accident" at the Soviet Chernobyl nuclear plant Monday probably ignited the graphite control rods that slow the pace of nuclear fission at the reactor's core, experts here said Tuesday. They said the rods probably caught fire under tremendous temperatures produced when part of the reactor core fused.

Jean Petit, deputy director of the Nuclear Protection and Surety Institute of the French Atomic Energy Commission, said such a fire could spread to hundreds of tons of graphite in the reactor core and last several days.

That hypothesis was supported by Soviet requests to Sweden and West Germany on Tuesday for information and expertise on the control of nuclear plant fires.

Unless contained, the destruction of the graphite rods could in principle lead to a "meltdown," the most serious nuclear plant mishap, in which temperatures rising uncontrolled eventually melt the reactor core. West German nuclear experts were quoted late Tuesday as saying a total meltdown had already occurred at the Chernobyl reactor, 150 km (90 miles) north of Kiev in the Ukraine, but those reports could not be confirmed.

Mr. Petit said the use of classic firefighting techniques to control a reactor fire could trigger unpredictable chemical reactions with results that might include an increase in radioactive material and its release into the environment.

Mr. Petit said levels of radioactivity around the plant should not go above those already recorded, but that the fire could continue the high levels over a longer period of time. He said that, given the circumstances and the type and intensity of the escaped radiation, the best thing the Soviet authorities could do would be to confine residents within a 20 km (12 mile) radius of the plant to their homes.

One aggravating factor in the Chernobyl incident is the lack of a thick reinforced concrete containment shell, a form of which is part of most of the world's nuclear plants, including most in the Soviet Union.

It was such a concrete shell that prevented the 1979 accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant in Pennsylvania from turning into a disaster after two-thirds of the reactor core melted down.

The concrete shell contained virtually all the radioactivity released by the meltdown, and contains it still in a sealed off concrete vault.

The Chernobyl nuclear plant has no such protection against release of radioactivity, the experts said.

'Two Reactors Exploded'

HK300250 Hong Kong AFP in English 0229 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Helsinki, April 29 (Afp) — More than 25,000 people were evacuated last weekend from the area around the damaged Soviet nuclear plant at Chernobyl, according to Finnish tourists returning here Tuesday and quoting their Soviet guide. Ritva Eloranta, interviewed on television, also quoted the group's guide as saying in Kiev on Sunday morning that "two reactors exploded 160 kms (100 miles) from here, but we are in no danger."

Western scientists believe the nuclear accident occurred on Saturday, though it was not reported by Soviet officials until Monday. Chernobyl is some 150 kms north of Kiev in the Ukraine. Mrs Eloranta said that "life appeared to be normal in Kiev Sunday morning."

A Finnish businessman who was in Kiev on Monday said on returning here that the situation there "appeared to be normal."

Reactor Damaged During Cleaning

LD291716 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1654 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 29 Apr (TANJUG) — The TANJUG correspondent in Moscow rang up Kiev tonight. He was told that at the moment there is no fear of intensified radiation or panic in the city following the accident involving the Chernobyl nuclear plant which is about 130 kms from the Ukrainian capital city.

Well-informed domestic sources claim that the accident happened when the reactors were stopped for cleaning. When that was being done one of the reactors was damaged mechanically. Measures are being taken to halt the radiation. Safety measures have been taken, that is to say, the population has been evacuated.

Help Sought From Sweden, FRG

AU291250 Paris AFP in English 1242 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Stockholm, April 29 (AFP) — The Soviet Embassy here on Tuesday asked Swedish authorities for all their "experience and knowledge" on the control of fires in graphite type nuclear power plants, the Swedish Foreign Ministry said. The ministry spokesman said Sweden was unable to help since its four nuclear plants are of another type. He said the Soviet request was made to the Swedish Institute for Protection Against Radioactivity, and the Inspector- General for Nuclear Reactors.

A Scandinavian correspondent in Bonn reported that the Soviet Union had made a similar request of West German authorities.

FRG, French Offer Help

AU291545 Paris AFP in English 1534 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Bonn, April 29 (AFP) — The Soviet Embassy here has asked the West German energy information centre Atomforum to provide help in fighting the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear plant in the Ukraine, near Kiev, the centre said. It was one of a number of distress calls from the Soviet Union on Tuesday. At least two West German nuclear research institutes are reported to have responded to the Soviet request.

West German experts said graphite fires of this type are rare and therefore hard to control. They said it seemed the core of the nuclear reactor had melted down, the worst possible accident which can happen in a nuclear plant.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in New Delhi, where he is on a visit, that his country was prepared to help the Soviet Union with the consequences of the accident. The West German Government has not received any official call for help from the Soviet authorities, a government source in Bonn said.

In Paris Francois Cogne, head of the Nuclear Protection and Safety Institute of the Atomic Energy Commission offered French aid in the form of advice, and files on graphite type reactors in the seven French plants.

His deputy Jean Petit said that the French offer included medical treatment for personnel at the damaged plant who may have been contaminated by radiation. France had considerable experience in the field and had treated people suffering from radiation over a number of years.

Soviet requests for help began to come in on Tuesday, the day after Moscow, in a terse and imprecise announcement, reported an accident at the plant at Chernobyl, 150 kms (90 miles) north of Kiev. Soviet authorities, normally reticent about admitting to such accidents, were believed to have been forced into doing so after a sharp rise in radioactivity levels in neighboring countries.

Thousands Reported Evacuated

AU291339 Paris AFP in English 1226 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Moscow, April 29 (AFP) — The Soviet Union Tuesday asked Western countries for help in fighting the Chernobyl disaster as it set up a security zone around the damaged nuclear plant and evacuated tens of thousands of people, Western sources said here Tuesday.

The Western sources here said the security zone around the plant in the Ukraine had a radius of 30 kilometers (19 miles), but that the nearby city of Kiev, 133 kms (83 miles) to the south and the Soviet Union's third largest, was not threatened. Inside the security zone are the village of Chernobyl and the new satellite city of Pripiat, built for the plant's staff, and which had 30,000 inhabitants in 1980.

Residents Near Accident Evacuated

LD291231 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] We now go over to Moscow for the latest Soviet news on the accident at the nuclear power plant in Chernobyl, Ukraine. A large area around the plant has been evacuated. In Kiev, population 1 million, about 10 miles from Chernobyl, life continues normally. Elisabeth Medborg reports:

Information on what exactly happened in the town of Chernobyl in northern Ukraine is still very scarce and contradictory. However, very well-informed sources told me just now that all the people in a radius of 30 km from the scene of the accident have been evacuated. The evacuation took place yesterday, according to information, and the people have been transferred to, quote: to other locations. These pieces of information coincide with other pieces of information that say a large number of trucks were seen yesterday moving northwards from Kiev, capital of the Ukraine. Also, there are no buses available for ordinary city traffic because, presumably, they are being used to evacuate the residents of Chernobyl. My sources also reported that the special government committee, which was appointed, has given its first report, according to which the situation in the area is said to be calm. On the other hand, no one knows yet how many dead or injured there are.

The information that I and other Western colleagues here in Moscow have been able to get from Kiev, which is situated only a few miles south of the disaster area, indicates that life at least there goes on as normal, even though the accident happened practically right next door to the city.

The Soviet public still does not know anything more of what has occurred than what was said last night on Soviet TV news. Generally, people here have a very poor understanding of nuclear power and the possible risks involved with it. This could be one of the reasons why panic has evidently not occurred — in any case in Kiev. This is Elisabeth Medborg in Moscow.

Deaths Reported in Chernobyl

OW291320 Tokyo NHK Television Network in Japanese 1000 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpt] In connection with the reported Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident, NHK Moscow correspondent Kobayashi has filed the following report:

[Begin recording] The Soviet Union, responding to queries from Sweden and other North European countries that had monitored radioactivity, made a brief announcement on the night of 28 April acknowledging that there had been an accident. However, television and radio broadcasts have since kept silent on this subject. The Atomic Energy Committee has been refusing to answer queries, while information agencies say they do not know when the next announcment will be forthcoming on this issue. Consequently, there is no overall picture of the accident available at the moment.

Located 130 km south of Chernobyl is Kiev, capital city of the Ukraine with a population of 2.5 million. The airline service between Moscow and Kiev remains normal with seven flights daily. According to reports from tourist bureau officials in Kiev, while they cannot receive foreigners because there are no vacancies in hotels, one can see no major changes at least in the daily life of the citizens.

On the other hand, however, experts say that Chernobyl is a city situated on the coast of the Kiev reservoir built by damming the Dnieper River and therefore, it is quite possible that the accident will result in water pollution. [end recording]

Meanwhile, an official of Kiev city, which is close to Chernobyl, said in a telephone conversation with the KYODO Moscow bureau on 29 April that deaths [shisha] had been reported in the accident.

Nuclear power generating accounts for 9 percent of the total electricity output in the Soviet Union. Because of the sluggish oil production, however, the Soviet Government has a plan to bring it up to 30 percent over a 15-year period. It seems to be inevitable that the Chernobyl accident will have an impact on Soviet plans to strengthen nuclear power generating programs.

Ham Operator Says Countless Dead

AU301020 Paris AFP in English 1015 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] The Hague, April 30 (AFP) — The Chernobyl nuclear accident "certainly caused hundreds of deaths, perhaps many, many more," and led to the evacuation of tens of thousands of people, a Soviet radio enthusiast in the Kiev region told a Japanese radio ham on Tuesday. The conversation, picked up on short-wave by Dutchman Annis Kofman, in the northern Dutch town of Bergen, said radiation levels are so high that rescue teams are unable to enter the disaster zone to pick up the bodies.

"Tens and tens of thousands of people and cattle" are being evacuated from the region, the Soviet man said. Water and food were also in short supply because of contamination.

Two reactors of the four-reactor plant at Chernobyl have been "totally destroyed" by a "meltdown", he said. A meltdown means that a reactor overheats through catastrophic failure of its coolant system and burns through its own foundations. Several loud explosions have been heard since the disaster occurred, he added.

"The world has no idea of the catastrophe — help us," he said.

Up to 300 Dead Reported

AU300933 Paris AFP in English 0928 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpt] London, April 30 (AFP) — Up to 300 people have died in the Chernobyl disaster, and Kiev authorities have set aside part of the city to accommodate casualites, a British teacher living in the Ukraine capital was quoted here Wednesday as saying. Rhona Branson, telephoned by THE TIMES' correspondent in Moscow, said the toll was given to her by "local citizens with contacts in the energy ministry."

"I was told that fleets of buses had been seen driving north to the area on the Saturday night, to evacuate people living close to the site" of the accident, 130 kilometers (90 miles) from Kiev," she said. "In the last 24 hours, reports of the seriousness of things have started to filter through," she said.

"It is all very frightening," said Miss Branson, a 29-year-old Scotswoman who has been living in Kiev since September. "I just do not know if there are things that I should be doing now to protect my health — I hope that soon I will be getting some official information."

People Reported Calm

LD301219 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish
1030 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Almost all the questions on the nuclear power disaster in Chernobyl remain unanswered in the Soviet Union. The authorities stay silent and it seems that no preventive health measures are being taken in the affected areas in the Ukraine and Belorussia. Here is a report from Moscow by Elisabeth Hedborg:

The AP news agency today quotes a Dutch radio ham who listened to a radio conversation in the Chernobyl area. According to that report, many hundreds of people have been killed and injured in the area. The conversation was picked up late last night and it indicates that thousands of people are now fleeing south. According to this information, many of the dead cannot be traken away because of the radiation danger.

However, all the available information here in Moscow indicates that the situation in the area further away from the immediate disaster site is calm so far. I phoned Minsk, capital of the Belorussian republic, about 400 km northwest of the disaster area today. My acquaintance says that the situation in the city is calm. We know what has happened, but we are not alarmed, she said. In view of the wind direction at the time of the disaster, Minsk was the first big city that the radioactive emission passed over during the weekend. There is no alarm in Kiev either; I have been in touch with a family with close relatives in Kiev. These relatives urged their relatives here in Moscow not to be alarmed. We know that some kind of explosion has taken place, but you must not be alarmed, said the relatives in Kiev. The local population in Kiev were evidently given some kind of information before the first official bulletin was read on Monday evening.

Today, the scientific attaches of Western embassies here in Moscow have met to try to build up a picture of what happened. First and foremost, they had to note the total lack of information. Despite a number of reminders on their part, they have not learned anything from individual Soviet authorities.

One interesting fact is that there are 14 reactors of the type concerned in the USSR. Two were built in the past year; 4 of the 14 are in Chernobyl. However, there is nothing yet to indicate that the remaining 10 have been closed. It is stated that the fuel core in the disaster site consisted of 192 tons [as heard] of uranium and the critical question that nobody can answer yet is whether the base of the reactor vessel can withstand the colossal pressure it is now exposed to.

Travelers Report No Sign of Disaster

AU291143 Vienna Domestic Service in German
1010 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Austrian radio correspondent Franz Koessler report from Moscow]

[Excerpts] When the first travelers from the Ukrainian capital arrived in Moscow this morning they described an idyllic picture of the situation there. There were no indications in Kiev of a nuclear disaster. But it seems that it was a very close thing, because the nuclear power plant of Chernobyl where the accident took place is only about 50 km north of the Kiev conurbation where 3.5 million people live. If strong winds from the southeast had not blown the radioactive cloud over also densely populated Belorussia, the Baltic republics, and Poland to Scandinavia, the disaster might have taken on inconceivable dimensions.

Today's papers do not mention the incident, they did not even publish the Council of Ministers communique. The Committee for Nuclear Energy, which yesterday denied the incident for hours when urgently questioned by the Scandinavian embassies, is equally close-mouthed today. It does not have anything to add to the official statement, it affirmed. The Swedish ambassador and his Danish colleague did not receive any additional information when they personally called on the Foreign Ministry.

Finns Near Accident Report Nothing

LD290910 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish
0800 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] The radiation level in Finland caused by the accident at the Soviet nuclear power station is falling. The National Radiation Safety Center says that the highest levels were measured last night after 2100. During the night the levels have decreased steadily. According to the radiation safety center the situation is helped by the northeasterly winds which are clearing the air. The accident at the Chernobyl power plant near Kiev increased the level of radiation in the Nordic countries. The levels measured in Finland were six times higher than normal. The increase was not, however, high enough to endanger human beings.

Near the Chernobyl nuclear power plant near Kiev is the Lemminkaeinen Oy building site [Finnish construction company], where at the moment about 50 Finns are working. Lemminkaeinen told us that they have not been able to make contact with the personnel at the building site after news of the accident reached Finland. Contact was last made with the Finns yesterday at which point the Finns in the area did not report any kind of special arrangements in the town. There are also several Finnish students in Kiev. According to information received this morning, a couple of other Finnish companies may have some employees in Kiev. Because of the civil servants' strike, contact can only be made with the USSR by telex. It is possible, however, to telephone from the USSR to Finland.

Monument Unveiled Near Accident

LD300958 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0900 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Inhabitants of Yvshgorodskiy Rayon, Kiev Oblast, will today be congregating in their rayon center [Vyshgorod] for the festive unveiling of a monument to Vladimir Ilich Lenin. The bronze figure towers up on Vyshgorod's main square, which bears the name of the leader. While the monument was going up and neighboring areas were being equipped with public amenities a good many voluntary Saturday and Sunday labor days were held, which were attended by virtually all town residents, adults, and schoolchildren. Lenin Square has become a new center of ancient Vyshgorod. A house of culture and a stadium equipped with swimming pools on the banks of the Dnieper will soon be opened here. [Vyshgorod is slightly to the north of Kiev, at the southern end of the Kiev reservoir; Chernobyl is situated at the northern end of this reservoir]

Kiev-Area Bicycle Races Extended

LD301001 Moscow TASS in English 0947 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Kiev April 30 TASS — The competitions of Soviet cyclists in Kiev, which are qualifying races before the "Peace Cycle Race" that starts here on May 6, have been extended for two more days — up to May 1. Two bunch races will be run on the streets in Kiev today and tomorrow, following which Aleksandr Gusyatnikov, senior coach of the USSR national team, will determine six cyclists for his team.

Swedish Embassy Promised Answers

LD291101 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpt] Information on the accident in the [Soviet] nuclear powerplant is very scarce in the Soviet Union. Apart from a short announcement on TASS, which was read on television last night, the Soviet public has not been informed about the accident in Chernobyl , an official from the Swedish Embassy in Moscow told the TT news agency. The papers in Moscow have not written anything about the accident. The Swedish Embassy has asked a number of questions of the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and they have been promised quote: Answers as soon as possible, unquote.

IAEA Notified of Accident

LD291653 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1512 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Vienna, April 29 (TANJUG) — The Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) has been informed about the accident which took place at one of the Soviet nuclear plants near Kiev yesterday. IAEA press spokesman James Daglish said that in reporting the accident at the Chernobyl plant, Soviet ambassador Khlestov did not specify its kind and scope.

The Soviet Union last year signed an agreement with the IAEA placing a number of its nuclear plants under superivision by agency experts, but the agreement did not cover the Chernobyl plant.

No Details Given IAEA

AU301056 Paris AFP in English 1053 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Vienna, April 30 (AFP) — The Soviet Union has so far not given any details of the extent of Chernobyl accident, nor how it happened, to the 112-member International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), a spokesman said here Wednesday. "We would very much like to have some detailed information, but so far we have been told nothing," the IAEA spokesman said.

He noted that there was no treaty laying down that a nuclear accident must be reported to the nuclear watchdog body, even by its 112 member nations, which includes the Soviet Union. The IAEA was told about the accident Monday evening by the Soviet ambassador to Austria, Oleg Khlestov, the spokesman said "although the Soviet Union was not obliged to do so."

In September 1984 Moscow agreed to permit IAEA inspectors to examine some of its reactors for the first time to establish they were being used for peaceful purposes. However the Chernobyl reactors have so far not been inspected, the spokesman said.

IAEA Never Inspected Plant

AU291032 Paris AFP in English 1024 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Vienna, April 29 (AFP) — The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) has not inspected the reactors at the accident-hit Chernobyl nuclear plant in the Soviet Union, which is not a member of the body, a spokesman said here Tuesday.

In September 1984 Moscow agreed to permit the control of a certain number of its nuclear plants and equipment to prove they were being used for peaceful purposes. The names of atomic plants and nuclear reactors which could be visited were provided in a secret list, but it is not known whether Chernobyl was on it.

IAEA inspectors went to the Soviet Union for the first time in August 1985 where they examined two reactors, one of them used for experimental purposes. None of the four Chernobyl reactors were seen, an IAEA spokesman said here, pointing out that the Soviet Union was not an IAEA member and therefore never requested a check-up of its security measures.

Walter Binner, director of the Institute for the Safety of Reactors here, said Tuesday that Chernobyl's four reactors were of a relatively rare type, but similar models were known to be at plants at Kursk, Leningrad and Smolensk.

UN Official Urges More Details

AU300858 Paris AFP in English 0848 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Geneva, April 30 (AFP) — The director of the U.N. Environmental Programme (UNEP), Mustafa Tolba, called on the Soviet Union Wednesday to provide all possible details following the Ukraine nuclear accident. He also urged nuclear power producers to make security their No. 1 priority, and to submit to regular inspection.

"Any country which accidentally spills toxics across borders... should have the responsibility" to provide information, he said here. "Unsuspecting people, many of them living in countries which have opted not to have their own nuclear plants, are now wondering if they might become the world's first radiation refugees."

Mr. Tolba added: "Whenever there is a nuclear accident anywhere, it is what we don't know that scares me. Information is always needed to assess immediate and potential damage to people's health and the environment...

"To avoid similar accidents in the future, the world nuclear power generators must make security their first priority and expose their plants to international vigilance and regular inspection as required by the non-proliferation treaty."

Chernobyl Plant Described

LD291838 Budapest Television Service in Hungarian 1730 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Dear listeners, we now have a live report from Moscow. I asked our Moscow correspondent Mihaly Hardi about yesterday's Soviet nuclear power plant accident. Have you spoken to experts in Moscow about the incident?

[Hardi] Of course, we have tried all day to get more information. What I managed to learn from experts here is that the Chernobyl power plant has four reactors, each with an output of 1,000 megawatts and of the so-called single-circuit type. This is an older model that is no longer manufactured. The principle behind this type of reactor is that the steam generated in the reactor goes directly to the turbines.

Swedish Expert Describes Reactor

[From the "Radio Magazine" program]

[Text] The reactor in Chernobyl in the Ukraine where the accident happened is a light-water reactor using coal, said the National Institute of Radiation Protection today. The type of reactor which [word indistinct] does not exist in Sweden. Head of Information at the Institute of Radiation Protection Sven Loefveberg gives this information to reporter Elle Kaj Hoejeberg:

[Loefveberg] We know very little about the reactor. We have had only one report on the accident itself, and the fact that this reactor contains quite a lot of graphite — that is coal — and is said to be burning.

[Hoejeberg] So what kind of reactor is it?

[Loefveberg] It is a so-called light-water reactor with graphite modification. The moderator is of coal and it is used to stop neutrons. If that is what is burning, then it is undeniably a serious accident.

Gromyko Addresses Moscow Awards Ceremony

[Remarks by Andrey Gromyko, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, in the Kremlin on 28 April on the conferment of high state awards to a group of workers — recorded; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Among those who are receiving the awards, I would now like, first and foremost, to greet those who have been honored with the title Twice Hero of Socialist Labor. The worker (Ivan Dmitriyevich Ganchev), has been toiling as a builder for almost 40 years now. He took part in building hundreds of houses and industrial projects, and no matter where he works, everything is done on time and at the highest quality. The life path traversed by the kolkhoz worker (Aleksandr Dmitariyevich Chervikov) progressed this way too. For 30 years he has been continuously working as kolkhoz chairman. This kolkhoz is in the northern zone, where natural conditions are harsh. Nonetheless, it ranks among the best enterprises of the country's agro-industrial complex. The work of both these representatives of the working class and kolkhoz peasantry constitute a vivid example of how the struggle is to be waged for implementing the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. Demichev Addresses Academy of Arts Session

PM281415 Moscow SOVETSKAYA KULTURA in Russian 17 Apr 86 p 2

[TASS report: "New Horizons of Culture"]

[Text] To create works worthy of the innovative deeds of the party and people, to do everything to enhance exactingness toward the ideological and artistic content of creative work, to satisfy more fully the working people's spiritual needs — that is the civic duty of people working in the sphere of our country's multinational culture. This was stated by the participants in the 42d session of the USSR Academy of Arts, held in Moscow on 16 April.

The session was opened by B.S. Ugarov, president of the USSR Academy of Arts.

A report on "The 27th CPSU Congress and the Tasks of Socialist Culture" was delivered by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of culture.

The CPSU Central Committee Political Report and the other documents of the congress, which was a major historical event both in our country's domestic life and in international life, he said, gave a profound analysis of the present-day situation in the world and defined the strategic tasks of Soviet society's socioeconomic, political, and spiritual development.

Today more than ever before, the speaker went on, the role of workers in culture and art and the entire spiritual culture of socialism is growing. At a new turning point, the 27th CPSU Congress defined the strategic course of economic policy — the course of accelerating our society's socioeconomic development. The activation of the human factor is a key component of the strategy of acceleration. This redefines the place and role of socialist culture in communist building and makes qualitatively different demands on it.

Culture and art must become an effective weapon for the party in the struggle to establish our society's advanced principles and to enhance the prestige of the working person, innovator, and active fighter for the implementation of party policy. The keenest attention must be directed toward forming conditions that will promote the growth of people's cultural level and the improvement of their professional capabilities and moral qualities.

The party's social policy is becoming increasingly concrete and differentiated. The work of those involved in the multinational socialist culture must also become more concrete, purposeful, and differentiated. It can also do much to help fulfill the tasks posed by the congress in improving socialist democracy and developing self-management principles in society's life. The higher a person's level of culture, the more significant is his desire to take part in the management of the affairs of society and the state and his personal contribution to social progress.

The party seeks the main task of cultural policy in opening up a broad scope for the development of people's abilities and making their life spiritually rich and multifaceted. The state of literature and art now largely determines the moral health and spiritual climate of our society. Hence, the high demands that the party makes on creative activity. Talented works are the main criterion in assessing the work of creative organizations.

Overcoming inertia and stagnation, taking life as the starting point, especially in such a dynamic, multifaceted matter as artistic creativity and amateur artistic activity and the work of clubs, theaters, libraries, and museums — all these are essential conditions for increasing the effectiveness of the work of cultural workers. In present-day conditions, when more than 155 million people in our country have higher and secondary education, the sphere of culture is called upon to provide the broad masses of working people with the latest scientific and technical information, raise people's spiritual requirements, form a sound moral climate in the labor collectives, and establish new Soviet traditions.

Great opportunities for increasing the activeness of the masses in cultural building are opened up by the decision to create a Soviet Culture Foundation, as well as by the CPSU Central Committee resolution "On Measures To Improve the Utilization of Club Institutions and Sports Facilities." The task is to make the masses' movement for a high level of culture universal and nationwide. Here professionals in the arts are called upon to give substantial help. It is necessary to launch a broad movement to create subsidiaries of professional theaters and philharmonic societies and people's picture galleries in the countryside and at clubs and cultural institutes, and to increase patronage by the leading cultural institutions over the main 5-year plan construction projects.

Unfortunately, there has yet to be a radical improvement in the organization of people's leisure. Sometimes a passive attitude on the part of the workers concerned is concealed by talk about the need to strengthen the material base of culture. Yet the funds allocated for building culture and sports facilities, not infrequently, fail to be assimilated. It is necessary to make the most active use of the opportunities opened up by the holding of the All-Union Festival of People's Creativity to mark the 70th anniversary of Great October.

The speaker devoted great attention to the development of the material base of culture. In the 12th 5-Year Plan it is planned to build 511 rayon culture institutes and 5,560 clubs in rural localities. Some R4.2 billion is being allocated for these purposes. The network of parks is to be increased by 4,700 and 900 leisure centers are to be created by the year 2000. This is a large-scale program that must be carried out to a high standard, in light of present and future needs.

There must be a qualitatively new approach toward the problems of museum and library construction. A comprehensive program for developing museum work in the USSR must be elaborated. More active use should be made of all the potential, including the enthusiasm of volunteers and young people, to launch large-scale work to preserve our historical and cultural heritage.

The report expressed gratitude to artists who, following their hearts, have helped create many rural picture galleries by presenting their own works, as well as to private collectors and keepers of artistic works who have given their collections to the country's museums.

The speaker went on to stress that the creative intelligentsia strives to actively help the party in its struggle to establish a truly innovative work style and rid our society of everything that retards the acceleration of progress. Only the first steps are being taken to turn Soviet art toward new topics and new problems of life, he noted. It is necessary to create all the conditions for ensuring that the new subject matter is introduced widely into art, is expressed at a high ideological and artistic standard, moves rapidly onto the stages of theaters and concert halls, and takes a worthy place at artistic exhibitions. Major conclusions must be drawn from the criticisms voiced at the party congress and the public's reactions to ideologically immature and artistically poor works — their "mass production" is today causing serious negative social consequences.

Characterizing the development of Soviet theater, the speaker reported that recently drama and children's theater collectives have produced some 3,500 premieres annually. Compared with the 10th 5-Year Plan, theater audiences have increased by 5 million. The country's theaters have turned toward problem plays touching on the urgent issues of today. At the same time, the speaker drew attention to serious negative trends that have created the need to restructure theater affairs. It has been decided to create a USSR Theater Societies Union, which will promote the further heightening of the creative intelligentsia's activity in the mutual enrichment of national theatrical cultures.

The CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution "On Further Improving Concert Activity in the Country" orients us toward improving musical aesthetic education and cultural services to the working people. The creation of the All-Union Musical Society may be regarded as a powerful lever for spreading a high standard of musical culture among the masses.

P.N. Demichev then dwelt in detail on the new tasks facing the visual arts. Soviet artists, he said, have always borne high the banner of leading art, firmly followed the positions of party-mindedness and popular spirit, and defended the ideals of humanism and peace and the principles of the art of socialist realism actively both in their own creative work and in direct participation in ideological battles with ideological opponents.

At the present stage there is an active process of reapprochement of art with the people's life. Artists' work on the 5-year plan construction sites, on kolkhozes and sovkhozes, and in Soviet Army and Navy units is meeting with a broad response. In defining the prospects for the development of artistic creativity, the speaker noted: The task is to comprehend more profoundly the method of socialist realism as applied to the present day, with its complex, sometimes dramatic problems. Otherwise, it is impossible to eradicate superficiality in interpreting the most important topics, poverty of ideas, and formalistic enthusiasms.

Today new yardsticks must be applied to the tasks of architecture, monumental art, and the formation of an aesthetically rich environment around man.

Activity in the sphere of exhibitions needs substantial improvement. It is necessary to reach the most remote parts of the country, actively improve the culture of Siberia, the Far East, and the North, and increase work in the non-Chernozem. Television, movies, and video are still not used enough in the propagandization of the visual arts.

Great attention was devoted to the problems of literary and artistic criticism, which should give assistance on the basis of goodwill, help improve skill, and rise to the level of lofty artistic generalizations in creative work.

The 27th CPSU Congress, P.N. Demichev said in conclusion, has armed the party and people with a clear understanding of the situation and a precise program of action for the near and remote future. Each of us, in his own sector of work, must do everything in his power to make the congress decisions a reality.

Specific ways of improving the entire sphere of culture and strengthening its influence on forming the Soviet person's active civic stance were discussed by T.T. Salakhov, A.G. Rochegov, V.M. Sidorov, Yu.K. Korolev, A.A. Mylnikov, D.A. Shmarinov, and others. The speakers stressed the need to enrich art with topical, lively content and to improve the artistic standard of works that meet the demands of the times.

The resolution adopted by the session notes that the radical restructuring now taking place in the country requires every artist to participate in a committed way in the people's deeds. The 27th CPSU Congress decisions make it incumbent on the USSR Academy of Arts to develop more actively its activity in overcoming the shortcomings that hamper the development of Soviet visual arts and architecture and to promote in every way a considerable upsurge in Soviet artistic culture.

PRAVDA Editorial Examines New Management Style

PM291429 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Apr 86
First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "The New Way of Managing"]

[Text] The party has accumulated tremendous experience in implementing major scientific, technical, and socioeconomic transformations in society's life. However, what we have to do in the next three 5-year periods is far in excess of what we have already achieved in both scale and complexity. The essence of the changes in the economy, it was noted at the 27th CPSU Congress, is to shift the center of attention from quantitative indicators to quality and efficiency, from interim results to end results, from the expansion of production assets to their renewal, from the augmentation of fuel and raw material resources to their improved utilization.

Among the practical measures aimed at restructuring national economic management, the party congress put forward the task of transferring sectors of the economy to new economic management methods in the 12th 5-Year Plan and thereby orienting the efforts of all management and production components toward fully utilizing intensive factors for growth, eliminating extravagance, and accelerating scientific and technical progress.

This year enterprises and organizations of more than 100 union and republican ministries and departments are being transferred in full or in part to the new economic management conditions. In the course of preparation for this, many collectives have done considerable organizational and economic work. There has been a quest for reserves, which have been incorporated in draft plans for the 1st year and the whole 5-year plan. Plans have been drawn up for accelerating scientific and technical progress and a preferential rate of increase in new, efficient output has been mapped out. For instance, enterprises and associations of the Ministry of Chemical and Petroleum Machine Building will increase the output of efficient products by 23 percent. At enterprises of the Ministry of Heavy and Transport Machine Building, the production of machines for continuous steel teeming will increase by 22 percent, while the output of two-section diesel freight locomotives will double. The same line, aimed at the rapid renewal of output, is mapped out in the plans of other sectors working under the new conditions. Today it is not advantageous for a collective to manufacture obsolete output: Such output is becoming less profitable compared with top-quality output.

Economic leaders have begun to be bolder in carrying out the modernization and retooling of enterprises; this includes work done using production development funds. Here a noteworthy example is set by the Ternopol Vatra association. This collective's experience shows that the renewal of equipment is the most rapid and economical method of rearming enterprises. Retooling and modernization will now be backed up more fully than before with resources of all kinds and with quotas for subcontracted work.

Improving economic management methods has a positive effect on many indicators of the activity of associations and enterprises. This is indicated by the results of industry's work in the first quarter of the year. Under the new conditions labor collectives seek an increase in output, as a rule, without increasing the numbers of the work force; reduce the outlay in financial resources, labor, and materials for every ruble of finished goods; and focus their attention on qualitative indicators.

Of course, the former economic management methods and the outmoded way of thinking are still having some effect. At a number of ministries the old approaches still prevailed when plans were being set for the 12th 5-year Plan: Demand more resources, take less of the burden of the plan. Not all sector staffs and central departments are adopting a flexible approach to restructuring the style and methods of work. The Ministry of Mineral Fertilizer Production, for instance, assigned plan targets to the enterprises according to the old system of indicators and was very late in releasing the economic normatives. By no means every collective is oriented toward the fuller utilization of internal reserves and its own resources in retooling production and resolving social problems.

The new way of managing means continuing to improve specific forms and methods of increasing the autonomy and responsibility of associations and enterprises in planning production and increasing its efficiency. The new economic management methods are inconceivable without the comprehensive strengthening of the discipline of output deliveries and a decisive increase in the responsibility of USSR Gossnab organs in this matter, both centrally and locally. It is time to make the transition from words to deeds in establishing direct, long-term economic ties and organizing wholesale trade in the means of production.

The standard of economic activity is determined in many respects by the efficiency of transportation. Since the beginning of this year all the tranport enterprises of the RSFSR Ministry of the River Fleet; the Belorussian, Kazakh, Georgian, and Latvian ministries of motor transport; and the Moscow City Soviet Main Administration of Motor Transport have been working in the new way. Now it is up to the railmen. In this sector they should also stop focusing on gross output indicators and ensure prompt deliveries of the entire required range of freight.

In the new 5-year plan collective forms of labor organization and incentives must be further developed. They must be extended to the bigger subunits with a view to gradually combining the development of the team contract at lower levels with full financial autonomy for every association and enterprise. Economic management methods aimed at conserving all types of resources in every way must be elaborated and introduced.

A truly antiexpenditure machinery still has to be developed and implemented. To this end we should be bolder in using economic methods of management, full financial autonomy, and the potential of credit and prices and of the commodity-money relationship; increase the role of profit in the assessment of enterprises' work; and develop socialist enterprise. It is important to continue to persistently seek new ways of increasing production efficiency and production intensification and of deepening the experiment in making things pay for themselves and developing production on the basis of the collective's own, earned resources — that is, through self-financing. Here the experience of the Volga Truck Plant and the Sumi M. Frunze association should be a school of economic management for other associations.

The constant improvement and comprehensive deepening of new economic management methods will make it possible to discover new reserves of the socialist planned economy and will be a powerful lever for accelerating the country's economic development.

Officials Comment on Far East Development Prospects

LD252123 Moscow TASS in English 1928 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 25 TASS — A further development of the mineral resources of the continental shelf near Sakhalin, Kamchatka, and in the Sea of Okhotsk could become a field of international economic cooperation, believes Aleksandr Granberg, director of the Institute of Economics and Organization of Industrial Production of the Siberian branch of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR. He was addressing here today a press-conference devoted to prospects for the development of Siberia and the Far East.

In the scholar's opinion, international cooperation in developing synthetic fuel on the basis of the Kansk-Achinsk coal basin, a complex use of new kinds of raw materials could be mutually beneficial.

The same can be said about the use of the Baykal-Amur Railway, which is the shortest transport route linking areas near Lake Baykal with the Soviet Pacific coast.

Another participant in the press conference Nikolay Maslennikov, chairman of the State Planning Committee of the Russian Federation, cited as an example the development of mutually beneficial trade and economic cooperation and business ties with Japan. Wide use is made of Japanese technology in Soviet Pacific ports, in the open-strip mines of the Kansk-Achinsk basin. Contracts on a compensation basis on the working of Siberian timber are successfully implemented. Coastal trade is also developing.

The Soviet participants in the press conference told newsmen about the recent statement by the Soviet Government, stressing the need for strengthening peace in the Asian Pacific region. The drawing of Siberia and the Far East in the process of international division of labour would serve as a stabilising factor, it was stressed at a [as received] press-conference.

Maslennikov Previews Development

LD251418 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0817 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 25 Apr (TASS) — In the next 15 years there will be a significant growth in the contribution made by Siberia and the Far East in providing the national economy of the USSR with fuel and power, mineral raw materials, and timber resources, said Nikolay Maslennikov, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers, chairman of the State Planning Committee of the RSFSR. He was speaking today at a press conference in Moscow devoted to the main directions of development of production forces and the acceleration of scientific and technical progress in eastern regions envisaged by the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Maslennikov noted that whereas 20 years ago oil recovery in West Siberia was less than 1 million metric tons and gas recovery only 400 million cubic meters, now 368 million metric tons of oil and gas condensate and over 380 billion cubic meters of gas are recovered there. In keeping with the USSR Energy Program, in the future West Siberia will become the country's main center for the recovery of these kinds of raw material. In East Siberia and on the continental shelf, the search for new oil deposits continues.

Concerning the future of coal basins in the east — the Kansk-Achinsk, Kuznetsk, South Yakutia basins — Maslennikov said that the most effective recovery methods — hydraulic and open cast — will be given priority development. It is intended to organize the integrated industrial processing of coal into solid, liquid, and gaseous types of fuel and valuable chemical raw materials.

The Ust Ilimsk timber complex will become one of the major enterprises of the timber industry of the eastern regions. Some of its facilities are being built jointly with socialist countries which are members of the CEMA.

By the end of the century, Maslennikov continued, the main growth in the production of aluminium, copper, nickel, lead, and other nonferrous metals will be concentrated in these regions. A major ferrous metallurgy base will be developed in the Far East. It will be based on major deposits of iron, manganese, and titanium. This will allow the intensive development of machine-building industries and a significant reduction in the expense of transporting metal from the center of the country.

Lowered Oil Prices Effect on Exports Examined

LD240405 Moscow World Service in English 1550 GMT 23 Apr 86

[Excerpts] In describing Soviet position on foreign economic issues, Western analysts have been stressing two factors. The first one is Soviet oil production which has been steadily decreasing since 1984. The second one is the plummeting world oil prices. Both factors have been described as unfavorable for the Soviet Union, a net oil exporter.

Since early this year, the first factor has lost its glamour as production cuts in Western Siberia, the country's main oil producing area, have been suspended. In fact production has been increased there to a daily quota of 1 million tons. A few days ago, Vasiliy Dinkov, minister of the oil industry of the USSR, was quoted as saying the Siberian oil fields had achieved success which had to be consolidated. The USSR plans to produce 625.640 million tons of oil and condensate in 1990, of which 2/3 will be extracted in Western Siberia.

But the second factor is still at work. As world oil prices have continued to tumble, the plunge has borne a certain impact on the USSR whose oil exports make a substantial share in Soviet foreign trade. And, as Mikhail Gorbachev put it in his interview with the Algerian magazine REVOLUTION AFRICAINE, we have certainly been affected by the situation in world markets and lower demand for Soviet exports while inflation has added to our import costs. As yet, the West's allegation to the effect that the situation is dramatic and threatening to thwart Soviet plans, seems to be a gross exaggeration if only because it ignores the fact that Soviet foreign exchange earnings make only a neglible contribution to the USSR's mammoth economy. With its GNP estimated at R1.4 trillion, the USSR's import costs amount to only 65 billion, with imports from the West, which are paid for in foreign exchange equivalent, totalling less than R20 billion a year. Imported Western equipment does not exceed 3-4 percent of the Soviet output of machinery.

Another thing about the problem is that a good deal of Soviet energy export goes to the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance market that has never been subject to convulsions.

Another fact to be taken into consideration is that the USSR abounds, along with energy carriers [as heard], in other minerals. In addition, by the time oil prices began to tumble, the USSR had had a secure financial position in the world, the fact admitted by all experts. This was what made its standing entirely different from such oil exporters as Mexico, Nigeria, Venezuela, and Indonesia, for which the price collapse meant a disaster. But there is one more difference. While most oil producers export crudes, the USSR has a powerful refining and petrochemical industry. While crudes, gasoline, and fuel oil now trade at near bottom prices, prices for diesel and jet fuel as well as natural gas have not dropped so dramatically, said (Leonard Vid), vice chairman of the USSR State Planning Committee. Our potential is sufficient for withdrawing some resources from the world market, processing them, and allocating other resources. Admittedly oil market jitters failed to have a dramatic impact on the Soviet economy. Oil prices will certainly start to climb in the future, though it would make no sense to predict when. But there is one way in which the Soviet Union can benefit from the market behavior; by using it to stimulate the restructuring of its exports. No wonder one of the major economic goals chartered by the 27th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party is to reorient our exports from raw materials to manufactured commodities.

Soviet automobiles, machine tools, watches, tractors, instruments, and energy generating equipment exported to the West indicate to the USSR's ability to manufacture competitive goods. But they are still a far cry from what the country really can export in terms of quality and quantity. It takes time to develop a country's export potential, and yet the USSR does not intend to let things proceed at a slow pace. For one thing, it will increase sharply the share of manufacturing industries, the engineering industry above all, in the overall industrial investment program. Most of the money will be spent on retooling the existing plant which is expected to pay off quicker than building new factories. In 1986 to 1990 this country will spend over R200 billion on industrial modernization, much more than in the past 10 years. For another, there will be drastic reforms in management and transformation, with more incentives to be offered to the staff. A new system of incentives has been introduced to encourage factories to produce more competitive goods for export. Factories have also been given a larger share of foreign exchange earned by their goods, which they can spend more freely than before.

And yet it would be erroneous to think that the USSR will quit the energy market. If market conditions improve, the Soviet Union will be prepared to boost its gas, electric energy, coal, and coal products exports.

Gold Extraction Industry — A new branch of the national economy, the gold extraction industry, has been created in Kirghizia. A state commission has accepted for use the first stage of the Kirghiz gold-mining combine. This enterprise has been erected in the harsh conditions of the high mountains. A well-appointed miners' settlement has grown up alongside the industrial buildings. The first community services center in the region is already functioning, and there is a cosy cafe and a kindergarten; a school and hospital complex are under construction. The development of the social and consumer services complex is progressing rapidly. The combine will begin complete operation by the end of the year. New Airport — A new airport has been handed over for use in Staryy Oskol, the miners' and metallurgists' town. Yak-40 and L-410 aircraft will leave for their first flight to Moscow. There will also be a permanent air link with Belgorod, the administrative center of the iron ore region. It is planned to open air routes to other towns in the near future. Working Day 11 May — The USSR Council of Ministers has decided that 11 May 1986 is to be considered as a working day. The day of rest unused by workers and office workers will be added to their annual leave and will be paid on the same basis as leave days. Dump Truck for Siberia — Production of new models of dump trucks has been mastered by the workers of the Kremenchug Avtokraz production association. The trucks have been specially developed for operation in the Siberian oil and gas fields. The truck is a heavy-load, all-round drive, diesel-engined vehicle. Without any halt in production the building of the enterprise's workshops is under way. Automated lines and machining centers have appeared in place of the old cumbersome machine tools. A widespread application of up-to-date welding, cold forging, and powder metallurgy methods is being made. In the 12th 5-Year Plan period the association intends to convert completely to the production of the new KRAZ models. [Summary] [Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 7 Mar 86 LD]

Progress of Spring Sowing Campaign Reviewed

PM291245 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 25 Apr 86 p 1

[Report by N. Osychkin: "Sowing in a Shock Manner!"]

[Text] According to Central Statistical Administration figures as of 21 April spring crops on the kolkhozes and sovkhozes and at interfarm enterprises had been sown over an area of 26.2 million hectares. The workers of the agro-industrial complex, together with the entire Soviet people, are advancing to greet May Day. They are directing all their efforts toward the successful execution of the spring field work, the creation of a reliable basis for the harvest of the first year of the new 5-year plan, and the fulfillment of the targets of the Food Program. The sowing campaign has been launched in virtually all the union republics.

Despite the late spring in a number of regions, the pace of the work is somewhat faster than last year. The farms of the Ukraine, Moldavia, the North Caucasus, and Central Asia have completed the spring crop sowing. Last week there was abundant rainfall in many places there; the fields are covered in green shoots and the winter grain crops have reached their full height. At the same time, in some southern regions the spring has failed to gratify the arable farmers' needs for rain and there have been hot winds, which requires once more that the closest attention be paid to the conservation of moisture in the soil and the rational use of moisture for accumulating the maximum yield on each hectare.

The borders of the sowing campaign have advanced to the Central Chernozem, Belorussia, and the Volga Region. The fall-plowed fallow is being harrowed in the south Urals and Siberia. The unsettled weather is forcing the arable farmers to compress to the minimum the time taken over spring work and to achieve the best quality for soil preparation and sowing. That is how the collectives of the sowing complexes of Belgorod Oblast are operating. They needed just days to sow the early spring crops over the entire area. Success has been promoted by precise schedules for the use of units and by team contracts. In the RSFSR as a whole spring crops cover 8 million hectares. The Voronezh, Kursk, and Tambov oblast machine operators are launching the sowing harmoniously. The teams and links of the farms of Ulyanovsk and Penza oblasts are driving the units onto the land.

The farms of the Ukraine are sowing spring crops on the 11 millionth hectare. This year the republic has steered a course toward achieving good results in the development of arable production through the massive introduction of intensive technologies. The area covered by these technologies is in excess of 9 million hectares. This will make it possible to collect at least 6.3 million metric tons of additional grain. The sowing of late crops is now under way and the treatment of the winter crops according to their development stages has begun. The industrial enterprises have produced a number of effective attachments for the better performance of technological operations on the field. They include colters for the SES-2.1 drill for the local application of fertilizers. As a rule, first-class seeds are used for sowing.

While noting these positive phenomena in the struggle for the harvest, we cannot fail to note the fact that the leaders of some farms are being slow to restructure the style of their work, are clinging to outdated technologies, and are failing to observe the optimum work schedules. Such instances are occurring in Khmelnitskiy Oblast. The imeni Ilicha and "Peremoga" kolkhozes, Volochisskiy Rayon (the chairmen are Ye. Lisinchuk and I. Korch) have delayed the start of the sowing and are violating the requirements of agrotechnics. The Novoushitskiy Rayon "Ukraina" Kolkhoz and the Gorodokskiy Rayon "Progress" Kolkhoz have allowed spoilage on the spring fields. Examining the progress of the sowing campaign, the party obkom has pointed to these grave shortcomings. At the same time, it has failed to make adequate demands on the leaders of the oblast agro-industrial committee and rayon agro-industrial associations that are organizing work on the field poorly, are substituting fussing with the holding of sessions for vital business, and have failed to become vigorous cahampions of intensive production methods. Thus, the oblast's beet cultivation continues to rely on manual labor, which leads to the reduction of harvests and the growth of expenditure per unit of output.

In Kazakhstan the spring crops already cover over 1.3 million hectares. In the south of the republic rice and row crops are being sown while the machine operators of the virgin land oblasts are preparing the soil for the main food crop — wheat. A characteristic feature of the sowing campaign on the Belorussian fields is the mass transition of teams and links to the collective contract and financial autonomy, which will make it possible to improve the quality and accelerate the tempo of work. Thus, while formerly the Grodno Oblast Yakub Kolas Kolkhoz needed a week to prepare the soil and sow 100 hectares, it now needs only 3 days.

Now that the spring has put a premium on the time assigned to the arable farmers for laying the foundation to the harvest, it is particularly important to take advantage of every hour of fine weather and to perform all field work comprehensively. In the south of the country corn is being sown for grain. It already covers 745,000 hectares — 16 percent of the plan. Nearly 1.5 million hectares have been sown to sunflowers. Sugar beet seeds have been sown on 1.6 million hectares — 47 percent of the plan. In the Kuban, and Dnepropetrovsk and Kharkov oblasts the units have been driven from the land. Because of the rainy weather work has been somewhat delayed on the beet plantations of the Central Chernozem. The cotton sowing plan has been fulfilled 87 percent. A busy time is arriving for the flax, potato, and vegetable growers and horticulturalists. Feed crops have been sown on 4 million hectares.

The farm and agro-industrial committee leaders and party organizations are called on to punctiliously approach the observance of the technologies adopted in the spring period, to ensure that the crop structure is strictly kept to, and to ensure that the magnitude of the sown areas ensures the unconditional fulfillment of state plans for the production and procurement of output from all crops. Unfortunately, in a number of places this rule is not being considered. There are instances of the unjustified reduction of grain crop sowings, including sowings of comestible wheat. For incomprehensible reasons the area sown to buckwheat is being reduced by 150,000 hectares, particularly in the RSFSR, Kazakhstan, the Ukraine, Belorussia, and Moldavia. Yet the demand for grain from this crop is still not being met and, according to the 5-year plan targets, areas sown to buckwheat must be expanded and its yield must be increased. With a view to encouraging production, proposals have been made for using 30 percent of the harvest of buckwheat, beans, and lentils obtained over and above the level achieved for sale locally to meet local needs.

The spring sowing is a crucial stage in the work of the agro-industrial complex workers. All those involved in it must work precisely and strictly observe technological and state discipline. Yet this has not been understood everywhere. The Estonian "Estonfosforit" production association has delivered just 130 metric tons of superphosphate to the Ryazan Oblast farms — 7 percent of funded [fondovyye] deliveries. The Volkhov aluminum plan is holding up the delivery of chemical output. The farms which cultivate grain and industrial crops using intensive technologies are experiencing a shortage of precision drills, cultivators, and working parts for them.

Time does not wait. Sowing within the optimum deadlines and to an excellent standard means raising a good harvest in the initial year of the 5-year plan.

Agricultural Developments for 23-24 April Reported

LD250210 [Editorial Report] The following is a compilation of reports on agricultural developments in the USSR carried by Moscow Domestic Service in Russian, unless otherwise indicated, on 23-24 April. Times of broadcasts are given in parentheses at the end of each item.

23 April

Sowing of cotton has been completed in Turkmenistan. In the last 5-Year Plan period the republic did not fulfill its plan for the production of fine-fiber cotton. Specialists concluded that one reason for this was late sowing. It was decided to correct that problem. (0000 GMT)

Spring sowing is coming to an end in the orchards of Moldavia. It is taking place on areas where low-yield trees or ones of the same type are being cleared. (0000 GMT)

Mass spring field work is under way in Kuybyshev Oblast. Fallow is being plowed. So far moisture has been retained on 500,000 hectares. A number of rayons have started sowing early spring crops. (0204 GMT)

Mass sowing of spring crops is under way in Tambov Oblast, in spite of unusually dry, windy days. The rates of sowing are much higher than last year, and work is now going on in the north of the area. (0204 GMT)

The sowing of crops has begun at Lithuania's kolkhozes and sovkhozes. This year the grain growers have pledged to achieve an average yield of 28-29 quintals of grain per hectare. (1800 GMT)

Rice sowing has begun in the zone of the North Crimean canal. Machine operators at farms plan to carry it out in 10-12 days. Rice grown in conditions of the Crimea gives up to 50-60 quintals per hectare. This spring all rice-sowing farms are using intensive technology methods on an overall area of almost 19,000 hectares. (2230 GMT)

24 April

Sowing of spring crops has started in Tataria. (0430 GMT)

Assembly of "Steppe" self-propelled reapers has begun at Pavlodar Lenin Tractor Works Association. The width of span of these reapers is 17 meters, virtually three times the normal width. They can cut grain crops, corn, and many grasses. The first 500 such reapers are now to be made at the Pavlodar works. (0600 GMT)

Early grain crop sowing has begun in Gorkiy Oblast; ear crops are to be sown on more than 500,000 hectares this spring. (0600 GMT)

Virtually all Saratov Oblast rayons have begun sowing barley, oats, and perennial grasses. Top-dressing of winter crops is also continuing. The crops, which cover approximately 800,000 hectares, are developing well. (0600 GMT)

Mass spring crop sowing is under way throughout Kirghizia. So far, grain, vegetable, and cucurbitaceous crops, and perennial grasses have been sown on 400,000 hectares — two-thirds of the planned area. (1330 GMT)

Mass harvesting of grasses, perko, and rape has started in Kirghiz valleys. Intermediate fodder crops now cover about 7,000 hectares of pastureland in the republic. (1330 GMT)

On 20 and 21 April, violent storms swept the maritime and adjacent upland regions of Dagestan. The vegetable growers were badly hit, with hothouses damaged on an an area of more than 2,000 hectares. Today, the inhabitants of rural areas are everywhere busy repairing the damage and restoring the fertile layer of the soil. The irrigation network is being cleared. The fields, orchards, vineyards, and market-gardens are now very much in need of water. (Moscow Television 24 Apr 86 1700 GMT)

Farms in the Mari nonchernozem zone have started to apply additional fertilizer on a large scale to winter crops and perennial grasses. Intensive technology will be used in the cultivation of a significant proportion of the grain crops this year. Aircraft are assisting the farmers. (2004 GMT)

PAPER DENOUNCES U.S. TEST BAN POSITION

PM291408 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 29 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Colonel I. Nikolayev "Pertinent Remarks": "Against the Will of the Peoples"]

[Text] The latest underground nuclear explosion, code-named "Jefferson," was carried out at the test site in the U.S. state of Nevada. Transatlantic militarists of all hues are jubilant. They relish the data about the TNT equivalent estimated at "up to 150 kilotons," the dept of the shaft, its location, and the fact that the explosion caused a seismic wave registering 5.8 on the Richter scale.

This inexcusable action by Washington caused a diametrically opposite reaction among the peace-loving public -- a reaction of anger, indignation, and... bewilderment. People on the planet are bewildered: How is it possible to disregard their vital interests so unceremoniously? It would seem that, when the Soviet Union announced and rigorously observed a moratorium on all nuclear explosions and put forth a specific program for the liquidation of nuclear weapons by the year 2000, all the U.S. Administration had to do was take a step in the direction of these sensible initiatives. Instead, however, the latest nuclear explosions are resounding. To what purpose?

Washington is in no position to give an intelligible answer to this question. After all, it is impossible to take seriously the propaganda apparatus' laughable attempts to present matters as if the United States simply cannot manage without nuclear tests. Is there any truth in the fairy tales regarding the "lagging" of the United States; the "seasonal nature of tests" in the USSR; the disparities in technologies; the excessive inaccuracy and poor sensitivity of seismological instruments; and even the inadequacy of all other means and methods of verification [kontrol], up to and including the on-site inspections [inspektsii na mestakh] proposed by the Soviet Union! The latest by Congressman E. Markey from the State Department in answer to a letter he had written to G. Shultz. This "clarification" was signed by Under Secretary of State J. Dyer. In his uncontrollable eagerness to present black as white, Dyer goes as far as to claim that the "serious doubts concerning the reliability of the U.S. nuclear deterrent" that would supposedly arise in the event of a total ban on nuclear tests would lead to "vertical" and "horizontal" proliferation of nuclear weapons. This newly-hatched "theoretician" uses the term "vertical proliferation" simply to cover up the fact of the further buildup of the U.S. nuclear arsenal. "Horizontal" is used to describe the proliferation of nuclear weapons among nonnuclear states which, Dyer threatens, "could take the path of creating [sozdaniye] their own nuclear weapons if the U.S. nuclear deterrent were to be weakened." You can only marvel on hearing such -- if one may use the expression -- "arguments." All of them have been repeatedly and convincingly exposed by authoritative scientists and specialists, including Americans.

What are we left with after discarding the verbal cover used by Washington? We are left with an undisguised inhuman and militarist essence: Nuclear tests are needed by the U.S. ruling circles to continue the buildup and improvement of the most barbaric type of mass destruction weapons -- nuclear weapons; they need nuclear explosions in order to implement the "star wars" program which is aimed at creating [sozdaniye] a qualitatively new type of weapons -- space weapons.

Evading a direct answer to the expanded program for the total liquidation of nuclear weapons by the year 2000, that was put forth by the Soviet Union, and essentially ignoring it, the White House has unambiguously made it clear that the United States will continue all planned work on the creation [sozdaniye] of the new MX and Midgetman ICBM's and the new Trident-2 submarine-based ballistic missiles.

And the Pentagon intends to fit the new missiles with new nuclear warheads, which require repeated checks beforehand, in other words practical explosion tests. This is the background to the first reason why the United States is unwilling to halt nuclear explosions.

The second reason involves the "star wars" plans. Hypnotizing itself and its allies with the imaginary attributes of the so-called "Strategic Defense Initiative," the administration is pushing these plans through Congress regardless of consequences and is aiming to ensure the allies' participation in their implementation. It is well known that X-ray lasers are a significant component of this program. Given the present development of technology, the required capacity of such lasers can be ensured only by pumping them with energy from a nuclear explosion.

This is the actual background of Washington's unwillingness to abandon nuclear tests and to continue its policy of nuclear arms race.

The present U.S. Administration, more than any one of its predecessors, is fanatically committed to the idea of attaining military superiority over the USSR and is striving, come what may, to "overtake" the USSR in the nuclear weapons sphere and, furthermore, to ensure for itself a monopoly of space-strike weapons.

The President has declared: "Only after the United States has conducted tests of new and improved nuclear weapon systems will the administration be prepared to hold talks on a total nuclear test ban." And the secretary of defense added: "Our tests will continue for as long as there is reliance on nuclear weapons and until SDI has been created [sozdana]." Making a statement in connection with the State Department's "clarification," E. Markey offered a fair assessment of the U.S. Administration's activity on the nuclear policy issue. He pointed out that, between the time the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty was signed in 1968 and the time the present administration came to power, U.S. policy consisted of support for talks of the total ban of nuclear tests, which accords with the interests of U.S. national security. But now, according to Markey, "the Reagan administration has turned this policy upside down. Evidently, its internal aversion for a total ban on nuclear tests is so strong that it deems it necessary to prove that such a ban would in fact encourage the proliferation of nuclear weapons." It is hard not to agree with this sobor assessment.

The excessively zealous champions of war ought to recall the lessons of history more often. The Soviet Union will not let itself be caught unawares.

PRAVDA DERIDES U.S. POSITIONS IN GENEVA TALKS

PM291513 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 26 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Aleksey Ivkin "Commentator's Column": "Measures of Responsibility"]

[Text] The latest session of the Conference on Disarmament in Europe -- one of the most important of the international forums which are discussing the most urgent problem of the day -- has ended work in Geneva.

The session agenda was dominated by questions for which a solution was proposed in the comprehensive program put forth by the Soviet Union for the phased elimination of nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons, given the nonmilitarization of space. This program was set out in the 15 January statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. A favorable atmosphere for the successful work of the conference was also created by such Soviet steps as the introduction of a unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions and the November Soviet-U.S. summit at which the leaders of the two powers agreed in particular to accelerate the formulation of accords at the disarmament conference.

Most of the conference participants were particularly impressed by the USSR's bold and constructive position on the questions of verification [kontrol] of disarmament -- a topic on which the United States and its allies have speculated for many years, thereby deadlocking the talks.

Among the key disarmament questions the one on which agreement is closest is the question of a complete and universal chemical weapons ban. Several days before the recess, the USSR's representative at the conference laid out in detail the new Soviet proposals on chemical disarmament. These proposals make it possible to remove the hitherto existing differences and actively promote the drafting of a convention that would ensure the removal of this barbarous type of weapon from the face of the earth before the end of the century. The proposals, as is well known, devoted particular attention to the problem of scrupulous verification [kontrol]

However, the United States and some of its allies have not yet responded constructively to the Soviet proposals. Nor have the people overseas abandoned their long-nurtured plans for cranking up the race in chemical arms -- particularly binary arms -- which it is planned to site on West Europe territories. It is althogether difficult to call the position of the United States and a number of its NATO partners at the conference constructive. It is precisely for that reason that for almost 10 years now there has not been a single international law document produced within the framework of the Geneva forum aimed at strengthening international security. Recent events -- the U.S. refusal to stop nuclear tests, the cranking up of the "star wars" program, and the aggression against sovereign Libya -- also do not testify to a recognition on the part the Western powers, first and foremost the United States, of their responsibility for the fate of peace.

The people are entitled to expect that the Conference on Disarmament in Europe will operate more intensively and productively and that it will make an effective contribution to preventing nuclear war and strengthening universal peace.

PEPORT ON UK VIEW ON DISARMAMENT ISSUES

PM291520 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 26 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[Own correspondent A. Maslennikov dispatch: "Do Not Miss a Historic Chance; Disarmament and London's Position"]

[Text] London, April -- We will begin with a few quotations from newspapers. From THE GUARDIAN. "The Soviet Union is making efforts to break the deadlock at the Vienna talks." THE TIMES says: "The aim of the Soviet initiatives is to reduce tension in international relations." The FINANCIAL TIMES notes: "The Soviet Union is continuing its peace offensive." That is what the British newspapers are saying about the new Soviet peace proposal which was put forth 18 April in the speech by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee at the 11th SED Congress in Berlin.

It must be said that on the whole, these quotations objectively reflect the mood with which most mass media organs in Britain and ordinary people greeted the new Soviet initiative to reduce conventional arms in Europe. The initiative is a logical continuation and part and parcel of the program submitted by the Soviet Union for the complete elimination of mass destruction weapons by the end of this century that was developed at the 27th CPSU Congress in the program for the creation of a comprehensive international security system.

The new Soviet initiative -- and this is being noted by many observers here -- has cut the ground from under the feet of those who, with the help of various types of subterfuge and verbal maneuvers, have tried to avoid the substantive adoption of the program put forth by the Soviet Union and sought some kind of "incompleteness" in it, stating that the implementation of the Soviet program will "simply turn Europe into a reserve for conventional wars." They have tried to accuse the Soviet Union of allegedly "ignoring the simultaneous need for disarmament in other spheres" while proposing the plan for the elimination of nuclear weapons. It is noted here that the cards of the authors of these unscrupulous statements, among whom, unfortunately, was the head of the British Foreign Office, have been trumped.

The new Soviet proposal has been announced at a time when discussion in the West European countries, including the British Isles, about our program to create a comprehensive international security system are becoming more intense. The attention of local commentators and politicians is being increasingly focused on the aspects of the proposal which concern ways of ensuring peace and security in Europe and increasing the role and responsibility of the continent's states in the struggle for disarmament and for an improvement in the international situation as a whole.

Whatever provisos are put forth in the West, J. Connell and S. Milligan, political commentators of the conservative newspaper THE SUNDAY TIMES write, "the Soviet plan contains a number of remarkably sensible ideas, particularly from Europe's viewpoint." "If Washington," adds Acherson, Political Commentator of THE OBSERVER, "refuses to meet these proposals halfway, the Europeans' alarm about Reagan's policy will increase substantially." The British Labour Party makes a positive assessment of the Soviet program for peace and disarmament. A special statement by the party's National Executive Committee called on the British Government and other NATO countries to reply positively to the Soviet proposals and thereby "make a contribution to resolving the most vitally important and urgent task facing all of us -- ensuring nuclear disarmament and saving Europe, and subsequently the entire world, from the threat of nuclear destruction."

"I, as a British politician," D. Healey, Labour's shadow foreign secretary, said, "take great satisfaction in the fact that the Soviet proposals reflect particular concern for the interests of the European countries. I ardently welcome the fact that the first phase of disarmament envisages the complete elimination of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles -- both ballistic and cruise -- in the European zone."

There is also seemingly no shortage in the statement ranking representatives of British ruling circles of appeals for a reduction in East-West tension, for the ending of the arms race, and even for restrictions in the weapons stockpiled by the two sides.

"Both NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries are interested in maintaining the balance of arms if they want to feel secure," Prime Minister M. Thatcher said during the USSR Supreme Soviet delegation's December 1984 visit to Britain. "There is no sense in maintaining that balance at a higher and higher level. The West is striving to ensure that it is reduced." But now British leaders have been given an opportunity to reaffirm in practice their adherence to stopping the arms race: to respond with real actions to the Soviet Union's 15 January peace program. And what has happened? Endless "consultations" with their senior transatlantic ally have started. Finally, only some 2 months after the official presentation of the Soviet disarmament proposals to the British Government, Whitehall has broken its protracted silence. Alas, the Thatcher government is essentially wholly in solidarity with the negative stance that Washington previously adopted as its response. In an attempt to somehow justify its refusal to adopt the Soviet proposals but without any cogent arguments to that end, Foreign Secretary G. Howe in a speech given to accredited foreign correspondents in London could find nothing better than to distort the content of the Soviet peace program.

Then, speaking of the USSR as none other than a potential aggressor," despite the content of the 15 January statement, he claimed that in proposing to eliminate nuclear weapons by the end of this century, the Soviet Union was "ignoring the simultaneous need for disarmament in other spheres." Mr Howe "failed to notice" the fact that our country, as was quite definitely stated in the 15 January statement, is proposing that conventional arms and armed forces be subject to agreed reductions along with the removal of mass destruction weapons from states' arsenals. Nor can London any longer "fail to notice" the new Soviet initiative of 18 April, namely the extensive plan to substantially reduce armed confrontation in Europe in terms of conventional arms.

Events happen in international life that spotlight the darkness of diplomatic stratagems the very essence of the policy of a certain bourgeois state. Such an event was the recent piratical attack on independent Libya by Washington with London's active connivance -- an attack which utterly revealed the militarist aggressive thrust of the present U.S. Administration's foreign policy course. The Conservative government has also been tainted by the shame.

The development of events around Libya demonstrated that this White House course could hardly have been carried out in such an insolent and flagrant form had not the Washington leaders been able to rely on the support of their most loyal NATO partners. In this instance it is essentially a question of an imperialist deal, the parties to which pooled efforts in an attempt to dictate their will to the peoples of the young independent states and to pursue a "position of strength" policy in relation to those states.

This neoglobalist policy, said participants in recent demonstrations in London and other British cities protesting against the anti-Libyan action, is a major source of tension in the modern world and threatens more and more complications in various parts of the world that could plunge the planet into the maelstrom of a global thermonuclear conflict.

No less cutting criticism is being made of the British Government's stance on the question of ending nuclear tests. The Thatcher government is not formally opposed to concluding a treaty on the universal prohibition of nuclear weapons tests. However, in fact this approach is hedged about with so many invented provisos, first and foremost about verification [kontrol] and the "need to continue nuclear explosions in order to develop new types of weapons," that we are talking about actual opposition to solving the question of ending all nuclear tests. As if to confirm this, M. Thatcher stated in an interview with a TIMES correspondent that, "I cannot imagine a world without nuclear weapons." "The British Government's position on a number of arms control [kontrol] issues is extremely disappointing," F. Blackaby, director of the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, writes.

It is obvious, however, that the Soviet program for ridding the planet of nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons -- a program that has now been supplemented with the proposals for decisive reductions of conventional arms and armed forces in Europe -- cannot fail to influence British attitudes. "British public opinion on the questions of ending the arms race is currently undergoing major changes," A. Benn, the well-known politician and member of the British Labour Party Executive Committee, told me. "We are taking all the recent Soviet proposals in this sphere very seriously. The British know that the Soviet Union needs peace to resolve the tasks it faces. But we need peace just as much, since we would like to rid ourselves of the ever-growing burden of the arms race." In my interlocutor's opinion, the recent events linked with Libya have sharpened still further here the realization of where the threat to peace actually stems from. "My compatriots," he continued, "see Washington, on one hand, carrying out more and more aggressive acts, while Moscow, on the other hand, is producing ideas and proposals aimed at strengthening peace and ensuring progress in disarmament." Speaking about the new Soviet proposals concerned with reducing conventional arms and armed forces in Europe, A. Benn called them highly positive. "The Soviet Union," he said, "is acting quite correctly in addressing them not just to governments but to the peoples of the European states."

"I hope that broad Bristish circles will make an equally high assessment of these proposals. And this is ultimately very important since, however the Western governments may approach the proposals, they cannot wholly ignore the opinion of their own peoples." In conclusion, here are the words of yet another Briton: "I am firmly convinced," Admiral Eberle, director of Britain's Royal Institute of International Affairs, told me in conversation, "that despite existing differences we must not end the dialogue aimed at studying each other's positions in greater depth and seeking mutually acceptable solutions in the disarmament sphere. We must not allow arms to get out of control and for development to reach the point where questions of war and peace are decided by computers. The solution of these questions must remain in the hands of politicians aware of their responsibility for the fate of their peoples." One cannot fail to agree with that.

TASS CITES PRAVDA ON NEW SOVIET INITIATIVE

LD200718 Moscow TASS in English 0704 GMT 20 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 20 TASS -- "The Soviet Union -- and this was reaffirmed once again by the results of this week's visit to Moscow by Prime Minister of Sweden Ingvar Carlsson -- is ready to develop in growing proportions relations with its European partners on an equal basis and to the mutual benefit in the interests of consolidating peace in the continent", PRAVDA writes today.

"When the question of Europe arises, the Soviet Union sees here one more major problem", the newspaper writes in its international review. "Mighty armed forces, equipped with conventional weapons, confront each other in the continent. These are two three-million strong groups of armed forces equipped with the most up-to-date armaments. In NATO countries they assert that allegedly Western Europe cannot give up nuclear weapons, including American, since in this case it will feel less secure in the face of the troops and conventional armaments of the Warsaw treaty countries".

The falsity of this argument is obvious. "Our country will never, under any circumstances, start military actions against Western Europe, unless we and our allies are attacked by NATO! I repeat, never!" said the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee at the Congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany.

"The USSR reaffirms this stand, PRAVDA writes, by a new initiative. It proposes to agree on a considerable reduction of all components of ground troops and tactical aviation of the European states, and also relevant forces of the United States and Canada, stationed in Europe. Operational-technical nuclear armaments would be reduced, along with conventional armaments".

"The Soviet Union is ready to consider other constructive peace initiatives."

TASS NEWS ANALYST ON WORLDWIDE MAY DAY CELEBRATION

LD301528 Moscow TASS in English 1405 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 30 TASS -- TASS News Analyst Vasiliy Kharkov writes:

This year's May Day -- the festival of internationalist solidarity of working people -- is a jubilee one. The fine tradition to mark this day under the slogans of unity of the working people in the struggle for vital interests, against the employers' arbitrariness, for political rights, against the war threat, and for peace originated a hundred years ago. The words 'May, Labour, and Peace' became the symbols of the festival which brings together millions of people in all countries under May Day banners.

This year's May Day is marked by the peoples of the world in an atmosphere of the growing nuclear-war danger which emanates from the forces of imperialism. The fires caused by the U.S. bombs released over the peaceful Libyan cities manifested still more vividly the entire extent of the danger. The task of checking the nuclear threat, of putting a barrier to aggressive aspirations, and of keeping and strengthening peace is now urgent as never before.

The Soviet Union and other countries of the socialist community, which proceed along the course of accelerating socio-economic development, consider it their paramount duty to do their best to normalise the international situation and to stop the world's slipping down to a nuclear catastrophe. The potential of socialism is a powerful obstacle in the path of the instigators of war.

The Soviet initiatives set out from the rostrum of the 27th Congress of the CPSU indicate the real way to lasting peace, to complete elimination of nuclear weapons and to an all-embracing system of international security. They are supplemented with new proposals on a reduction of conventional arms in the European Continent and on matters of security, good-neighbourliness and cooperation in the Asian-Pacific region.

The initiatives meet the hopes and aspirations of an overwhelming majority of people around the world. This will be reaffirmed by watchwords with which people will participate in May Day demonstrations and meetings wherever they live. The demonstrations will be yet another vivid illustration of the peoples' will to restrain the forces of war and sanguinary piracy.

May Day demonstrations are traditionally a review of the determination of the working class of capitalist countries to resist monopolies' opppression. The mounting vigour of workers' strikes is an indicator of the acuteness of the struggle and of growing class solidarity of its participants. Mass unemployment -- an incurable ailment -- erodes the capitalist world. More than 30 million people are out of jobs in the industrially developed Western countries alone. In these conditions the struggle for the vital rights of the working people is inseparably connected with their active resistance to militarism.

NATO EUROPEAN DEFENSE MINISTERS HOLD DISCUSSIONS

LD291011 Moscow TASS in English 0939 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Madrid April 29 TASS -- A meeting of NATO's European programming group of defence ministers' level has been held here under the watchword of a further build-up of conventional arms in NATO countries.

Set up in 1975, the group tackles matters aimed at coordinating the plans of the West European countries of NATO in the field of the production of the newest types of armaments and combat equipment.

The defence ministers discussed, in particular, a French proposal on the broadening of cooperation between West European member countires of NATO in the field of designing and manufacture of civilian and military aircraft, and matters connected with a project to create a European fighter plane by 1990 as well as a frigate, an air-to-surface cruise missile, an armoured infantry vehicle, new means of electronic warfare, anti-submarine warfare, and various newest means of communication. The participants in the meeting also discussed problems of standardizing the armaments of West European member countries of NATO.

A communique issued at the close of the group's meeting points out that the defence ministers adopted a decision to give a new impulse to European cooperation in the key sectors of the defence industry and first of all in the field of the aircraft industry.

WEU COUNCIL NOTES MOSCOW PEACE INITIATIVES

LD302144 Moscow TASS in English 1321 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Venice, April 30 TASS -- The council of the Western European Union (WEU) is in session on San Giorgio Island here. The session is being attended by the ministers of foreign affairs and defence of seven WEU member countries: the FRG, France, Britain, the Netherlands, Italy, Belgium, and Luxembourg. Matters of the international situation are under consideration at the session and efforts are being made to give a boost to the activities of this military-political alliance closely connected with NATO.

During the debate the participants in the session could not pass over in silence the Soviet Union's recent large-scale peace initiatives aimed at cardinally reducing both nuclear and conventional arms. However, following the "guidelines" which are being imposed from across the ocean, the participants in the session hurried to reject the Soviet initiatives summarily as "propaganda." Nevertheless, not all representatives of WEU countries fully share the non-constructive stand. Thus Giulio Andreotti, Italian minister of foreign affairs, admitted that the proposals "are indicative of the USSR's desire to conduct negotiations," and emphasized that they should be considered.

The West European countries' stand in connection with the U.S. aggressive actions in the Mediterranean are also under discussion at the session. Some representatives of WEU countries press for Western Europe's unreservedly joining the U.S. adventuristic course in the region right up to participation of the armed forces of these countries in new acts of aggression. Jean-Marie Caro, president of the WEU assembly, suggested that WEU countries in "special cases" conduct joint military operations in the Mediterranean and set up a special task force for these purposes within the WEU framework. Italian Defence Minister Giovanni Spadolini also advocated a more active support by Western Europe for U.S. policy.

These statements are in sharp contrast to the sentiments of the West-European public who come to realise the danger of an unqualified approval of the adventuristic actions of the Washington administration.

TASS: U.S. WAGING 'FINANCIAL WAR' ON UN

LD262256 Moscow TASS in English 2157 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 27 TASS -- The 40th session of the U.N. General Assembly will be resumed tomorrow at a request of the U.N. secretary-general. A report by the U.N. secretary-general points out that the United Nations Organisation has encountered the most serious financial crisis in its entire history. As a result of the crisis the UNO's ability to fulfil its duties under the U.N. Charter and first of all to create a firm foundation for peace and development has been endangered. Members of the international communist point out with indignation that responsibility for such a state of affairs rests with the United States which in point of fact declared a financial war on the UNO. Washington is trying to achieve political changes in the activities of the world body the positions of which on all the main problems of our times give rise to extreme exasperation on the Potomac banks.

UN DELEGATES CRITICIZE U.S. PAYMENTS POLICY

LD300701 Moscow TASS in English 0605 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 30 TASS -- By TASS correspondent Vyacheslav Chernyshev:

The United States' power pressure tactics toward the United Nations and its arbitrary actions with regard to the financing of the biggest international organization, dictated by political considerations, have been under fire of criticism from the international community at the resumed 40th session of the General Assembly.

The financial crisis now affecting the U.N. was of a political character. It was due to the attempts to weaken and restrict the role of the entire U.N. system, and undermine the principles of sovereign equality and democracy on which they were based, Ignac Golob, Yugoslavia's representative at the U.N., said on behalf of the Group of 77.

Those bent on perpetuating their privileged postions, based on strength and superiority, were seeking to undermine the U.N.

The developing countries support the UNO because they regard it as the upholder of their independence, self-determination and development, the speaker pointed out.

Natarajan Krishnan, permanent representative of India at the United Nations, describes the U.S. actions as an attempt at undermining the UNO, at weakening its role and efficiency in the maintenance of international peace and security, in the exercise of the peoples' right to self-determination, and in the strengthening of international cooperation in all fields. Speaking on behalf of the non-aligned countries, he pointed out that the "attack" against the UNO, which was manifesting itself, in particular, in financial blackmail against the world body, was a deliberate violation of the U.N. Charter.

On behalf of the Government of Sweden, Anders Ferm, permanent representative of that country at the United Nations, condemned the U.S. unilateral steps to reduce payment to the U.N. budget. The USA chose this "regrettable and dangerous course" several years ago. It is now a question of the continuation of that course on an unprecedented scope with an obvious violation of the U.N. Charter and of the international treaty obligations which the United States took upon itself.

Washington's actions which are a challenge to the entire international community were condemned by the delegates of Poland, Cuba, Kuwait, Iraq and other countries.

The common principled approach to international affairs inevitably tells on the approach of this or that country to the U.N. activities, stated Yuriy Dubinin, permanent representative of the USSR at the United Nations. The Soviet Union invariably attaches much importance to the United Nations Organization as an important instrument of the struggle for peace and international security. In so doing it proceeds from the assumption that the responsible tasks facing the United Nations can be accomplished only with a strict observance of the U.N. Charter and the ensurance of a sound budgetary-and-administrative foundation of the organization. Any attempts at using U.N. financial difficulties for putting political pressure upon it or for paralysing the world body's activities are alien to the Soviet Union. Showing good will, the Soviet Union is ready to contribute in a constructive spirit to overcoming the U.N. financial difficulties and will take certain concrete steps in that direction.

The Soviet Union will continue to favour the enhancement of the U.N. role in strengthening peace and promoting international cooperation. The U.N. is needed for all interested in peace, disarmament and the establishment of a better world free from wars, hunger and poverty.

The U.N. is needed for countries compelled to defend themselves against outside encroachments on their national interests, on their inalienable right to build their national life on the basis of the principles of sovereignty, independence and equality of all states.

The road to a better world is unthinkable without the renunciation by all states of the use of economic and financial levers as means of political coercion, without restructuring international relations of a fair and democratic footing.

The Soviet Union, one of the founders of the U.N. and having special responsibility as a permanent member of the Security Council, has always favoured and will continue to favour the consolidation of the U.N. on the basis of observance by all nations of its Charter.

UN MISSION RESPONDS TO U.S. 'LIES' ON AFGHANISTAN

LD300538 Moscow TASS in English 0519 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 30 TASS -- The USSR's permanent mission to the United Nations has categorically rejected the crude propaganda hoaxes of the U.S. mission to the world body, which resorted to shameless lies in a bid to accuse the Soviet Union of barbaric attitude to Afghan women and children.

The United States resorted to the hoaxes in order to divert world public attention from the "dirty war" conducted by Washington for many years against the Afghan people at the hands of bandits and mercenaries, said a statement for the press, released by the Soviet mission.

The counter-revolution, initiated and masterminded by the United States, turned Afghanistan into a bleeding wound. At the same time, American senators were discussing the question of how "effective" this "aid" to the hired killers was, what additional weapons should be sent to them.

U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD RACISM RAISED AT UN FORUM

LD011003 Moscow TASS in English 0937 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] New York May 1 TASS -- TASS correspondent Sergey Baybakov reporting:

Delegates attending the current spring session of the United Nations Economic and Social Council here called for eliminating discrimination against people on the grounds of the color of skin and their nationality.

The session is reviewing the progress of the second decade of action to combat racism and racial discrimination. The decade was proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly in 1983.

The delegates of Argentina, Brazil, Zaire, Cuba, Yugoslavia and other countries emphasized the need for creating a climate of intolerance to racism. They called for a complete international isolation of the racist regime of South Africa and denounced the aggressive policy of Israeli Zionists and their actions violating the rights of the native population of the Arab lands illegally occupied by Israel.

Zionism, said Argentina's representative Pedro Raul Villagra Delgado, was condemned as a form of racism and racial discrimination.

Precisely the racist policy of Zionism, he said, is leading to acts of aggression and expansion in the Middle East staged by the ruling quarters of Israel, to a gross violation of the national rights of the Arab people of Palestine.

First Deputy Permanent Representative of the U.S.S.R. to the United Nations Anatoliy Safronchuk said that the rise in the activities of racist, ultra right-wing and militaristic organizations in a number of Western countries has assumed the character threatening the cause of peace. Such organizations are allowed openly to preach concepts of racial superiority, to generate the atmosphere of enmity and hatred among nations.

The Soviet representative said that the elimination of racism and racial discrimination should start first of all with a complete prohibition and elimination of all racist organizations and their propaganda. Isn't it the reason why the United States has not acceded to the international convention on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination -- the document under which nations undertake legal obligations to combat all manifestations of racism? -- he asked.

The Soviet Union consistently advocates the strict observance of the program of the second decade of action to combat racism and racial discrimination. The Soviet delegation supports the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of effective measures aiming for an early elimination of apartheid, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, the Soviet representative said.

REPORTAGE ON 'HUMAN CONTACTS' CONFERENCE IN BERNE

U.S. Visa Denial Criticized

LD282223 Moscow TASS in English 2137 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Berne April 28 TASS — A conference on experts on human contacts is under way here. It is held by decision of the Madrid meeting of the states, parties to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. A speech at the plenary meeting today was delivered by deputy head of the USSR's delegation V.T. Shikalov. He expressed a number of considerations that arose in connection with speeches by some delegations of NATO countries.

The head of the U.S. delegation, said the Soviet representative, was obviously carried away by criticism of the Soviet Union's stand and tried to prove what cannot be proved. Criticizing groundlessly the Soviet approach to questions of development of contacts, the U.S. representative actually expressed disagreement with one of the basic provisions of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the document which bears the signature of the U.S. President. The interconnection between detente and development of cooperation in humanitarian fields is recorded in the preamble to a subsection in the third chapter of the Final Act, "on human contacts." It is clearly said in it that the participating states "desiring in this spirit to develop, with the continuance of detente, further efforts to achieve continuing progress in this field."

The Soviet Union's stand to that effect is ultimately clear, said the USSR's representative. It fully accords with the Final Act and all participants in the Berne conference, including the U.S. delegation, should be guided by that important provision of the Helsinki document.

His April 24 speech the head of the U.S. delegation based entirely on criticism of other states, parties to the conference. Meanwhile, stressed the Soviet representative, he said nothing about the U.S. authorities' policies and practices in the field of contacts between rank and file people. Having undertaken the obligation "to promote the development of tourism, on an individual and collective basis" and to "facilitate meetings, and also trips by delegations, group and individuals", the U.S. authorities nevertheless, in 1985 denied entry visas to a Soviet tourist group. A Soviet trade union delegation, invited to the United States by American workers to reciprocate a visit, were not granted entry visas either. The leaders of American organizations which invited Soviet workers rightfully described the actions of the U.S. authorities as being in the "cold war" spirit, as the unwillingness to heed the Helsinki accords.

Reagan Telegram Scored

LD252042 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1430 GMT 25 Apr 86

[V. Dmitriyev report; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] A conference of experts on contacts between people, institutions, and organizations is taking place in Berne, in accordance with the decisions of the Madrid meeting of representatives of states participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Addressing those those present, Pierre Aubert, chief of the Department of Foreign Affairs of Switzerland, emphasized the importance of multilateral European cooperation in the humanitarian sphere as being one of the factors in the development of confidence between peoples. Meanwhile, in the Buergerhaus Hotel, the so-called conference to counterbalance Helsinki was drawing to a close. It was organized by anti-Soviets and Western Zionist circles, timed to coincide with the beginning of the conference.

Reagan sent the assemblage a greeting telegram. The U.S. President's support for the provocateurs has been described here as the height of cyncism and irresponsibility, and an attempt to create an atmosphere of tension around the Berne conference. The meeting, as you see, has begun in an uneasy atmosphere. Where does the peculiarity lie in the present stage of humanitarian cooperation?

[Begin Yu. D. Kashlev, head of the USSR delegation, recording] The position of the Soviet delegation at the Berne conference is determined by our country's fundamental attitude toward the pan-European process and to humanitarian cooperation. This was clearly stated at the 27th congress by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. The scale of humanitarian cooperation has always depended, has depended directly on the international situation, on the level of detente. These last few days concentrated blows have been dealt to detente by its opponents, and already here, in Berne, during preparations for our conference, we have come up against attempts to use the noble theme of human contacts for aims far removed from what is set out in the Helsinki Final Act. Our delegation feels confident; we are working in close cooperation with the fraternal socialist countries, and we will do everything to make some sort of feasible contribution to strengthen the development of the pan-European process. [end recording]

Bolshakov Comments

PM010812 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 25 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Vladimir Bolshakov "Commentator's Column": "Who Is Being Obstructive?"]

[Text] The forum of experts for contacts between people, at which delegations from the 35 states participating in the CSCE are represented, is continuing in Bern. The Soviet delegation arrived in Bern with the most serious intention to conduct joint work in a constructive and businesslike manner, as envisaged by the Final Act. And that is natural, since the USSR consistently advocates the development of cooperation in the humanitarian sphere among states with different social systems.

The USSR consistently fulfills the recommendations of the Final Act and the international pacts and conventions it has signed on civil rights and takes account of them in its own legislation. Neither the USSR nor the other socialist countries party to the all-European process create any artificial barriers in the way of developing those contacts. It was no accident that the Swiss press, commenting on the progress at the Bern conference, noted the considerable growth in East-West exchanges involving tourism, sports, and trade unions as well as on the basis of personal and family ties. It would seem that the task of the experts gathered in Bern is to further promote the development of this trend -- something which the delegations from the socialist and neutral countries, including the hospitable Swiss hosts, are urging the West to do.

However, a number of Western delegations are stubbornly trying to turn the discussions in Bern into some kind of propaganda show.

Certain of them continually try to teach us "humanity." At one of these slander-laden "lectures" U.S. representatives cynically spoke, for instance, on the very day that U.S. aircraft bombed and shelled Libya, killing defenseless peaceful inhabitants, including children. Nor did the U.S. participants refrain from "homilies" on the day when their country issuing a challenge to millions of people, carried out another nuclear explosion.

And the people trying to exhort "humanity" are representatives of states where unemployment, investigation and persecution of dissidents, race discrimination, and genocide against the Indians have been elevated to norms of life. Nor did Washington succeed in the sphere of developing contacts. In recent years the State Department has refused to allow thousands of people, including Nobel Prize winner Gabriel Garcia Marquez and the wife of Salvador Allende, to enter the transatlantic "home of democracy." If one pursues the line of behavior assumed by the representatives of the leading NATO powers it seems that they have come to the important Bern forum not so much for a serious dialogue with the socialist countries as for confrontation. Their attacks clearly hinder the serious and constructive work of the Bern conference.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE SESSION CLOSES

LD261512 Moscow TASS in English 1313 GMT 26 Apr 86

[Text] Geneva April 26 TASS -- By TASS correspondent Yevgeniy Korzhev:

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) of the United Nations closed its 41st session here today. The session, opened on April 15, was chaired by Stefan Murin, deputy foreign minister of Czechoslovakia.

The commission discussed questions of trade, economic and industrial cooperation on the continent, and approved programmes of work for the next year and for the period ending in 1990.

The representative of the Group of Socialist Countries, Peter Dietze (German Democratic Republic), addressing the final meeting, said that the session's results could have been far more fruitful and constructive had it not been for the negative attitude to work displayed by the delegations from the United States and some of its NATO allies.

At a time when the socialist countries arrived for the session with concrete proposals directed at invigorating the commission's activity in various spheres, the U.S.-led group of "Westerners" adopted an obstructionist stand, as it happened on several occasions in the past, directed at curtailing cooperation and creating artificial obstacles in the way of broader mutually beneficial contacts.

Delegations from the socialist countries convincingly showed during the debate that these efforts were of a political character and were running counter not only to the basic provisions of the documents of the Helsinki conference and the Madrid meeting, but also the interests of practically all European countries.

The all-round development of economic, scientific and technical cooperation between countries with different social and economic systems, speakers said, constituted the material base for strengthening peace and international security.

Delegation Member Interviewed

PM300931 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Interview with Ye. N. Makeyev, deputy head of the Soviet delegation at the 41st session of the UN Economic Commission for Europe [ECE], by correspondent V. Kuznetsov in Geneva: "United Nations; Incentives to Cooperation" -- date not given]

[Text] Geneva -- The 41st session of the UN ECE has completed its work in the capital's Palais des Nations. During the friendly meeting there was a discussion of questions of the activity of the commission, which unites 32 European countries and the United States and Canada. There was an examination of the problems of economic relations between East and West. IZVESTIYA correspondent V. Kuznetsov asked Ye. N. Makeyev, deputy head of the Soviet delegation, to describe the results of the sessions's work.

"The universal world condemnation of the bombings of Libya was also reflected at our plenary session," the Soviet representative said. "The session delegates denounced the U.S. piratical attack on peaceful Libya, stressing that such bandit actions are a violation of the UN Charter and an attempt to replace international law with the "law of the jungle," that they are fraught with the danger of serious consequences for international peace and security. In response to these statements, the U.S. delegation tried to complicate the session's work, demonstrating an unconstructive approach toward questions of economic relations with the socialist countries. These attempts, however, were rebuffed.

"As a whole, the session took place in a businesslike atmosphere. The majority of delegations advocated the intensification of the Helsinki process, the expansion of trust between states, and on this basis the consolidation of the continent's economic commonality. The Soviet delegation came to Geneva with a constructive program of cooperation in the fields of trade, industry, science and technology, the environment, and other spheres of economic activity. The Soviet Union made specific proposals in the development of cooperation in the field of energy, transport, machine building, automation, and so forth. These proposals met with a broad response and were considered during the drafting of the session's concluding documents and will become the basis for the commission's further work. "I should like to note," Ye. N. Makeyev said in conclusion, "that the session's participants paid serious attention to preparing for the forthcoming Vienna meeting of representatives of the countries taking part in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe."

LIBYA'S AL-'UBAYDI INTERVIEWED AFTER WPC SESSION

LD290944 Moscow TASS in English 0758 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Sofia April 29 TASS -- Al-'Ubaydi, president of the Libyan peace and solidarity committee, who attended the World Peace Council (WPC) session, has stated that it has become a foreign-policy course of the Reagan administration to undermine the forces of peace, progress and socialism.

In an interview with TASS correspondent Yuriy Tyssovskiy, he pointed out that it was precisely in this context that the barbarous attack by U.S. aircraft on the peaceful cities of Libya should be regarded, and the the U.S. air raid was only a link in the chain of Washington's crimes in Grenada, in Angola, Ethiopia, and Afghanistan. Al-'Ubaydi expressed gratitude to the USSR and other socialist countries and to all progressive forces for their support for Libya in time of need. The state terrorism of the White House will not make the Libyan people abandon the chosen road and will not force them to their knees, Al-'Ubaydi emphasised.

MOSCOW CRITICIZES U.S. REPORTS OF CHERNOBYL INCIDENT

LD301343 Moscow World Service in English 1310 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] As you heard in our broadcasts there was an accident at an atomic power station in the USSR at Chernobyl, 130 km north of Kiev. Parts of the structure of one of four units was destroyed and the reactor damaged, which caused some leakage of radioactive substances. Two persons died in the accident. The residents of the community next to the power station and another three communities in the area have been evacuated. Here is what Viktor Ilichev writes in this connection:

The causes of the breakdown are being are fully investivated by a special commission of leading scientists and experts led by Deputy Prime Minister Boris Scherbina. Emergency measures have been taken to eliminate the consequences of the breakdown. The other three units of the power station have been stopped. They were not damaged. The radiation situation at the power station and around it has been stabilized.

There have been reports in the press of a number of Eurpean countries that the level of radioactivity is returning to normal and gives no ground for concern. However, the propaganda machine in the West, in the first place the United States, has gone into high gear. The American mass media, as if on an order -- it is still more likely that there has been an order -- have started spreading rumors in connection with the breakdown at the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Station, the first such accident in the USSR in more than 30 years.

There is an impression that they are interested not in truthful information about the accident -- we've repeatedly heard them claiming that they are -- but in spreading falsehoods as confirmed facts. They have still another aim, to call into question the reliability of Soviet nuclear power engineering and of Soviet science and technology in general although it has stood the test of time.

This, in turn, is being done to tone down criticism in the United States itself of lax security at a great number of nuclear power stations, where radioactive leads more than once seriously affected people and the environment. Against this background the reliable performance of nuclear power stations in the USSR serves as a strong argument in favor of building more power stations.

True, exploration of the unknown is always coupled with risk, be it nuclear research or space flights -- even on board a repeatedly tested craft. Progress cannot be stopped but the question is what objectives does it serve? Does it serve peace and the progress of humanity or war and death? The upsurge of anti-Soviet propaganda in the United States still adds another aspect: The American media have been speaking and writing about the accident at the Soviet nuclear power station 100 times more than about the systematic nuclear explosions in Nevada. Even schoolchildren understand that the future of humanity today is jeopardized not by the development of nuclear power engineering but by the buildup of nuclear weapons; not by the construction of more atomic power stations but by the production of ever more nuclear warheads.

Experts say that the nuclear charges stockpiled to date can destroy life on this planet many times over. This is the reason why the Soviet Union has been calling for eliminating nuclear weapons step by step by the end of this century.

COMMENTARIES ON NUCLEAR PROBLEMS, SOLUTIONS

Sunken Waste Noted

LD301806 Moscow TASS in English 1724 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 30 TASS -- TASS correspondent Igor Ignatyev reports:

The rusting hulls of the giant nuclear submarines "Abraham Lincoln" and "Theordore Roosevelt" are moored at one of the shipyards in Seattle, Washington. Although their nuclear reactors have been shut down long ago, they retain residual radiation.

The Penatgon has long been loking for a convenient way to dispose of the useless nuclear submarines to make way for new nuclear monsters. The U.S. Defense Department chose what it calls the most "economic"way, which is to sink several dozen discarded submarines in various parts of the Pacific and the Atlantic.

The magazine "NATION" estimates that from 1946 to 1970 the Pentagon has dumped in the ocean 90,000 containers with radioactive waste. The places where most containers were dumped are hard to pinpoint now. The containers are the source of constant radiation dangerous not only to the ocean flora and fauna but also to human health.

Experts hold, however, that the nuclear reactors of the sunken submarines will pose even higher danger for the flora and fauna of the sea bottom. The residual radiation has a catastrophic effect on the environment, 100 times that of the containers. Corrosion and water pressure will combine to errode with time the metallic walls of the reactors and this will cause radioactive contamination of large areas of the ocean.

There are all indications to believe that the U.S. Defense Department pays no attention to these factors. Defending their plan, representatives of the department claim that it will help the administration same 200 million dollars.

U.S. 'Accidents' Scored

LD252021 Moscow TASS in English 1528 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Washington April 25 TASS -- TASS correspondent V. Legantsov reports:

The nuclear-powered submarine of the U.S. Navy "Nathanael Greene" of the "Poseidon" class got into a serious accident when on a patrol duty in the Irish Sea in March this year. Robert Siems, a spokesman for the Pentagon, was forced to admit that fact at a meeting with newsmen.

Answering questions, he specified that the submarine hit the ground. According to him the accident adversely affected its combat potentialities. No other essential details of the accident, which took place off the shores of Western Europe in an area of intensive shipping, were cited.

Submarines of the "Poseidon" class carry, as a rule, 16 ballistic missiles tipped with three nuclear warheads each. Characteristically, the U.S. military department remained tight-lipped for more than a month about the accident, which was fraught, as least, with a radioactive contamination of the coastal waters of a number of European nations.

The wreck of the "Nathanael Greene" submarine is far from being a single accident among the U.S. strategic nuclear force. Thus, a B-52 bomber carrying up to 30 nuclear bombs, which was prepared for a flight, burned down at the Grand Forks air base, North Dakota, in September 1980. In October that year, an FB-111 fighter-bomber fitted out with nuclear-tipped missiles got into an accident near the eastern coast of the USA. In May 1981, a jet aircraft of radar reconnaissance flew on the deck of the nuclear-powered and nuclear capable aircraft carrier "Nimitz." As a result of the explowion four aircraft were destroyed and 16 damaged.

There have been tens of such accidents, which became known to the public. In the Pentagon's cant they are named "The Broken Arrows". As observers stress the danger of an "accident" nuclear tragedy increases along with a buildup of the nuclear arsenal both in the territory of the USA and at the U.S. military bases abroad.

Cooperation Called For

LD291811 Moscow World Service in English 1710 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Commentary by Observer Igor Pavlov]

[Text] Since atomic power stations were introduced inthe late 1950's there have been a series of major or minor accidents in France, Great Britain, the United States, and other countries. According to the experts, the most frequent cause of radiation leaks is the overheating of a reactor's core. Incidentally, in all such accidents fewer people have been killed or injured than in several aircraft crashes over the same period and nobody has ever suggested that as a result all flights be terminated and people stop flying. Nor has anybody ever suggested that we stop making cars although road accidents account for the lion's share of peacetime fatalities.

Not so with nuclear power plants. They have been less lucky in the sense that many people, especially in the environmentalist movement are fearful of them, claiming that such plants are a terrible hazard. At the same time, scientists and engineers believe that the current technology can fully assure adequate safety of nuclear power plants.

Nothing can stop progress. When the space shuttle Challenger crew was killed in a tragic accident earlier this year, it was a blow to the U.S. space program but not an end to it, much the same as several deaths of Soviet cosmonauts did not stop our own space program.

Major breakdowns at nuclear power plants such as the Three Mile Island plant accident in the United States or the one at Chernobyl in the Ukraine call for a greater degree of international cooperation rather than an immediate shutdown of all such facilities. As a matter of fact, the Three Mile Island plant accident has caused more protests in the United States than has the series of underground nuclear blasts under the Nevada desert. To be sure, splitting the atom for peaceful purposes is not risk free. However, when the same is done for military purposes the risks are infinitely greater. It would be a disservice to all of us if public anger is directed against such programs as building atomic power plants where there is a green light for the further accumulation of nukes for reasons of national security as we hear from the West.

Disasters such as earthquakes happen everywhere, in the West and in the East. They defy national boundaries or political systems. They, like major accidents, are a vivid reminder that there is much work to be done together in many fields without waiting for any extraterrestrials to arrive to make us realize that after all, we all share the same boat.

REAGAN TO INTEFERE IN ASEAN TALKS IN BALI

BK301002 Moscow in Indonesian to Indonesia 1300 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] U.S President Ronald Reagan, who is on an Asia-Pacific tour, has arrived in Bali. But, listeners, please do not think that the White House chief is stopping over on the Indonesian island to enjoy Bali's scenery, famous throughout the world. An ASEAN foreign ministers meeting is taking place there.

Our observer, Vladimir Korolev, notes that the regional organization is made up by six Southeast Asian countries. Economic issues top the ministers agenda. Lately, these issues have become a source of concern among the ASEAN partners. Washington does not hesitate to promise them economic assistance. Similarly, Reagan will promise this aid. But, the facts show that the United States has never given anone something for nothing. In this regard, the world press writes that Reagan will again try to promise such aid in return for the participation of the ASEAN member countries in the so-called "Pacific community." Washington plans to turn this initially economic alliance into a future military bloc similar to NATO in Europe. Obviously, it is no accident that among its future members are Japan and South Korea, which have militaristic policies. Thus, the ASEAN countries could be used as a military springboard for the planned bloc.

The Soviet Union opposes the establishment of blocs and counterblocs in Asia and the Pacific. The Soviet Government reaffirmed on 23 April that this can only aggravate tention in the region.

REAGAN'S CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SPEECH DENOUNCED

PM300938 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 25 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Own correspondent V. Gan dispatch: "Truth Is the Victim"]

[Text] During World War I, the then Senator H. Johnson of California, a Republican, noted: "Truth is the first victim of war." A lot of water has flowed into the Potomac since then, but, applied to Washington, the statement could have been made by Johnson today. In carrying out its aggression against Libya the U.S. Administtation, which has never favored the truth, has finally bombed truth together with the houses of the peaceful Libyan citizens.

These, alas, are not idle deductions but the obvious conclusion after President R. Reagan's speech at a session of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The President had no mercy for the truth, threatening it on even further grounds. It is well known, for instance, that the administration was unable to adduce any concrete evidence to confirm its accusations of Tripoli's complicity in "international terrorism." But what is that to the White House incumbent?! "Decent people can no longer tolerate cowardly terrorist attacks. America will never watch passively as its innocent citizens are murdered by those who would do our country harm." Not content with these lies, the President's speechwriters go even further: "By nature we prefer to solve problems peacefully. But as we reaffirmed last week no one can kill Americans and brag about it." That is yet another false reference. For Washington prefers to solve problems with its military fist. Grenada, Libya, Nicaragua, El Salvador, the dushman gangs in Afghanistan, the Pol Pot holdouts in Cambodia, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola terrorists in Angola, and the cherished killers from the so-called "Mozembique National Resistance" are confirmation of that.

So there is not a grain of truth in all these presidential declarations. The truth is elsewhere -- in the threat to inflict a new deadly strike and to punish the objectionable and the freedom-loving. Today Reagan considered it necessary to supplement this fact. In conversation with journalists he frankly stated that the United States "will be prepared to strike against Syria and Iran if it obtains exhaustive proof of their complicity in terrorism." It has been testified with extreme clarity that Washington, believing that might is right, would like to decide the destinies of all those who, for some reason, do not want to follow its practices.

Incidentally, CBS TV reported that certain administration officials admit that the head of the administration was "overdoing it." Not intoxicated by armed might, they clearly realize that the time when Washington could carve up the world as it liked has gone. CBS also noted that these officials are "striving to downplay the President's belligerent rhetoric." That is understandable. In the agenda R. Reagan has drawn up for the Tokyo conference there is virtually no room for such an urgent question as the problem of arms control.

On the contrary, it follows from Reagan's statements that at the forthcoming Tokyo conference of the heads of the leading industrially developed states he will try to "call to order" his allies who (apart from the obedient Thatcher government) dissociated themselves from the bandit U.S. attack on Libya. The Western countries, the President proclaimed, must stand "shoulder to shoulder in such battles." In short, he who has thought up a deception is not about to tell the truth.

U.S. NEOGLOBALIST DOCTRINE ASSAILED

GF281716 Baku International Service in Azeri 1200 GMT 28 Apr 86

[From the "Important Developments in the World Last Week" program]

[Text] The indignation in the world over the savage U.S. attack on Libya is subsiding. However, Washington is now threatening another independent country -- Nicaragua. This threat has been made by the head of the White House.

President Reagan addressed the members of [words indistinct] last Tuesday. Describing Nicaragua as a supporter of terrorism without any evidence -- just as he accused Libya in the past -- President Reagan openly threatened that country with military intervention. He repeated his threat during his meeting with journalists on Thursday. The head of the Washington administration said that in the event Washington acquires evidence proving Syrian and Iranian involvement in terrorism, the United States will be prepared to deal blows on those countries as well.

This is the latest manifestation of the neoglobalist doctrine that explains the U.S. interference in the internal affairs of young and independent countries that do not wish to live with Washington's instructions. However, no matter what its title may be, no doctrine can explain such an open act of violence. It is due to this that the aggressive policy the United States is pursuing against Afghanistan, Libya, Nicaragua, angola, and other regions in the world is encountering a gradually stengthening condemnation in the world.

'TOP PRIORITY' VIEWS U.S. PERCEPTIONS OF USSR

LD282046 Moscow in English to North America 2300 GMT 27 Apr 86

["Top Priority" program, presented by Vladimir Posner, with Profs Radomir Bogdanov and Sergey Plekhanov of the United States and Canada Institute]

[Text] [Posner] In our last discussion, gentlemen, we looked at what I think we all agree is a very dangerous tendency today in the United States, the tendency to see the world in a very simplistic way, a world portrayed on American television, a world described in the READERS DIGEST, a world of good guys and bad guys where of course America is the good guy and where might means right. And we looked at some of the situations in the world today and examined the dangers therein as well as the internal danger for the United States because I believe we agreed that this kind of chauvinism that we see there in the country could be a forerunner of profound political change and of in fact the advent of fascism in what was the first democratic republic in the history of the modern world. Today (?we'd quite) like to look at the U.S. assessment of the Soviet Union in view of what we've just said, in the framework of that approach. That is to say that the decisions taken by the 27th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party concerning the development of the country and in particular the economic development -- how that is seen in the United States, what the reaction to that is, and the policies that of course are the results of these assessments.

It is my feeling that once again we have a very simplistic, brutal assessment of what the Soviet Union can and cannot do. That is what I think we should look at today. Anyone want to start?

[Bogdanov] Yeah.

[Posner] Professor Bogdanov.

[Bogdanov] I believe, Vladimir, that you touch upon a very important and if you like a crucial point in the Soviet-American foreign policy toward the Soviet Union was planned on the assumption that they are a failure, we should not deal with them, we should not try to deal with them, we should just push them a little bit on the brink.

[Posner] That is they push us?

[Bogdanov] Yes, they push us.

[Posner] Right.

[Bogdanov] Now, they were really frightened by the 27th congress, party congress, in one way. They were frightened by the perspectives of very big upsurge of our economy, that the Soviet Union might be on the move and they saw in all that, because that is, as they feel, that is the real danger for them, if the Soviet Union is on the move in the economic field. [sentence as heard] They never understood our system, how it works and it's a pity that they'd never tried to understand it, never tried. They had already made up their mind once forever, bad guys are there, bad system is there, evil empire is there, so what do you expect from them they say. They will [words indistinct] they're just trying, you know, to mislead good guys in the West by their slogans and things like that. But in any case, in any case, you have to deal with very simplistic, you know, very ignorant if you like, view of the Soviet Union, of the Soviet economy. Sometimes I'm really afraid that they listen only what they like to listen, you know.

[Posner] Yeah, I understand.

[Bogdanov] And all the other voices, reasonable voices, are just not being picked up.

[Posner] Let me interrupt you for one moment. I'd like to address a question to professor Plekhanov. My point is as follows. This country, the Soviet Union, is 68-years-old going on 69. We had our revolution in 1917. And from that 1st day, virtually, over all these years, the basic American outlook, or shall we say the mainstream outlook, the official outlook, has always been one of predicting the ultimate failure, the ultimate breakdown, the ultimate disappearance of the socialist system in this country. Now bak in 1917, 1918, 1919 one could at least say well, it was something new. There were no, quote, experts, unquote, on the Soviet Union because there had never been one before. So we can sav yes, they made a mistake then, but you know, after all, people are people, they all make mistakes. Here we are, 69-years-old, which is very little for a country, but for a human being it's not bad, and they're still saying the same thing basically, that the Soviets will not be able to do this and do that. Now how do you explain this, I don't know what you'd call it, deafness, blindness, lack of understanding, what is it?

[Plekhanov] Well, there is a market for it.

[Posner] A market?

[Plekhanov] There's a market for it, a rich market for bad predictions, for somber predictions.

[Posner] You mean it's a good commodity?

[Plekhanov] It's a good commodity. There's a lot of people who need just that kind of analysis and that's been one of the blind spots of American foreign policy. I would like to disagree with you on one point. If you look at the 68-year history of our existence there has been one period in American history, or maybe a couple of periods when more objective estimates of our potential and our capabilities were influential. I'm talking about the time of the Roosevelt administration when at least at the presidential level there was recognition that the United States was dealing with a viable system, even if different from the United States, but a viable system with which one has to deal on a more or less equal basis and one has to recognize legitimate security concerns rather than trying to push it over some kind of a brink. Unfortunately in 1945, after Roosevelt's death, the other, the traditional outlook again prevailed and the reason is very simple, that their outlook was very functional for the American policy makers. They, as they went on expansionist binge after the Second World War trying to establish a world system controlled by the United States, they needed the image of a Soviet Union that was not only bad and aggressive as they were saying but also a Soviet Union that was inherently weak and it could be pushed around, it could be pressured. That's a major point, by the way, in all anti-Soviet crusades, that it really makes sense to try to push the Soviet Union, to pressure it in the expectation that it would collapse. They have been proven wrong so many times that really one is struck by the obduracy of this viewpoint and how it continues to find its adherents. In Western Europe I think that kind of thinking is far less influential because those people at least they are more realistic, they know what the Soviet Union is all about.

[Bogdanov] And they are our neighbors, after all.

[Plekhanov] And neighbors yes. But the Americans out there in the other hemisphere are very self-centered, very little-informed about what's going on in the real world.

They continue — they can't continue to indulge in this sort of so-called analysis about the Soviet Union. I think the American newsmen and newswomen working here during the 27th congress — I don't want to issue any sort of blanket condemnation of their work,many of them tried to be objective, and so on and so forth — but, form my conversations with them, my impression was that they came here to Moscow with preconceived notions and when reality, what they heard at the congress, did not jibe with their preconceived notions, they just wiped aside reality. Very few of them really changed their perceptions. I think maybe they changed them but haven't revealed the changes, but I was disappointed by the way, by their refusal to see reality, to see the real changes that are happening in the Soviet Union and to apply yardsticks which were based on very questionable premises.

[Posner] You know, what you say there, I smile when you say it because you are being very delicate and I certainly appreciate that. I don't know whether my American colleagues who are listening to this program appreciate it. When you say they came with preconceived notions, they came to do a job and knew exactly what they were supposed to be doing, and no matter what notions they may have had afterwards they knew very well what was expected of them. And there is no way that they could have produced a picture that was different from the picture that they were supposed to produce when they — even before they came. [sentence as heard] That is the name of the game.

[Plekhanov] Well, some of them were a little beyond that, I mean...

[Posner, interrupting] I don't know, I saw the stories on television. I witnessed many of these stories. I thought that they were absolutely horrendous, I mean, I — neither more nor less.

[Plekhanov] I didn't see any television stories. I judged by the printed media.

[Posner] Well, anyway to get back to what we are talking about. You know, several years ago, I don't know if you had the opportunity, you probably did, I saw this American film about the beginning of a nuclear war and the results of it in America. It was done by ABC.

[Bogdanov and Plekhanov] Yes, yes.

[Posner] We watched it, we were invited by the ABC correspondent, the bureau chief here in Moscow, who invited a group of Soviets over to his place to look at this movie. And of course we'd read a lot about it and the fact that in the United States there'd been concern about how children would react and that families should watch it together with their family psychiatrist, to kind of soften the great shock they would get, and so on and so forth. Well, anyway, we sat there watching this picture and when it was all over the Soviets, I recall this very clearly, looked at each other and kind of smiled a sad smile and said: And that's all? Because they knew what war was, whereas this was supposed to be even worse, this was nuclear war, but for persons, for people who went through the real hell of war, that picture didn't rally impress them. Now what I'm getting to is, do you have this feeling that, somehow, in America many of the decisions that are taken are based on a world of, I don't know, comic strip heroes, a world where the good guys always win, a world where the war after all is only what you see on celluloid? A very very simple kind of world, and that this applies to the Soviet Union, as well, this whole idea of, you know, how you deal with the other side, it's part of an imagined thing because they have not gone through the actual experience of living the way Europeans have and the way we have. How do you feel about that?

[Bogdanov] I - I - I - it sounds very frightening what you say, Vladimir, really. I'm thinking of that very often and I come to very, very sad conclusions, you know.

Maybe I am too pessimistic, but after what happened to Libya I am becoming more pessimistic. You know, a silly idea -- it may be silly -- comes to my mind. Suppose we don't agree with the American conditions in Geneva, we don't agree with the star wars conditions or with something else, don't you think that this administration may send some F-111's for producing surgical strikes around Moscow or somewhere else just to make us to agree to their conditions? You are smiling, of course you are smiling, but I am quite serious. You know, with this frame of mind, when might is law, when good guys at the other end and the bad guys which, just because of the ominous designs, do not agree with the famous - with the fabulous American world, they don't like their (?cities to be shining on the hill). They will just send some F-111's from Britain (?and) from somewhere else just to teach these poor Russians a lesson. Don't smile Vladimir.

[Posner] No, I don't.

[Bogdanov] Please, for heaven's sake, because once you said that at the other end, at the American end they don't know what the war means, then the gate is open, the door is open for any, any, any experience of that, you know, sort with the Russians, with poor Russians, you know. So if you, if you -- I don't know if you will agree with me or not but what they have done to Libya it was a signal to us. It was a signal to us. That's why we had to cancel the meeting of our foreign ministers, you know. It's a clear signal to us. Behave yourself, something like that.

[Posner] Prof Bogdanov, the only reason I kind of smiled was that deep down inside I don't think that the United States would have ever risked attacking Libya if Libya was the Soviet Union. What I mean by that is, I see a certain degree of arrogance, cowardice in the American act because they know very well that Libya cannot fight back.

[Plekhanov] They pick up soft targets. They know when they can get away with it.

[Posner] It's a bully attacking, you know, a smaller guy.

[Plekhanov] A smaller guy.

[Posner] And in that sense it may be simplistic but they know very well what they're doing. What I am saying, though, is that their attitude in general and toward the Soviet Union, their understanding of it is based on these black and white images which I think is very negative and very...

[Bogdanov, interrupting] I agree with you, but what worries me really, is if you, if you are serious enough, what worries me is unpredictability of American foreign policy. You cannot predict it, I am sorry to say that, with all the consequences of that for our foreign policy, for our policy. You know, it's unpredictable, it's dangerous, that's my statement.

[Posner] Well, I think it's a statement that many people will agree with. I certainly think that you have made some very good points there.

Incidentally, we would invite comments both from those of you who agree and perhaps even more so from those of you who disagree, if you wish them to be discussed by this panel, so please write to Top Priority, Radio Moscow, Moscow the USSR. And until next time this is Vladimir Posner saying goodbye and good listening.

COMMENTARY ON WEINBERGER'S ASIA VISIT

PM281345 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Report by B. Vinogradov: "When Guns Talk...."]

[Text] As soon as U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who is making a tour of Asian and Pacific Ocean countries, arrived in the region of the Thailand-Cambodian border, guns rang out on one of the training grounds -- artillery fire had been arranged in honor of the high-ranking guest. Soldiers fired from new U.S. weapons, while remote radar equipment, also U.S.-produced, plotted the point from where the shot was fired.

Thus, the Pentagon chief was able to personally verify on the spot the "efficiency" of modern military equipment delivered to Thailand from the United States, and he was satisfied with what he saw. But the gunfire was only a suitable overture to Weinberger's speech, in which a storm of abuse broke out addressed to Cambodia and Vietnam -- he declared that the United States will continue to "support the struggle" of militarized units of Khmer reactionaries in this region, of which surviving Pol Pot followers form the basis.

This is already the 8th year they have been waging an undeclared war against the PRK, receiving aid in the form of weapons and finance from their patrons. It is toward these people that Washington is oriented, nurturing plans of a "return to Indochina" and of increasing its presence in Southeast Asia. Making use of the so-called "Cambodian problem," the United States intends to once again turn Thailand into its strategic bridgehead, such as during the years of the aggressive war against the peoples of Cambodia, Vietnam, and Laos.

This is also borne out by Weinberger's talks with the Thai leadership on forming American arms depots on the country's territory. As is well known, these arsenals are intended for operations involving U.S. gendarme "Rapid Deployment Forces" in Southeast Asia.

Needless to say, such actions by Washington stand in the way of trends toward peaceful dialogue between the Southeast Asian states and lead to further exacerbation of the situation. They are fraught with new military conflicts and represent a serious threat to peace.

But, this is evidently necessary to the U.S. Administration which, defending its own imperial interests, prefers to talk with other people in the language of guns.

U.S. DESIRES TO 'THREATEN MANKIND WITH NUCLEAR SWORD'

PM231355 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 19 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[Final part of article by Candidate of Economic Sciences Yu. Katasonov under the rubric "United States -- Locomotive of Militarism": "Forces of Reaction and War Are Not Omnipotent"]

[Text] The object lesson which the Cuban patriots taught the counterrevolutionary rabble and its U.S. masters 25 years ago has done them no good. Within a little while, the U.S. ruling circles had drawn the country into the "dirty war" that lasted many years against the heroic people of Vietnam. Defeat in this war was so impressive and so painful for the United States that to this day millions of Americans are afraid of a "new Vietnam."

But today the "hawks" from the Pentagon and elsewhere are saber-rattling in various parts of the world and kindling bellicose chauvinism in their country, doing everything possible to force America to rid itself of the "Vietnam syndrome." They are again pushing the country on the path of military adventures -- this time under the flag of "neoglobalism." The undeclared war against sovereign Nicaragua, and the all-around support for the bandit formations acting against their own people in Afghanistan, Cambodia, and Angola are recent examples of U.S. imperial "neoglobalist" policy .

On 25 March, and 15 and 16 April, air attacks on Libya caused outrage throughout the world, were evidence that the present U.S. Administration is again playing with fire, pursuing a policy of aggression, provocation of regional conflicts, and brinkmanship.

A special threat is connected with the fact that U.S. imperialism, in lashing on the arms race, including the nuclear arms race, is preparing to move the arms race to space. In the chase after the specter of military superiority and despite the clearly expressed will of the world public, the United States carried out a new test on a nuclear device on 10 April, partially within the framework of the creation of "star wars" weapons systems. The provocative, arrogant nature of this irresponsible act was emphasized by the fact that it was undertaken on the eve of a notable date -- the 25th anniversary of the flight of Yuriy Gagarin, which opened the era of the peaceful development of space. It is obvious to everyone that behind the U.S. action there lies the desire to threaten mankind with the nuclear sword, to hold the world in hostage to the fear of universal annihilation. "The main aim of the present U.S. authorities," the Indian newspaper THE PATRIOT writes, "consists in intimidating the whole world with its nuclear blackmail until the whole world makes concessions and agrees to U.S. hegemony." This, the newspaper stresses, is a dangerous and senseless plan.

Yes, the danger emanating from militarism, above all U.S. militarism, has never been so terrible. But never before have the opportunities for preserving and strengthening peace and averting the threat of nuclear catastrophe been so real either. The growing potential of the forces of peace and social progress is countering the sinister alliance of manufacturers of death and imperialist state power, which represents the bulwark of extreme reaction and a constant and growing source of military danger.

The socialist community is the stronghold of these forces of peace and social progress. It is the main obstacle on the path of imperialist aggression and reaction. Under conditions where the aggressive NATO bloc continues to exist, the socialist community states consider it necessary to do everything to strengthen and improve the Warsaw Pact organization as an instrument of collective defense against the aggressive aspirations of imperialism and the joint struggle for peace.

A historic gain for socialism has been the establishment of military-strategic parity between the USSR and the United States and the Warsaw Pact organization and NATO. Ensuring parity has substantially limited the aggressive plans and opportunities of imperialism to unleash nuclear war and has had a sobering effect on their creators. The Pentagon strategists have frequently nurtured plans for attacking our country. If they have not made up their minds to implement them, it is above all because of an understanding of the inevitability of retribution and a crushing retaliatory strike.

As is well known, Soviet military doctrine is aimed at defending our motherland and allies from an outside attack. The USSR threatens no one. It has undertaken not to make a first strike with nuclear weapons. But scenarios exist for a nuclear attack on our country. And they must be considered. That is why the Soviet power's defense might is maintained at a level which rules out the military superiority of the forces of imperialism, and rules out their opportunity to take us unawares.

The combat readiness of the Soviet Army and Navy is such that they are prepared to rebuff any aggression, wherever it may come from.

The Soviet Union has frequently given convincing evidence of its ability to respond to any challenge in the arms race imposed by the United States. This also applies to the "star wars" program Washington has put into full swing. Because there is nothing in science and technology that the United States can make and the USSR cannot. "... It is time," M.S. Gorbachev said, "to stop building relations with the USSR on erroneous ideas, on illusions. One of the most dangerous of these illusions is to assess the Soviet Union's peaceful intentions and appeals as a sign of weakness. So: The arms race cannot be used to wear us down, to remove us from space, or overtake us in technology. No good will come of those attempts."

The potential of peace, intelligence, and goodwill is considerably expanded and intensified as a result of the world revolutionary process and the upsurge of mass democratic and antiwar movements. Common end goals -- peace and socialism -- are pursued by the parties making up the communist movement. In the struggle to eliminate the threat of war, the Soviet Union is also collaborating with the liberated countries of socialist orientation, with the revolutionary-democratic parties, and with the Nonaligned Movement. The resistance of the peoples of these countries to the imperialist policy of plunder and piracy is being intensified.

The working people, politicians, and parties of the capitalist countries, including the NATO countries, who possess common sense and are aware of the new realities advocate preserving peace. Notable in this respect is the appeal from the leaders of six countries -- Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Tanzania, and Sweden -- to the USSR and the United States not to carry out nuclear tests in the period before the next Soviet-U.S. summit meeting.

In contrast to the Soviet Union, the United States has arrogantly rejected this sensible proposal and carried out a nuclear explosion on 10 April. That is why the USSR Government stated that henceforth it is free from the unilateral undertaking it assumed to refrain from any nuclear explosions. Under the conditions of Washington's continuation of nuclear explosions, the Soviet state cannot forfeit its own security and the security of its allies.

"The citadel of international reaction," the new edition of the CPSU Program states, "is U.S. imperialism. It is the primary source of the threat of war." The transatlantic locomotive of militarism, with a tremendous military machine, seeking to place the military potential of its allied countries at its service, is trying to halt the course of history, to undermine the positions of socialism, and to wreak social revenge on a world scale.

But the forces of aggression and reaction are not omnipotent. It is possible to prevent war and protect mankind from catastrophe. That is the historical calling of socialism and all progressive peace-loving forces of our planet.

U.S. REPORTEDLY HAS 'SECRET PLAN' TO BLOCKADE LIBYA

LD011201 Moscow TASS in English 1121 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Cairo May 1 TASS -- As was reported by the newspaper AL-WAFD, the United States has drawn up a secret plan of a new aggression against Libya. "Incessant terrorist acts against Americans and Britons" are the pretext for it.

In accordance with that plan, the newspaper points out, the United States and its West European allies intend to impose a tough blockade of the Libyan coast, by mining all approaches to ports of that country within its continental shelf. In the Pentagon's opinion, that "bloodless operation" is bound to hit an irreparable strike on the economy of the Libyan Jamahiriyah and impel Libya to capitulation.

Now that aggression being [as received] prepared, the newspaper stresses. NATO naval exercises are being held off Italy's shores, testing mine planting by submarines and naval aviation.

INTERCEPTED LIBYAN CABLES 'DUBIOUS' STORY

LD011007 Moscow TASS in English 0935 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Moscow May 1 TASS -- The explosion in the West Berlin discotheque, where one American soldier was killed, is mentioned as the direct pretext for the bombing of Libyan towns, writes the newspaper KRASNAYA ZVEZDA today.

The United States announced that it has "concrete proofs" of Libya's involvement in that terroristic action. The hullabaloo around that is continuing unabated, and even mounting. But facts are not to be found. Dubious is the story of intercepted radiograms which allegedly contained "a Libyan connection". The newspaper refers to a statement made to the STERN magazine by an expert of the FRG Federal Intelligence Service, saying that in the ciphered radiograms the "texts do not provide any evidence of Libya's connection with the bomb explosion in West Berlin."

The head of the West Berlin security agency noted that criminalists are conducting an investigation in all possible areas. Vying groups of drug traffickers and even owners of rival discotheques could have had motives for that terroristic action, the FRG press notes.

And in the United States they decided right away that it is Libya which is "responsible" and Libya alone. Why? It is because they are eager to "punish" the sovereign country which is unwilling to bow to the U.S. diktat, to "teach it a lesson" KRASNAYA ZVEZDA stresses in conclusion. And overseas they are now trying to raise a solid screen of lies and slander in order to camouflage the unseemly venture.

U.S. SR-71 'INTRUDES' INTO DPRK AIRSPACE

LD011241 Moscow TASS in English 1220 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Pyongyang May 1 TASS -- As is reported by the CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY OF KOREA, an American SR-71 war plane today intruded into the airspace over the territorial waters of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, east of Kosong. In the course of such flights American pilots make reconnaisance of northern areas of the Republic, and this leads to a heightening of tension in the Korean peninsula. This also shows that the United States would not abandon its attempts to destabilise the situation in that area. 10 such violations were registered in the second half of April alone, the news agency points out.

COMMENTATORS VIEW ISSUES AT UPCOMING TOKYO SUMMIT

U.S. to Emphasize Anti-Terrorism

LD301455 Moscow TASS in English 1416 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 30 TASS -- Follows commentary by Askold Biryukov, a TASS political news analyst:

The last preparations are being completed in Tokyo for the summit meeting of the seven major capitalist states. The draft documents of the Tokyo summit have already been prepared, yet far from crossing the "T"'s and dotting the "I"'s, they rather give rise to questions to which the participants in the meeting will hardly be able to find satisfactory answers.

Washington makes it clear that in Tokyo it in the first place intends to set up a certain coalition of the imperialist states spearheaded against Libya and the other developing states objectionable to the USA under the signboard of "combatting terrorism". Japan, the host-country of the meeting, had to reckon with the will of its "senior partner" in the name of "ensuring success".

Some other participants preferred to abstain in advance from binding themselves with consent to participation in that "anti-terrorist" coalition, which, could under some circumstances, automatically draw them into possible American adventures. Yet this did not prevent the ABC television company from saying that before the USA launched a strike against Libya, the meeting was seen above all as an economic conference. Now the economic conference is turning into a meeting on terrorism.

There is no denying that terrorism deserves condemnation and should be eradicated in all of its forms -- both individual acts of terrorism, and especially, at the state level, when a great power, which is, in addition a member of the U.N. Security Council, is using methods of terrorism against another state. Without trying to predict the outcome of the debate of that issue in Tokyo, it can be said that any participation of the allies of the USA in the blocs in this kind of actions will be evaluated worldwide as their complicity in the policy of state-sponsored terrorism.

A "Draft Economic Declaration" is reported to have been prepared in Tokyo. It makes no mention of the holding in September this year of a "new round" of multilateral talks within the GATT framework, contrary to the wish of Washington and Tokyo, which are out to use that round as a cover from charges of "unfair trade policy". Meanwhile, President Reagan intends to call upon the participants in the meeting that they take measures to reduce all restrictions on trade in farm produce, in connection with which the London TIMES predicts a fresh outbreak of "trade war" between the USA and the Common Market.

In that document, Tokyo, which suffers from a sharp increase recently in the yen rate as against the dollar, declares for stabilising the capitalist world's monetary system. The Nakasone government is reported to be wishing to include in the declaration condemnation of "excessively sharp fluctuations of foreign currency rates". Yet neither the USA, nor Western Europe suffering from a deficit in trade with Japan are sympathetic with such a statement of the matter. Therefore, the Tokyo SHIMBUN draws the conclusion that the possibility of collective measures to ward off monetary fluctuations is questionable.

The current meeting will hardly provide an answer to the problems of the developing countries, which suffer from the growing debt.

The so-called "Baker plan", which is advertised by Washington as a "declaration of independence of the 'debtor countries'" and which the USA wishes to press through at the conference, is, as a matter of fact, an attempt to save the system of enrichment of imperialist powers by the exploitation of the developing countries, which is going through an acute crisis, by keeping afloat those, who have found themselves in a particularly difficult position.

Against the background of the nuclear explosions continuing in Nevada state, the implementation of the militaristic programmes forced by Washington, the creation of new types of nuclear munitions and "star wars" weapons it is hard to expect from the participants in the "seven" constructive steps also in the resolution of the most important problems of concern for the whole mankind, above all the problems of nuclear disarmament. Moreover the USA can be expected to raise in Tokyo the question of even more closely gearing its allies to participation in the "star wars" programme, which can only step up the arms race, by spreading it into outer space.

Agreement Seen as Unlikely

OW300621 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1125 GMT 29 Apr 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Eduard Mnatsakonov]

[Text] Already there has been much written and said abroad about the forthcoming 4 to 5 May scheduled meeting of the leaders of the leading countries of the West, which will take place in the Japanese capital, Tokyo. Speaking briefly, many have reached the following two conclusions: First, similar meetings of the so-called big seven, first thought of to discuss economic problems of the bourgeois world, are progressively taking on a political character; and second, imperialist contradictions of the largest countries of the West inevitably prove to be strong and meetings of the leaders of Western nations as a rule end in failure.

Regarding the forthcoming meeting, the Japanese press has already begun writing about the drafts of the final documents. Apparently, there will be three such documents. It is said that the participants will adopt a political declaration, an economic declaration, and an antiterrorist declaration.

As usual, the most painful question for the West will be discussed: the so-called trilateral cooperation among Japan, the United States, and Western Europe.

But on the eve of this meeting, a monetary and trade war once again flared up between Japan and the United States. The value of the dollar in relation to the Japanese yen has fallen even lower, which is causing serious damage to the Japanese economy. On the Tokyo currency exchange market in the past few days passions have been running high. Japanese businessmen are taking millions in losses. Meanwhile, on the other side of the ocean in the United States, indignation at the increase in Japanese imported goods, especially Japanese cars, is being heard more loudly. This is being clearly shown by many diagrams, which the foreign press now often uses. Thus, taking all into consideration, trilateral agreement is not likely to be a result.

Summit To Include 'Altercations'

LD301452 Moscow TASS in English 1410 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Tokyo April 30 TASS -- TASS correspondent Viktor Zatsepin reports: The summit of the "seven" -- the USA, Britain, France, the FRG, Italy, Japan and Canada -- to open here on May 4 will entail altercations and mutual offences.

Tokyo will have to listen for an unpteenth time to accusations of its partners of "conducting expansionist trade policy" and employing "forbidden methods" on world markets. Last year the deficit of the common market countries in their trade with Japan totalled 11 billion dollars and that of the USA -- nearly 50 billion. A public poll held by the newspaper "NIHON KEIZAI" has shown that 80 percent of West German citizens believe that Japan is a "serious economic threat" to them. The same opinion is held by over 70 per cent of U.S. citizens and 63 -- in Britain.

Tokyo has prepared for the summit a "special programme" providing for a change in the structure of the Japanese economy with a view to cutting exports and expanding home consumption. This will settle the problem at long last, claims Prime Minister Nakasone.

Such assurances by the Japanese Government, newspapers write, were also given in the past when unpleasant explanations with trading partners were in store. However, they brought about every time an increase in the deficit instead of promised reductions. According to "TOKYO SHIMBUN", the situation will not chane radically this time either. Nevertheless, the USA, burdened with a huge trade deficit, sees one of its main tasks at the summit in making its competitors contain their invasion on the U.S. market and at the same time in weakening the protectionist measures of Japan and West European countries against U.S. goods.

FOREIGN TRADE MINISTRY ASSESSES TIES WITH JAPAN

LD302028 Moscow TASS in English 1350 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 30 TASS -- the tenth joint conference of the Soviet-Japanese and Japanese-Soviet committees on economic cooperation held here recently is a new step on the way towards the consolidation of the positive changes that have taken shape in Soviet-Japanese trade ane economic relations. This is the opinion of Soviet business circles, a TASS correspondent has been told at the USSR Ministry of Foreign Trade.

A constructive and frank exchange of views took place at the conference on a wide range of questions connected with the state and promising directions of bilateral mutually advantageous trade and economic relations.

The sides reiterated their readiness to spare no effort for deepening and expanding these relations. The agreement on trade turnover and payments between the USSR and Japan for 1986-1990 signed in Tokyo in January 1986, as well as the first intergovernmental consultations on trade and economic problems on the level of deputy ministers of the two countries held in Moscow last March promoted to a considerable extend the activization of business relations.

The present conference of representatives of business circles deemed it expedient to expand the quest for new progressive spheres and forms of bilateral cooperation, including production cooperation, modernization and restructuring of mills and factories in various industries, scientific and technological exchange.

The Soviet side suggested that negotiations be held soon on concluding an intergovernmental agreement on proneiples of economic cooperation and on the drawing up of its long-term program. It will promote a more definite determination of further prospects of developing business relations.

Touching upon the problem of the lack of balance in the bilateral trade, the sides pointed out the need for increasing the export to Japan of goods with a greater degree of manufacturing, including machines and equipment which would be on a par with world standards, as well as of high-quality semi-finished products.

The Soviet side informed the Japanese businessmen of the emergence of additional possibilities of expanding trade and economic relations in connection with the beginning of the implementation of provisions of the "guidelines for economic and social development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and for the period ending in 2000."

During the meeting of members of the Japanese delegation with Nikolay Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and heads of a number of ministries and organizations the sides pointed out the important role that can and should be played by business ties in trade and economy for improving mutual understanding and trust between the USSR and Japan, provided both sides realize that there should be no place for any discrimination of limitations in those relations.

In the course of the work of the conference the Soviet side also emphasized that if both sides displayed a realistic approach and goodwill, if they acted in accordance with the principles of equality and mutual benefit, there existed all the possibilities for the successful development of bilateral business relations on a qualitatively new level, on a stable and long-term basis.

JAPAN CONDEMNED FOR DUMPING RADIOACTIVE WASTE

LD302256 Moscow TASS in English 1314 GMT 30 Apr 86

[text] Tokyo April 30 TASS -- The Japanese Government's intention to dump radioactive waste in the Pacific Ocean sparks off alarm among the South Pacific states. "To poison the ocean means to poison us, since the ocean is the sole source of the means of subsistence for the residents of the Republic of Kiribati", a representative of this small island state said in London.

A treaty on establishing a nuclear-free zone in the South Pacific, which was supported by the entire progressive world public, includes, apart from "closing" this part of the world for nuclear wapons, demands for a halt to all nuclear tests in the region also another aspect - a ban on the disposal of radioactive waste there. Nuclear waste dumping poses by no means a lesser threat to the people in that part of the world.

According to figures released by KYODO TSUSHIN news agency, over half a million 200-litre containers with radioactive substance were stored in Japan a year ago. In line with capitalism's "logic", the Nakasone administration decided to get rid of them by...disposing... in foreign waters.

The Japanese Government contends that this does not harbour any hazards. But K. Tengeluk, a representative of the Republic of Palau, objected to it at the international conference for banning nuclear weapons in Tokyo. "If the Japanese Government is sure that this waste is not hazardous, let it dump it in the Tokyo Bay". This was supported by Michael Samore, former prime minister of Papua and New Guinea who said that the South Pacific states did not want Japan to turn the waters surrounding them into a nuclear disposal site.

[Text] H. Mangal, DRA ambassador to the Soviet Union, held a reception 25 April on the 8th anniversary of the April Revolution in Afghanistan.

DRA REVOLUTIONARY GAINS HAILED ON 8TH ANNIVERSARY

PM010835 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 26 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[Correspondent Major A. Oliynik dispatch: "Firm Tread"]

[Excerpts] Kabul -- Afghanistan's revolutionary people are looking confidently to the future. These days, celebrating the 8th anniversary of the victory of the April Revolution, they are particularly proud of the successes they have achieved despite the intrigues of internal and external reaction.

The past year was marked by major events in the DRA's life, attesting once more to the party's increased unity, the enhancement of its vanguard role among the broad masses, and the broadening of the social base of the April Revolution. The supreme organ of state power -- the Revolutionary Council -- incorporated an additional 79 people. More than 70 percent of those elected are nonparty people. The composition of the government has also been significantly expanded.

For the first time in the country's history free democratic elections are being held to local government organs -- the jirgas (councils). The elections are already over in the majority of districts in Kabul, Badakhshan, Nangarhar, Balkh, and other provinces and in their administrative centers. Elections will begin very soon in other parts of the country.

Significant successes have been achieved in implementing socioeconomic transformations. The measures taken by the party and the government made it possible not only to fulfill but also to overfulfill the country's economic and social development plan in 1985. Special attention was devoted to agriculture and the implementation of land and water reform. More than 10,000 families received landholdings. Great heights have also been scaled in developing the Republic's economy. Production of the 16 main types of output, including gas and cement, has increased, and there has been an increase in electricity generation. More than 10 enterprises have been constructed and commissioned. Positive changes have occurred in transport, trade,and health care. Work is being done to improve financial, tax, credit, and customs policy, taking into account the interests of the private sector, which plays an important role in the country's economy.

With the help of loyal and dependable friends the industrious people of Afghanistan would undoubtedly have been able to achieve more. But the flames of the undeclared war unleashed by counterrevolution with the active support of imperialist forces headed by the United States continue to blaze in the country. The damage done to the DRA economy is estimated at almost 36 billion afhanis. Bandits have destroyed or burned 2,000 schools, 200 hospitals and medical centers, and more than 250 mosques.

These criminal acts are the handiwork of mercenaries for U.S. dollars -- the dushmans. Washington is not stingy. Overt aggression against the DRA is financed on the false pretext of giving "aid to Afghan refugees." In the current fiscal year alone this "aid" will reach $470 million. In all, the United States has spent more than $1.2 billion on waging the undeclared war against the DRA.

The April Revolution has proved its irreversibility despite the armed provocations, the fierce propaganda campaign, and the solid financial aid for the dushmans. Thanks to the assistance of the limited contingent of Soviet forces, the combat might of the Afghan Army, which, as was pointed out at a recent PDPA Central Committee plenum, is the decisive force in achieving victory over counterrevolution, is strengthening day by day.

At the DRA Armed Forces General Staff I was told that crushing defeats were inflicted on the bandits last year in Qandahar, Laghman, Herat, and Nangarhar Provinces. In all, approximately 200 gangs, embracing more than 10,000 people, were destroyed, and tens of thousands of units of arms and ammunition and dozens of caravans bringing weapons from Pakistan were captured.

A large rally devoted to the successful completion of the Afghan Army's combat operations in the Khowst district was held in Kabul 25 April. It was emphasized at the rally that Afghan servicemen displayed mass heroism, courage, and increased military skill in the fighting, which lasted several weeks. The rally participants expressed gratitude to the servicemen of the limited contingent of Soviet forces who gave the Afghan Army assistance in routing the enemy.

...Democratic Afghanistan is developing in strenuous labor and in stubborn combat. With weapons in their hands Afghan Army servicemen and all the country's working people are defending the April Revolution's gains.

CAPTURE OF AFGHAN REBEL 'CITADELS' REPORTED

LD221546 Moscow TASS in English 1513 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Kabul April 22 TASS -- TASS correspondent Oleg Kuzmin reports:

"Jawara" means "a hole" in translation from the Pashto. There is an area of that name in Khowst district (Afghanistan's Paktia Province).

It was chosen by Afghan counter-revolutionaries to build a big base. Jawara, complete with tens of arms depots, warehouses packed with foods, fortified positions in the mountains was described by the Western patrons of counter-revolution as an "unassailable citadel of the freedom fighters."

A group of Soviet and Afghan journalists visited the "citadel" at the invitation of the command of the DRA Armed Forces when it was completely cleared of counter-revolutionaries. Jawara base served for many years chiefly for the supply of weapons and ammunition to gangs operating in Paktia, Paktika, Kabul (Panjshir District), Zabol and other provinces. Afghan counterrevolutionary chiefs entrenched themselves there and there were 12 main depots. That place is at a distance of only three kilometres from the Pakistani border, from where everything -- including weapons and building materials -- were supplied for the counter-revolutionaries.

The Afghan Army first knocked the counter-revolutionaries out of the central part of Tani District, pressed them back into the mountains and then destroyed Jawara base.

The routing of Jawara base, a TASS correspondent was told by General Abdul Gafur, who was in command of the operation, was a great event in the life of Khowst district. As it is precisely from there that counter-revolutionaries penetrated villages and killed civilians. Now the population can live a tranquil life -- the Afghan Army will no longer permit violating its tranquility and peaceful labour. The weapons captured from the bandits, he continued, show who patronizes the counterrevolution, who has a stake in kindling the undeclared war. The "Made in the USA," "Made in Britain," "Made in the FRG" and "Made in China" trade-marks can be seen at a makeshift exhibitionof trophies. "Surface-to-air" missiles, including British-made, anti-aircraft guns, machine-guns, grenade launchers, mines, rifles and submachineguns, boxes with shells and cartridges are just some of the weapons abandoned or surrendered by the counter-revolutionaries.

When the journalists were about to return to Kabul, General Gafur again approached them and said that the Afghan troops had captured a large part of another bandit base -- Ilmarkhawzai, lying at a distance of ten kilometres from Jawara. After the routing of Ilmarkhawzai base, the Afghan general said, Tani District will be completely freed from the counter-revolutionaries. The revolutionary power is supported by the people, therefore, nobody can set up bandit citadels on the Afghan soil. The example of Jawara is vivid evidence of that.

SOVIET SERVICEMEN'S RETURN FROM DRA DESCRIBED

PM281552 [Editorial Report] Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 25 April 1986 Second Edition devotes approximately one-fourth of its page 4 to a feature entitled "Homecoming." The feature consists of a Kabul telephone dispatch by the newspaper's correspondent Major A. Oliynik, a Tashkent dispatch by its correspondent Colonel G. Ivanov, and three photographs credited to its special correspondent Major V. Khabarov.

Maj Oliynik's Kabul dispatch, entitled "'USSR, Lenin -- Thank You!'" reads as follows: "Music played by a military band resounded above the airfield's scorching concrete landing strip. Two formations marched toward each other in step with the music. One of them contained young reinforcements that had arrived to join the Limited Contingent of Soviet Troops in Afghanistan, the other -- servicemen who have been transferred to the reserve.

"The formations drew level. As if ordered, the young soldiers turned their heads to the left. They looked with admiration at their elder comrades, staring into their courageous faces, burned by the sun and the mountain 'Afghan' wind,and listening to the soft ringing of medals on their chests."

"International duty.... I have had numerous occasions to hear local inhabitants speak about our soldiers' unbending nature and their open and noble hearts.

"I am personally acquainted with many of those who have displayed military prowess on the friendly country's soil. I have heard others being praised by the peasants. This is what I learned about Sergeant Vladimir Yemelyanov from the inhabitants of a village near Rukhe. In the time that he served there he defused more than 40 mines made in the United States, Britain, or Italy and inspected dozens of kilometers of mountain roads and caravan tracks.

"On one occasion Yemelyanov, together with Afghan sappers, was covering the movement of an Afghan and a Soviet subunit in the mountains. Dushmans suddenly opened fire from an ambush position. Two Afghan comrades fell, hit by the fusillade. Yemelyanov carried the wounded away from the battlefield under fire. He gave them emergency medical treatment. This feat resulted in the sergeant being awarded the Order of the Red Star and the Afghan 'Military Prowess' medal.

"Only very recently Senior Sgt Mikhail Muzhachuk, together with Afghan brothers-in-arms, was fighting to expel dushmans from their base. The group commanded by Sr Sgt Muzbachuk, flown in by helicopter, traversed minefields and mountain obstacles and entrenched itself on a dominant hill. There was a brief rest halt after the dushmans were routed. The paratroopers, having spent several days and nights in the mountains, immediately fell asleep right on the hot rocks. Mikhail, seated in the shade of a boulder, started reading a letter he had received the previous day from his wife Olya and his daughter Yulya in his native Khmelnitskiy. That was where we met. And suddenly, an unexpected encounter at the airport. Muzhachuk was wearing the Order of the Red Star and the medal 'For Valor.'

"'Of course I want to go home, back to the native land,' Mikhail said. 'My hands are yearning for some work. But the years I have spent in Afghanistan will always be part of me. We will always remain loyal to the combat for brotherhood and friendship.'

"This was repeated almost word for word by three friends, motor riflemen wearing warrant officers' shoulder boards. My attention focused on them because they kept together all the time, marching next to each other in formation. This was no accident. The Russian, WO Andrey Alferov, the Uzbek, WO Bakhodir Abylkasimov, and the Kazakh, WO Korikban Beysenbayev, first met each other 2 years ago, while studying in the training subunit. Afterwards they went to Afghanistan together, in the same company. They soon became deputy squad commanders. Together they marched dozens of kilometers along mountain roads, slept under the same waterproof cape, and helped one another out at difficult times.

"'The paramount task for us all now is to work and study with the same lofty sense of responsibility with which we performed our international duty,' WO Alferov said. And his comrades seconded him unanimously.

"Soldiers from the group of young reinforcements listened to our conversation with interest. Lithuanian Junior Sgts Ramunas Zhagaras and Alvidas Alyakanavichus were pleased to meet their compatriot Private Gitis Tamulyavichus from Panevezhis, decorated with the medal 'For Combat Service.'

"The TU-154 aircraft slowly rolled toward the runway. Its passenger will land in Tashkent 2 hours later. Success to you, soldiers-internationalists! 'USSR, Lenin -- Thank You!', the Afghan friends say in Russian."

Col Ivanov's Tashkent dispatch is entitled "'We Will Work in a Shock and Militant Fashion'" and reads as follows: "The airfield where the aircraft from Afghanistan was due to land in a few minutes' time was joyfully anticipating the forthcoming meeting with servicemen transferred to the reserve. The mood and feelings of the welcoming parties were expressed by the prominently displayed banner: 'The motherland greets its sons, soldiers-internationalists.' Party and Soviet workers, representatives of public organizations, workers, students, war veterans, officers, military school students, young people due to be called up, and young pioneers had assembled at the airport.

"I was speaking with war veteran Mikhail Petrovich Shaturskiy. He fought the Hitlerites in Belorussia and the Caucasus, and his military prowess has been rewarded by the Orders of the Patriotic War 1st Class and of the Red Star.

"'Our young people have taken over from us and are continuing the glorious traditions of internationalism,' Mikhail Petrovich said. 'It is gratifying that the lads displayed great military skill and staunch ideological, moral, psychological, and physical tempering. Now they have to energetically carry further the baton of the military-patriotic education of youth.'

"The airliner landed and rolled to the stand. The servicemen climbed down the ramp to step on the native soil. They were joyfully welcomed by those assembled. The faces were lit by smiles and joyfully shining eyes. Young girls in bright national dress greeted the servicemen transferred to the reserve with bread and salt, like most welcome guests.

"Officers, representatives of working people and public organizations, and servicemen of the reserve addressed the festive meeting which took place right at the airport.

"'We, the frontline soldiers' grandchildren, must augment our Army's glorious traditions,' Captain Vladimir Sobko said. 'Service in Afghanistan offers much in this respect. It is important to transmit the accumulated experience to those who are going to replace us, who are preparing to serve in the Army. The servicemen of the reserve are awaited by children in adolescent's clubs and in military-technical and sports study circles. It is necessary to go to the young people....'

"Particular attention was paid to Capt Sobko's words. It is only a few months ago that he completed his service in Afghanistan. He was sent there at his own request, replacing his father, now Colonel of the Reserve Mikhail Maksimovich Subko. It has become their family tradition to serve in particularly difficult and responsible sectors. This tradition was inaugurated by Vladimir's grandfather Maksim Ilich Subko, former junior sergeant and commander of a sapper unit, awarded the title Hero of the Soviet Union at the crossing of the Dnieper. He died in May 1944.

"Hero of the Soviet Union Abdusattar Ishankulov, former frontline airman, spoke.

"'The servicemen of the reserve earn fame as reliable people in any labor collective,' Ishankulov said. 'They are usually assigned the most complex and urgent work. And they never let anyone down. Mutual assistance and comradeship play quite a considerable role in this. These moral qualities are particularly strongly developed among servicemen who have spent time in Afghanistan. We know that you will become the nucleus of any labor collective. You can tackle the gigantic tasks being set before us on the labor front by the party.'

"The participants in the meeting listened with great attention to the speech by Sr Sgt Yuriy Zavotin, who had only just arrived from Afghanistan."

"'Having duly fulfilled our military duty, we will now actively join in creative labor,' he said. 'The schooling in Afghanistan will help us in the creative labor to implement the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. We will work in a shock, militant fashion.'"

The feature is completed by the following photographs: A 3-inch by 4-inch photograph showing a serviceman with an elderly woman and two young men against the tail-end of an aircraft in the background, captioned "Sr Sgt Yakub Abdurakhmanov was met at the airport by his mother Mikhri and his brothers Turdali and Sharaf"; a 3-inch by 2-inch photograph showing a serviceman being embraced by an elderly man, captioned "Father and son, Madzhit Mirzoyevich Ziyayev and his son Sr Sgt Mamasul Ziyayev"; and a 3-inch by 4-inch photograph showing a group of servicemen with an Aeroflot aircraft in the background, captioned "Back home."

DRA PROTESTS PAKISTANI 'ACTS OF AGGRESSION'

LD252033 Moscow TASS in English 1846 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 25 TASS -- Afghanistan's Permanent Mission to the U.N. has addressed a note to the U.N. secretary general, pointing to the continuing acts of aggression by Pakistan against Afghanistan.

Thus, in particular, on April 14, a Pakistani Air Force plane made a bombing raid on Berj-Kalai area, destroying several villages, killing four and injuring 50 peaceful civilians. The Government of Afghanistan demands that the Pakistani authorities put an end their provocative and inhuman actions, the note said.

Denies Own Aggression

LD291318 Moscow TASS in English 1133 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Kabul April 29 TASS -- A spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Afghanistan has told the charge d'affaires ad interim of Pakistan in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan that after a thorough examination the Afghan side found groundless the allegations of Pakistan about some acts of aggression of the Afghan Armed Forces against a number of Pakistani populated localities in the border area. He demanded that the spreading of false rumours heightening tension on the border between the two countries be stopped at once.

KAPITSA SAYS MARCOS PLANNED BAN ON U.S. NUCLEAR WEAPONS

HK301349 Quezon City BUSINESS DAY in English 30 Apr 86 p 16

[By Abrino Aydinan]

[Text] While U.S. President Ronald Reagan is meeting ASEAN leaders in Bali for talks that will likely touch on Pacific cooperation, a ranking Soviet Union official yesterday called here for the Soviet version of a Pacific alliance.

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Michael Kapitsa described as a plan to put up a "mini-NATO" any Pacific Basin Community concept, which the U.S., Japan, Australia, ASEAN and other American allies support. Kapitsa referred to the existing Atlantic military alliance of the U.S. and Western Europe. Without naming the U.S., he also accused it of wanting to "turn the Pacific into an internal lake."

Kapitsa said the Soviet Union proposed last April 23 an Asian and Pacific Forum which will tackle various concerns of the countries of the region, including security. He said this would be similar to the European Conference on Security. He named a number of Soviet aligned governments, as well as India, as having already expressed support for the proposed regional organization.

Kapitsa said President Corazon C. Aquino whom he met Monday promised to study the Soviet proposal.

"The world has witnessed more than once how the screen of economic assistance and economic cooperation, the objective processes of internationalization and integration of the world economy have been used to further and substantiate imperialist plans for the establishment of military groupings, treaties on joint defense and so forth," Kapitsa said.

Kapitsa made a surprising revelation that ousted president Marcos assured the Soviet Union that the Philippines would not allow the Americans to keep nuclear weapons in their bases here.

"We have guarantees from the former government that it will not allow the Americans to have stores of nuclear weaponry at these bases," the Soviet official said.

Evidently referring to the new administration of President Aquino, Kapitsa said "we hope the government of the Philippines will look after that." The introduction of nuclear weapons into the U.S. bases "will create a new situation," he added.

BUSINESS DAY asked Kapitsa whether or not the Soviet Union was prepared to undertake an initiative to help resolve the Kampuchean conflict which is top in the ASEAN agenda. He replied that the Soviet Union was supporting an offer from the Heng Samrin regime installed by Soviet ally Vietnam for a meeting with the two noncommunist anti-Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea. The meeting would exclude the force of the former Kampuchean government overthrown by the Vietnamese.

The Soviet ambassador described Kapitsa's visit as official.

ZVESTIYA VIEWS 'PERIOD OF EXPECTATION' IN PHILIPPINES

PM291546 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 26 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Own correspondent I. Kovalev dispatch: "Philippines: Awaiting Changes"]

[Text] Manila -- People from very different social strata stand side by side in a long line to enter the president's Malacanang Palace. They are all motivated by curiosity. The palace, which until last February served as the residence of President Ferdinand Marcos, has been turned into a museum.

In other districts of the capital -- in the stylish business quarters of Makati, in the narrow streets of the working class district of Tondo, in the port, and in Quezon City, where ministries, television stations, and the University of the Philippines are situated -- nothing reminds you of the stormy events of February, when, as a result of the elections and with the support of the Army command and the leaders of the Catholic Church, opposition groups headed by Corazon Aquino took power and F. Marcos was forced to leave the country.

The present situation in the Philippines may be called a period of expectation. Many people are hoping for permanent work (the country now has approximately 2 million people completely out of work), and the dream of agricultural laborers and tenant farmers is to have their own plot of land and independence from landlords.

The situation is complicated by a very acute economic crisis. The foreign debt is in excess of $26 billion. The slump in economic activity and the flow of capital out of the country continued for 3 years in succession, and there was a sharp fall in exports. Chaos reigns in the financial affairs of ministries and departments. In the first quarter of this year the state budget deficit totaled $450 million. It is no coincidence that President C. Aquino told U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger when he came to the Philippines that the chief thing the country needs now is not military but economic aid. However, as the newspaper MALAYA writes, despite all the political curtsies by the United States, Japan, and West European countries in the direction of the new Philippine Government, the country's economic troubles cannot "move to pity" international banks and multinational corporations.

During the very first days of its existence Corazon Aquino's government announced a policy of "national reconciliation." All organs of power are continuing to be purged of the old regime's henchmen, certain industrial and trade monopolies which enjoyed the Marcos family's patronage are being liquidated, and the involvement of persons close to the previous government in financial machinations is being investigated.

At the same time members of parliament, which was dissolved by one of the new president's first decrees (the majority of its deputies are from the former ruling "New Society Movement" party), were permitted to meet for a "rebel session," declare themselves the acting elected organ, and adopt a number of resolutions. The police were instructed not to use force against the supporters of F. Marcos who gathered for thousands-strong "loyalist" demonstrations in the Philippine capital. The central power is also seeking to avoid bloodshed in the province [singular as published], where it is removing governors, mayors, and other municipal figures elected from the New Society Movement party and replacing them with its own representatives. These reshuffles are meeting with strong opposition locally and also creating friction in the ruling coalition, since each of the groups that comprise it (the Philippine Democratic Party-Laban and the Unido group) is seeking to put its own people in power in the provinces and the municipalities.

Questions of relations with the insurgent movement in the province have not yet been resolved. Its leaders declare that the ending of combat operations depends on the new authorities fulfilling all their election pledges and, in particular, dismissing from the Army those persons who cooperated with Marcos. The rebels demand, in particular, the implementation of socioeconomic reforms to benefit the poorest sections of the population.

By opening a museum in the palace which served as the residence for many heads of state, the new president wants to show that she is taking a new course unconnected with the policy pursued by Marcos. However, only the specific actions of C. Aquino's government will show whether it will succeed in solving the very complex problems left over from 20 years of dictatorial rule.

AUSTRALIAN PEACE COMMITTEE ENDORSES SOVIET PROPOSAL

LD291336 Moscow TASS in English 1045 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Canberra April 29 TASS -- William Brown, first vice-president of the Australian Peace Committee, has stated that the Soviet proposals on the convocation of an all-Asian forum and the holding of a separate conference of the Pacific countries for discussing security problems can only be welcomed.

W. Brown pointed out in a TASS interview that the new initiatives could play an important part in the growing struggle for the turning of the whole of the Pacific basin into a zone of peace free from nuclear weapons.

By suggesting the holding of the forum and the conference on security problems, he continued, the Soviet leadership did a great favour to all those who stand for the preservation of peace and the expansion of international cooperation in that area.

According to W. Brown, the Soviet appeals on discussing questions connected with peaceful cooperation, together with proposals on reducing naval activity in the Pacific and on the creation of nuclear-free zones in the Asian-Pacific region will undoubtedly be supported by all the peace-minded forces of Australia.

During his meeting with the Soviet construction delegation which attended the signing of the protocol, Comrade Chea Soth, member of the KPRP Central Committee Political Bureau, vice chairman of the PRK Council of Ministers, and minister of planning, highly valued the Soviet assistance in the construction of a number of economic establishments which are of great significance to the PRK.

FRG'S BUNDESTAG DEBATES SOVIET ARMS INITIATIVES

PM290909 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Own correspondent Yu. Yakhontov report: "Forced Bows and True Support"]

[Text] Bonn, 27 Apr -- At the request of the Green Party, a special debate was held in the FRG Bundestag to discuss the Soviet proposals on disarmament put forth by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in his speech at the 11th SED Congress in Berlin. As is known, the USSR proposes that agreements be reached on a considerable reduction in all components of the ground forces and tactical aircraft of European states, as well as the corresponding forces of the United States and Canada stationed in Europe.

In the course of the special debate a number of speakers, including Foreign Minister H.-D. Genscher, came out against attempts to characterize the new Soviet initiative as a routine propaganda step. H.-D. Genscher noted that the Federal Government is looking seriously at this initiative and that everything possible must be done so as "not to miss the opportunities offered by the onset of a new phase in East-West relations."

N. Gansel, deputy for the Social Democratic Party [SPD], stated that the FRG Government is pursuing a hypocritical policy: When Soviet proposals are of a general nature, he noted, we say they are not sufficiently concrete. When the proposals are concrete, we start looking for tricks. He called on the government "not to allow the detente policy to be retarded and to take a positive step forward at last." E. Bahr, a prominent figure in the same party, stressed that M.S. Gorbachev's proposal opens up "new prospects" and is evidence of the USSR's readiness to conclude an agreement between the countries of the Warsaw Pact and NATO that would make an attack using conventional weapons impossible. A. Borgmann, deputy for the Green Party, gave a generally positive assessment of the Soviet proposals. She expressed the hope that their implementation will lead to disarmament. At the same time, Borgmann severely criticized the position of the FRG Government for following in Washington's wake.

Representatives of the ruling Christian Democratic Union/Christian Social Union [CDU/CSU] bloc, taking account of the fact that the majority of the FRG population regards the new Soviet proposals as positive, were unable to come out openly against them. But alongside the general, cautiously positive assessments put forth by the speakers, there were also attempts to belittle the significance of the Soviet initiative and drown the proposal, as before, in a sea of all kinds of "yes, buts..." Thus, for instance, Defense Minister M. Woerner tried to convince the deputies that the Soviet proposals are supposedly a response to a Western initiative and therefore, there is no need to speak of some kind of Western reaction. W. Wimmer, another representative of that bloc, stated that the USSR's initiative can only be commented on in detail when all the details become known.

The subsequent Bundestag session, which discussed the question of ending nuclear tests, showed in their true light the positions of many deputies from the ruling CDU/CSU bloc. Thus J. Todenhoefer, who is one of the young West German "hawks," stated that there can be no question of an end to nuclear tests and that nuclear weapons are necessary "for the defense of the FRG." Maintaining their combat readiness "requires tests."

Despite the fact that the majority of deputies who spoke in the discussion came out in favor of an immediate end to nuclear tests, the Bundestag voted to reject a resolution to this effect submitted by the SPD, and accepted the view of the ruling CDU/CSU bloc.

Yesterday's events in the Bundestag, despite the forced bows from CDU/CSU representatives in the direction of the new Soviet proposals and the grudging positive assessment of them, demonstrated that it is not this bloc, although it is in power and is the main motive force in government, that reflects the true mood of public opinion in the country. The majority of the FRG people approve the viewpoint of the parliamentary opposition parties -- the SPD and the "Greens" and many figures in the Free Domocratic Party, as well as nonparliamentary political parties and organizations -- the German Communist Party, trade unions, and the antiwar movement, which welcome the Soviet initiatives as an important step along the path to disarmament and the strengthening of peace, above all in Europe.

NUCLEAR RISKS IN UK, FRANCE STRESSED

Sellafield Accident Viewed

LD301923 Moscow TASS in English 1733 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] London April 30 TASS -- In the first three months of the current year alone there were four leaks of radioactive elements from the British Sellafield nuclear processing facility. As a result of criminal negligence of the management 16 workers received an above-normal dose of radiation.

In the past 25 years alarm signals went off on a total of 300 occasions at the facility as a warning of radiation leaks or the dumping of water containing radioactive materials into the Irish Sea. Failure to comply with safety regulations led to the discharge of a large amount of effluent into the Irish Sea in November 1983 resulting in high-level radioactive contamination.

Faced with hard facts, an official spokesman for the British Government was compelled to admit that the existing safety regulations were indeed breached during the discharge of wastes.

At that time the international organization of environmentalists "Greenpeace" asked a civil court to hold an inquiry into the causes of the accident. The opposition in Parliament demanded a debate on the problem of Sellafield. However, the Conservative government refused to discuss the matter. The point is that the facility is producing materials not only for the neees of the nuclear power industry but also for the production of nuclear warheads which, as the Conservatives believe, should not stop for a single minute.

Members of the Environment Select Committee of the House of Commons prepared a report noting that the organization of production processes at the Sellafield plant fell short of safety requirements and that the wastes discharged into the Irish Sea had fouled it to such an extent that it became the most radioactive sea on this planet.

France Disregards Safety

LD302031 Moscow TASS in English 1625 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Paris April 30 TASS -- Safety Engineering rules are not observed at many French plants producing high toxic agents, which constitute hazards to the heald and life of people. Thus, in particular, then serious violations of safety regulations have been registered at the chemical works of the "Vitco Chemical" company in the city of Saint-Peirre-Les-Elbeuf (Seine-Maritime Department).

Employers more often than not disregard the basic safety regulations in their profit drive. Thus, many warehouses, where toxic agents are stored, are built next to residential neighbourhooods. In kognac City (Bouches-du-Rhone Department) such a warehouse was built at a distance of only 200 meters from apartment houses. A pipeline runs across the central part of Toulouse, one of France's major cities, to pump phosgene from one plant to another.

Phosgene, a super-high toxic chemical preparation, was used during the First World War as a toxic agent.

As the "SCIENCE ET VIE" journal points out, the inhabitants of Isere Department were exposed to lethal danger last June, when as a result of a fire in a warehouse of the "Rhone-Poulenc" company, a leakage occurred of hundreds of tons of toxic agents used for the production of herbicides. Rivers within a radius of 150 kilometers were poisoned.

According to press reports, a total of nearly 350 mills and factories in France are a source of a danger of serious industrial accidents. Such plants are particularly numerous in Seine-Maritime, Bouches-du-Rhone, Nord, Pas-de-Calais, Haut Rhin, Bas Rhin, Isere and Gironde Departments. The possibility of preventing accidents has been checked only at 30 such factories. The testing of the safety engineering systems was entrusted to the employers themselves, who according to specialists, are inobjective, in most cases.

FURTHER ON VISIT OF CYPRIOT FOREIGN MINISTER

Reiterates Nonaligned Stand

LD300525 Moscow TASS in English 1842 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 29 TASS -- Cyprus' allegiance to the policy of nonalignment serving as a foundation for the foreign policy course of that country was reaffirmed by Yeoryios Iakovou, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Cyprus, who is on an official visit in the Soviet Union. He spoke at a news conference for Soviet and foreign journalists at the Press Center of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R. today.

Cyprus is striving for goodneighborly relations with all countries and is committed to the principles of the Nonaligned Movement, the minister said.

During the talks in the Soviet Union we have arrived at the conclusion about the identity of the points of view on many international problems, Yeoryios Iakovou said.

He spoke with appreciation of the recent proposals of the U.S.S.R. on the principles of settlement in Cyprus and ways for attaining it. The proposals demanded the withdrawal of all foreign troops from the island, the termination of activities of foreign military bases and installations and formulated a concrete program for resolving the problem by means of constructive negotiations between representatives of the Greek and Turkish communities without intervention fron outside. The Soviet proposals, the minister emphasized, come in line with the position of Cyprus.

The minister supported the idea of holding an international Conference on confidence- and security-building measures in the Mediterranean region.

Talks With Shevardnadze

LD291922 Moscow TASS in English 1812 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 29 TASS -- Talks took place here today between Eduard Shevardnadze, a member of the Politbureau of the CPSU Central Committee and minister of foreign affairs of the USSR, and Yeoryios Iakovou, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Cyprus, who is paying an official visit to the Soviet Union on the invitation of the Soviet Government.

In the course of the talks, which passed in a businesslike and friendly atmosphere that is characteristic of relations between the two countries, the sides examined the condition of and prospects for cooperation in different fields and stressed their mutual desire further to expand it on the basis of equality, mutual benefit and non-intervention in each other's internal affairs.

Having discussed the urgent problems of the world situation, the participants in the talks voiced worry over the aggravation of the international situation and stated that the USSR and the Republic of Cyprus had identical or close positions on major international issues. They noted that the priority task of our time was the limitation and ending of the arms race and the prevention of nuclear war. According to the sides' conviction, joint efforts of all the states regardless of their size or social systems and effective measures are needed to lessen tension in the world and to restore the climate of trust and cooperation among nations.

Eduard Shevardnadze informed his counterpart of the international activites of the Soviet state and drew his attention to the Soviet concept of a non-nuclear world, put forward by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in his statement on January 15, 1986, and the foundations of a comprehensive international security system, approved by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Yeoryios Iakovou spoke highly of the Soviet Union's initiatives aimed at curbing the arms race, promoting disarmament, achieving the total and complete prohibition of nuclear tests and preventing the militarisation of space.

The ministers reiterated their resolve to contribute to the continuation of the common European process initiated in Helsinki and spoke in favour of positive results at the Stockholm Conference and of the convocation of a meeting in Vienna of representatives of states participating in the European Conference on Security and Cooperation in a businesslike and constructive atmosphere.

The Soviet side noted the constructive contribution of non-aligned countries to the normalization of the international situation and the role of Cyprus in the Non-Aligned Movement and its efforts for peace, detente and cooperation.

The sides denounced the U.S. act of aggression against Libya as a factor of the escalation of international tension. In this context they stressed the timeliness and importance of the Soviet proposals on strengthening security in the Mediterranean and on establishing a zone of stable peace and cooperation in that region.

Yeoryios Iakovou informed of the situation in the Cyprus question. Having voiced profound gratitude to the Soviet Government for its support for the just struggle of the people of Cyprus, he noted the importance of the proposals put forward by the Soviet Union last January on the principles of settlement on Cyprus and ways to achieve it, which constitute a constructive basis for the collective efforts of all the interested parties towards a comprehensive and viable settlement on the island.

Eduard Shevardnadze stated that the Soviet Union was firmly and consistently standing for the independence, unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus, for its status of a non-aligned state, and for the truly lasting and fair settlement of the problem of Cyprus by peaceful political means, though negotiations, without any outside intervention and with proper respect for the lawful interests of both communities of Cyprus. The convocation of a representative U.N.-sponsored international conference on Cyprus would help resolve such aspects of the problem as the establishment of a system of effective international guarantees, the withdrawal of all foreign troops from the island and the dismantling of foreign military bases and facilities.

It was stated that the USSR and the Republic of Cyprus supported the mission of "good offices" conducted by the U.N. secretary general under a mandate from the U.N. Security Council with a view to resuming inter-communal dialogue and breaking the deadlock over settlement on Cyprus.

Both sides noted the usefulness of the talks between them for strengthening friendship and extending cooperation between the Soviet Union and the Republic of Cyprus.

Yeoryios Iakovou extended to Eduard Shevardnadze an invitation on behalf of the Government of Cyprus to pay an official visit to the Republic of Cyprus. The invitation was accepted with gratitude.

On the same day Yeoryios Iakovou visited the Lenin Mausoleum and laid a wreath. A wreath was also laid at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier by the Kremlin Wall.

Yeoryios Iakovou gave a press conference for Soviet and foreign journalists.

In the afternoon Yeoryios Iakovou and wife left Moscow for Tbilisi. Yeoryios Iakovou was accompanied to Tbilisi by S.T. Astavin, the Soviet Union's ambassador to the Republic of Cyprus, and Mikhail Serifis, the ambassador of the Republic of Cyprus to the USSR.

Shevardnadze, Iakovou Speak

LD291957 Moscow TASS in English 1925 GMT 29 Apr 86

[Quotation marks as received]

[Text] Moscow April 29 TASS -- Eduard Shevardnadze, a member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, minister of foreign affairs of the U.S.S.R., gave a luncheon in honour of Yeoryios Iakovou, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Cyprus, in Moscow today. Eduard Shevardnadze and Yeoryios Iakovou exchanged speeches which were listened to with attention and met with applause.

The Cyprus foreign minister had arrived in Moscow Monday afternoon for an official visit at the invitation of the Soviet Government.

"The first official visit of the minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Cyprus to the Soviet Union," Eduard Shevardnadze said, "enters a new page in the history of inter-state relations between the U.S.S.R. and Cyprus. There isn't a single episode in their history which we and -- I am sure -- you, too, would recall with regret or disappointment. On the contrary, since the moment of the founding of the independent Republic of Cyprus our relations have been filled with friendliness and cordiality and abounded in examples of mutual understanding and cooperation.

We have invariably sided with the people of Cyprus, regarded it as our duty and experienced a sincere need to support its just cause politically and morally. We, in our turn, have been inspired by the consistent line of the Government of Cyprus toward the relaxation of international tenstion, the elimination of the war threat and the inhancement of universal security.

"All this gives rise to the natural feeling of satisfaction. It has grown stronger in the course of detailed and fruitful talks we have had -- the talks distinguished by a friendly and constructive atmosphere that reflects the character of relations between our countries and proples.

"On the personal plane, it is a cause of special satisfaction to me to carry on with our direct contacts, Mr. Minister, that began in Helsinki last August.

"Today's exchange of views has convincingly reaffirmed the old truth that every good past retains its significance only when it produces good results today and promises even better results -- tomorrow. Our conversations have fully met that criterion.

"In our opinion, Soviet-Cyprus relations are on the right path, bilateral ties in all fields have a stable character not given to changes depending on the considerations of the moment. They constitute a convincing, largely a patent, [as received] example of equitable cooperation of states.

"Our cooperation of the international scene is underlined by the realization of the vital need of pooling efforts of all states for the benefit of safeguarding and strengthening peace, ending the arms race on earth and preventing it in space. Both our countries are making practical efforts to head off a nuclear holocaust fraught with the threat of destruction of civilisation on earth.

"We highly value the activities of the Republic of Cyprus in the Nonaligned Movement, its active role in upholding the right of nations to independent and unhindered development in the conditions of peace and freedom.

"The waves of the Mediterranean washing the shoreline of the beautiful land of Cyprus have given it a no small number of beautiful legends. But there have been different currents which have given the islanders real trouble and suffering, not myths. And nothing that happened in the past can compare with the tragedy that has been an unhealing wound in the heart if every Cypriot for more than ten years now. Yes, the partitioning line that cuts across Cyprus is not an old and ugly scar, but an open wound and pain from that wound is felt by Soviet people as well.

"Attempts are being made to present the tragedy of Cyprus as a consequence of domestic troubles. To maintain this is an insult to the people of Cyprus. The barbed wire cutting across your country is there as a result of the policy of imperialism which puts its self-serving interests above the national and state interests of other countries. Unity and territorial integrity of Cyprus, the destiny of its people have been sacrificed to NATO's plans and interests. By preserving the partitioning of the island NATO strategists are trying to seal the unity of their military bloc. The suffering and deprivations of Cyprus people are simply not taken into consideration in that political 'game'.

"As to the Soviet Union, we never interfered and do not interfere in the affairs of Cyprus, and we believe that no one has the right to act differently."

Consistently supporting the independence, unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus, the Soviet Government, as is knowns, last January advanced a concrete settlement plan the realization of which would make it possible, in our conviction, to work toward a truly just solution that will come in line with the interests of all Cyprus people -- the Greeks and the Turks. In the existing situation we regard that a realistic road toward it is in the convocation of a representative international conference on Cyprus within the United Nations framework.

Supporting the efforts of the United Nations and its secretary general on the Cyprus issue we stand for imparting a comprehensive and all-embracing character to the entire process of settlement, for creating a system of effective international guarantees for the Republic of Cyprus, and the respect of all for its status of a nonaligned nation.

The people of Cyprus have too many concerns of their own to have to pay also imperialism's new bills. Each explosion in the region's powder-magazines reports through complications in the island's internal life.

Spring has long come to the Mediterranean but its horizon is overcast by clouds throwing a dark shadow also on Cyprus. Super-modern vampires fly out for nighttime banditry to satiate themselves with the blood of innocent victims. Recent U.S. aggression against Libya smacks too strongly of the medieval right of force not to be countered by the collective force of law.

The Soviet Union's position is that the Mediterranean should become a zone of a stable peace and cooperation. We suggest withdrawing the Soviet and U.S. fleets from the Mediterranean and convening a conference of the Mediterranean and other interested countries.

European and world public opinion has welcomed this initiative.

It blends in with the integral concept for a lasting peace and general security and for completely delivering the earth from nuclear and other weapons of mass annihilation, which was advanced in the January 15 statement by General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev and in the decisions of the 27th Congress of the CPSU. Defining the prerequisites for the materialization of the ideas of creating a comprehensive system of international security, our program proceeds from the fact that in the nuclear-space age it is impossible to solve international problems by force and that there is only one sensible way of saving mankind, and that is the way of responsible political decisions. This applies to global problems. This applies to regional conflicts. This, in our view, has the most immediate relation to the Cyprus problem.

We said during talks with you, Mr Minister, and we declare again now that the Soviet Union, resolutely standing up for the just cause of Cyprus, will press tirelessly for a political solution to the Cyprus problem.

Please convey to the courageous people of Cyprus the Soviet Union's expressions of sympathy and solidarity. I am convinced that during your forthcoming tour of our country you will see a living embodiment of these sentiments.

Yeoryios Iakovou pointed out that the talks which had ended passed in the atmosphere of cordiality and mutual understanding. "We have expected just this, in view of the exceptional level of relations that has been achieved by the Soviet Union and Cyprus".

"Our countries and peoples are in the vanguard of the struggle for the cause of peace since they have lived through severe trials in their history of many centuries and in the recent past, because of wars and encroachments from the outside."

After the tragic events of the Second World War and the ultimate victory over fascism and Nazism for which the peoples of Europe and particularly of the Soviet Union paid a very dear price, the countries, instead of consolidating peace by joint efforts through economic development, social justice and respect for human rights, have been drawn in the confrontation and the arms race."

"Much effort has been exerted to create the climate of detente in Europe devastated by two world wars. In the European Continent we have worked for the sake of the principles by which states should be guided in their relations and which were recorded in the Helsinki Final Act. But as far as Cyprus is concerned these principles had been grossly violated even before the Final Act was signed."

"Cyprus chose the foreign policy course of non-alignment since the moment is achieved independence, and became one of the founders of the Non-Aligned Movement", the minister said. "The ideas of the movement were for Cyprus the answer to the confrontation. The non-aligned countries have all the prerequisites in the world arena and in cooperation with neutral countries on the European Continent for playing, possibly, most significant role in confidence-building."

"Though Cyprus is too small a country to influence the will of great powers, it contributes enthusiastically to the collective effort in the struggle for disarmament and detente in the framework of the United Nations Organization and the Non-Aligned Movement, as well as at the Stockholm Conference and other forums. And it is not bitter over its own sacrifices."

"We highly appreciate the extreme significance the Soviet Government attaches to the highly important problem of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, and we welcome the tireless efforts of your country in that question that were manifested in the recent months in the constructive proposals of the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev. Consonant with them is the advancement by the president of the Republic of the well-known proposal of complete demilitarisation of Cyprus which is a clear evidence of the consistency of the Cyprus Government's line. The implementation of this proposal would radically promote the easing of tension in the Mediterranean and its turning into an area of peace and cooperation."

"Adhering to the fundamental principles of the peaceful coexistence of peoples and invariably implementing these principles in practice, the Soviet Union and Cyprus steadily consolidate their relations and find every more areas for bilateral cooperation."

"We note close cooperation between our countries in the spheres of culture, commerce, art, sports. Bilateral agreements are a characteristic feature of the development of our ties. The number of these agreements increases and the sphere of their application widens."

"We also note the existence of successful cooperation between our delegations in the United Nations Organization, in its specialised organizations and at international conferences."

"It is with particular satisfaction that we welcome the Soviet Government's proposals 'on the principles of the Cyprus settlement and the ways to achieve it'.

The implementation of these principles, will, undoubtedly promote to the maximum the resolution of important international aspects of the Cyprus problem, will make a beneficial effect on the efforts to achieve an equitable, all-embracing and viable settlement of the problem. Highly constructive is also the Soviet Union's proposal to convene a representative international conference in the United Nations framework".

"Nearly 12 years have passed since the invasion and occupation of territory of the Republic of Cyprus by Turkish troops. And now," the ministers [as received] said, "After many years of fruitless talks and concessions on our part these troops still remain in Cyprus and refugees still remain refugees".

In his recent message to the United Nations secretary general about the present stage of his "good offices" mission, the president of the Republic of Cyprus suggested as a more preferable version to convene an international conference under the United Nations auspices which would discuss the first two questions. As an alternative, the president suggested a high-level meeting under the auspices of the United Nations secretary general to discuss all the three questions.

"We urge all the states to promote the implementation of the United Nations Charter and the United Nations resolutions on Cyprus", the minister said. "On this basis we can find an equitable and viable solution of the Cyprus problem which would ensure the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and the status of a non-aligned state of the Republic of Cyprus without any outside interference whatsoever."

"We have no doubt that among these states is the Soviet Union which always supported the Republic of Cyprus at times of trial, being guided by the aforementioned principles".

SUKHIN URGES ARABS TO ESTABLISH RELATIONS WITH USSR

GF301715 Kuwait AL-ANBA' in Arabic 29 Apr 86 p 25

[Interview with Valeriy Sukhin, deputy chief of the Press Department at the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, by AL-ANBA' correspondent Ya'qub Shiha in Moscow -- date not given]

[Excerpts] [Ya'qub Shiha] What are your expectations on the future of the Soviet Union's relations with the Arab Gulf countries, particularly with Kuwait, in light of recent developments?

[Valeriy Sukhin] We believe that relations between the Soviet Union and the Gulf countries should be relations of cooperation and friendship. The Soviet Union has diplomatic relations with Kuwait, the UAE, and Oman. There are still a number of Arab Gulf countries that do not have diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. This is up to those countries, but in general we believe that the nonexistence of cooperation and friendship relations between the Soviet Union and some Arab countries is not normal, since the history of the Soviet Union's relations with the Arab world has proved for centuries, particularly during the past 60 years -- since the establishment of the USSR -- that the Arabs and the Soviet Union have benefitted from the friendship between them, particularly if we consider the current events in and around the Arab world. By this I mean the Zionist-imperialist march that the Arab world is being subjected to. When we see U.S. bombs falling on the heads of Lebanese and Palestinians, we should think and remember that those bombs are not a threat to the Lebanese, Palestinians, and Syrians alone, but they are also a threat to the whole Arab world. In those circumstances in particular, the relations between the Arabs and their real friends should be relations of friendship and cooperation. It is known that we would welcome the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Arab countries that have not yet established diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. But this issue requires efforts and readiness from both sides. in general, we look with optimism on the future of relations between the Soviet Union and Gulf countries.

[Shiha] What is your evaluation of the current PLO situation, and is there any new development requiring Yasir 'Arafat to visit the Soviet Union?

[Sukhin] We have already talked about the Palestinian issue. I do not think it is in our interest or in the interest of the Palestinian movement that we talk more about or concentrate on the current points of weakness. With regard to Yasir 'Arafat, the Soviet Union's doors are open to any Arab struggler from the Palestinian movement.

U.S.-ISRAELI MIDEAST DEALS 'CAPITULATORY FOR ARABS'

LD282144 Moscow TASS in English 1911 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 28 TASS -- TASS Political News Analyst Boris Shabayev writes:

After the U.S. air strikes against Tripoli and Banghazi, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz was asked if that action is conducive to peace. Yes, certainly, he said without batting any eyelid, thus causing amazement even of American journalists.

And now Tel Aviv officials declare in the same vein. In a television address, Israeli Prime Minister Shim'on Peres, deliberately using vague terms, told his compatriots about a certain "breakthrough" that allegedly had taken place in the Middle East peace settlement. According to the ASSOCIATED PRESS, he clearly hinted at the attempts to impose on Jordan a separate deal with Israel, which was the purpose of shuttle missions of U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy between certain Arab capitals and occupied Jerusalem.

What is the essence of the matters discussed by "peacemakers" on both sides of the Atlantic? To what kind of peace in the Middle East do they try to "open the way", using the expression of Shim'on Peres? They seek the kind of "peace" envisaged by the U.S.-Israeli "strategic alliance" which is fully capitulatory for Arabs. Arabs should not dare think about complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied Arab lands. There is, naturally, no mention about the granting to the Arab people of Palestine of the inalienable right to self-determination and creation of its own national state. (It would not be amiss to note that the right of the Arab people of Palestine to self-determination and statehood is envisaged by the U.N. decision.) Instead of that, Arabs are promised "certain local self-government" in the framework of the Israeli military administration. Meanwhile, the policy of state terrorism against Arabs continues.

No matter how Washington and Tel Aviv exert themselves, they fail to find supporters of such a "settlement" among participants in the Arab summit meeting in Fes which worked out in 1982 the plan of achieving an equitable and durable peace in the Middle East. But Washington and Tel Aviv, by all indications, continue having to split the ranks of Arab countries, and resort to their usual gangster methods: to force in Libya and Lebanon, to threats against Syria and South Yemen, to diplomatic demarches against some other Arab countries which supposedly might join in an anti-Arab conspiracy somewhere, sometime, deliberately ignoring the PLO, the sole authentic representative of the Palestinian people, they feverishly look for Quislings among Palestinians who would be prepared to conduct talks with the occupiers behind the back of the PLO.

In the meantime the United States Vice President George Bush declares out loud that the United States will not hesitate to deal another strike at Libya. The Israeli General Staff, on Washington's example and with Washington's approval, prepares an air raid on Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon. And the "strategic allies" sacrilegiously describe all this as the road to peace.

The genuine road to peace in the Middle East lies in an absolutely different plane -- that of political talks in the framework of a special international conference with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the PLO, with the invariable recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab territories occupied in 1967. It is for this road that the Soviet Union declares consistently and its stand is largely consonant with the Arab plan adopted in Fes. There is no other road.

ARAB COMMUNIST PARTIES CONDEMN U.S. 'NEOGLOBALIST POLICY'

LD280930 Moscow TASS in English 0902 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] Damascus April 28 TASS — Communist and workers' parties of the Arab east have denounced the neoglobalist policy of the U.S. Administration in various parts of the world. Their joint statement circulated here pointed out that the bombing of Lebanon, the attack on Libya and threats against Syria and Iran were the manifestation of the policy of state terrorism pursued by the White House.

Communist and workers' parties of the Arab east urged all the national-patriotic and progressive-minded forces of the region to turn down the bandit policy of the U.S. and Israel, their subversive, terroristic actions with regard to Arab countries.

The statement expressed heartfelt support for the Libyan and Syrian peoples and demanded that the U.S. military bases be removed from the Middle East and an economic and political boycott be introduced against Washington.

The authors of the statement expressed their support for the consolidation of Arab solidarity.

The statement called the attention to a special danger coming from the militaristic preparations carried through by Washington today and from the stubborn unwillingness of the U.S. leaders to accept the peaceful proposals of the Soviet Union aimed at the curbing of the arms race, the elimination of death-carrying nuclear arsenals and the firm establishment of the principles of detente and peaceful coexistence in inter-state relations.

PRAVDA WRITER HITS U.S. 'SLANDER' AGAINST USSR, PDRY

PM291601 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 26 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[V. Peresada article: "Slanderers at Work. Provocative Intrigues Around the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen [PDRY]"]

[Text] The United States has sharply stepped up its provocative intrigues against the PDRY recently. One after another, all manner of insinuations about the PDRY have poured out of Washington's "corridors of power." Judging by their content, the United States -- as in the case of Libya -- is disconcerted by the fact that this country pursues an anti-imperialist course and therefore, naturally, relies on cooperation with the Soviet Union.

Thus, U.S. Vice President G. Bush claimed during his recent tour of a number of Arabian Peninsula countries that "the Aden regime does not respect the rights and territorial integrity of its neighbors." This can only be described as a blatant lie. After all, it is well known, and nowhere better than in the Arabian Peninsula, that in its regional policy Democratic Yemen proceeds from the principles of peaceful coexistence and good-neighborliness.

At the same time, this slander is no mere happenstance. Such pronouncements are part and parcel of provocative U.S. actions aimed at undermining confidence in states that have chosen the progressive path of development, of efforts to isolate them and to create for them, in addition to external difficulties, domestic difficulties also. In the final analysis an attempt is underway to undermine these countries' ruling regimes. This is clearly borne out by another remark of the selfsame Bush who said that "Washington is alarmed at the very possibility of the existence of such a regime (i.e. a regime unacceptable to the United States -- V.P.) in South Yemen." These and similar statements reek of a new plot being hatched against the PDRY, the South Yemeni newspaper 14 OCTOBER writes. Ever since left-wing forces took over, U.S. hostility toward our country has not been secret.

Washington either inspired or backed many of the counterrevolutionary intrigues. Now, unconcealed sharp anger has been caused across the ocean by the fact that, despite the hopes of the enemies of the revolution, our people and the Yemen Socialist Party were able to overcome the complex period caused by the tragic events of January this year.

Indeed, the transatlantic strategists' hopes that this will not happen have come to nothing.

And Washington's spite is so great that it is trying at least somehow, at least by means of this selfsame slander, to exploit the past events for subversive purposes, including that of casting suspicion on the PDRY's relations with its friends, and primarily the Soviet Union. It was with this in mind that CIA Director Casey claimed recently that the January events in the PDRY were inspired by...the USSR. You are asking yourselves — Whatever for? In order, it appears, "to gain a bridgehead" in that country. And that is not all. The Washington slanderers go as far in their fabrications as to claim that Soviet servicemen took part in the armed clashes that occurred in January.

All this is nothing but pathetic intrigues whose provocative purpose is all too transparent. Baseless lies — this is how these claims were described in the statement of the official spokesman of the PDRY Foreign Ministry. "Washington is doing its utmost to discredit our country's principled relations with the Soviet Union and to weaken the PDRY's bonds of solidarity with other international progressive forces so as to facilitate the implementation of its plans for establishing a U.S. diktat in the region," the South Yemeni newspaper AL-THAWRI writes. "But these efforts are futile." A wise Arab proverb says: "Rather than lying about others, you should listen to the truth about yourself." And the truth is that it is the United States which has ensnared the Near East region in a network of military bases. The Soviet pilots said to have been "in action" in South Yemen are a myth, but the American pilots who bombed Libya killing women and children were quite real.

FURTHER DETAILS OF SOLOMENTSEV-FRELIMO TALKS

PM301140 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 27 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "In a Comradely Atmosphere"]

[Text] M. S. Solomentsev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the CPSU Central Committee Party Control Committee, had a meeting on 25 April with a Mozambique party delegation headed by M. Matsinhe, member of the Central Committee Politburo and secretary of the Party Control Committee of the Frelimo [Mozambique Liberation Front] Party, which is visiting the USSR.

The participants in the conversation noted the great significance of the recent visit to the USSR by S. Machel, chairman of the Frelimo Party and president of Mozambique, and his meeting with M. S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

M. Matsinhe described the Mozambican people's struggle in defense of their revolutionary gains in the face of the unceasing hostile actions by South Africa and the imperialist forces behind it. He rated highly the peace-loving Leninist policy of the CPSU and the Soviet state.

The delegation was informed about the work begun in the Soviet Union to implement the 27th CPSU Congress' strategic course aimed at accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and strengthening peace.

M. S. Solomentsev and M. Matsinhe exchanged information about the activity of the two parties' control organs. The mutual striving to further strengthen and develop friendly cooperation between the CPSU and the Frelimo Party and between the USSR and Mozambique was confirmed.

M. A. Ponomarev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and deputy chairman of the CPSU Central Committee Party Control Committee, took part in the conversation, which passed in a warm and comradely atmosphere.

BENINESE PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION'S TALKS DESCRIBED

PM290859 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 26 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Unattributed report: "On the Stay in the USSR of a Delegation of the Revolutionary National Assembly of the People's Republic of Benin"]

[Text] A delegation of the Revolutionary National Assembly of the People's Republic of Benin headed by Joseph Deguela, member of the Benin People's Revolutionary Party Central Committee Politburo and second deputy chairman of the Revolutionary National Assembly Standing Committee, paid an official friendly visit to the Soviet Union from 16 through 23 April 1986 at the invitation of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

The delegation visited Moscow and the Georgian SSR and familiarized itself with the Soviet people's life and labor and their achievements in the country's sociopolitical and economic development.

During its stay in Moscow, the delegation was received by V. P. Orlov, deputy chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and had meetings and talks with A. E. Voss, chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Soviet of Nationalities, with members of standing commissions of the USSR Supreme Soviet chambers, and at the Georgian SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium.

During the talks, information was exchanged on the activities of the two countries' supreme organs of state power and on their contribution to strengthening relations of friendship and cooperation between the Soviet and Beninese peoples. Problems of strengthening peace and international security were also discussed.

Deputies of the USSR Supreme Soviet informed the Beninese parliamentarians about the main results of the 27th CPSU Congress, which approved the party's strategic policy of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and advanced a specific program of activity in the name of preserving peace and international security.

The Beninese parliamentarians spoke about the organizational structure and practical activity of Benin's Revolutionary National Assembly and about the decisions of the Second Benin People's Revolutionary Party Congress aimed at building a new society in the country.

The Soviet and Beninese parliamentarians voiced satisfaction with the development of Soviet-Beninese relations, which are based on the principles of strict observance of sovereignty and noninterference in each other's internal affairs, and confirmed their mutual desire to broaden and strengthen mutually advantageous cooperation between the USSR and the People's Republic of Benin in various spheres -- political, economic, and cultural.

On considering the international situation, profound concern was expressed at the serious complication of the political atmosphere in the world, for which agressive imperialist circles are responsible.

The two countries' parliamentarians resolutely condemned American imperialism's aggresive actions against Libya and evaluated them as a flagrant outrage of international law and a gross violation of the UN Charter. They expressed their solidarity with the people of Libya and demanded an immediate end to the criminal policy of state terrorism which the United States is pursuing with regard to that country and which is frought with serious complications for the cause of peace. The two countries' parliamentarians emphasized the importance of the idea formulated by the 27th CPSU Congress of creating a comprehensive international security system and activating the efforts of all states, regardless of their social system, in the interests of strengthening international peace and security and removing the threat of a nuclear catastrophe which would destroy mankind. The deputies of the USSR Supreme Soviet and the Benin Revolutionary National Assembly are convinced that all states -- large, medium, and small -- must make whatever contribution they can to removing the threat of nuclear war, and they advocated multiplying the efforts of all countries' parliaments in this direction. The Beninese delegation evaluated highly the detailed program of specific action set out in M.S. Gorbachev's statement of 15 January this year and aimed at ridding the planet of nuclear and other mass destructive weapons.

The Soviet and Beninese parliamentarians advocated further efforts to eliminate the causes of dangerously explosive situations and hotbeds of tension in various parts of the world and to create and maintain a normal political atmosphere on the African Continent -- which would be promoted to a considerable degree by declaring it a nuclear-free zone. They firmly advocate the just political settlement of conflict situations exclusively by peaceful means, while observing the right of every people to determine their own path of development.

The representatives of the two countries' parliaments voiced concern at the continuing dangerously explosive situation in southern Africa. They resolutely condemned the inhuman racist regime of the Republic of South Africa, which is the source of conflict in the region, demanded the strict observance of the UN resolutions on granting independence to Namibia, and confirmed their support for the South-West African People's Organizaiton as the sole genuine representative of the Namibian people.

The representatives of the two countries' parliaments emphasized the need for joint action with a view to overcoming the economic difficulties being experienced by African countries. They welcomed the convening of a UN General Assembly special session devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa. The Beninese delegation noted the special importance of the USSR Government memorandum "The International Economic Security of States Is an Important Condition for Improving International Economic Relations." The Beninese parliamentarians supported the Soviet proposal to convene a world congress on problems of economic security and the establishment of a new world economic order.

The Soviet parliamentarians made a high appraisal of Benin's foreign policy, its positive role in the OAU and the Nonaligned Movement, its active stance on the question of preventing a nuclear catastrophe, and its principled line in support of the national liberation movement in southern Africa.

The two countries' parliamentarians voiced satisfaction with the positive results of the official friendly visit of the Benin Revolutionary National Assembly delegation to the USSR.

NICARAGUA PROTESTS BORDER 'PROVOCATIONS' FROM HONDURAS

LD301312 Moscow TASS in English 1133 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Managua April 30 TASS -- By TASS correspodnents S. Gorbunov and A. Trushin.

The reactionary military of Honduras has undertaken fresh armed provocations on the border with Nicaragua. According to the Republic's Foreign Ministry, Honduran soldiers fired on border posts of the Sandinista People's Army in the Nicaraguan department of Chinandega on April 27 and 29. A Sandinista Army serviceman was killed in the latter attack.

The Foreign Ministry's note, out here, said that the aggressive acts were inspired by the Reagan administration which was doing its utmost to provoke an armed incident on the Nicaraguan-Honduran border and use it as a pretext for direct armed aggression against the Republic.

The Nicaraguan Defence Ministry announced that two Pirana-type military boats, sailing from the Honduran side, fired mortars and machine-guns at the Republic's coast in the region of Potosi port. CIA mercenaries repeatedly used similar American-made boats for bandit attacks on Nicaragua's coastal regions.

Ending the U.S. aggression against Nicaragua was the indispensable condition for reaching a peaceful settlement in Central America on the basis of the peace act worked out by the Contadora Group, Bayardo Arce, deputy coordinator of the executive commission of the national leadership of the Sandinista National Liberation Front, told a press conference today.

Nicaragua's position, he said, "is that Central America should become a zone free from foreign military presence."

The Sandinista government is prepared to conclude a corresponding agreement with any state in the region.

According to reports from Tegucigalpa, 14 public organizations in Honduras issued a joint statement strongly denouncing the use of that country as a staging area for the criminal aggression against Nicaragua by the United States and its mercenaries. The presence of American troops and Somozist counter-revolutionaries on Honduran territory was a gross violation of the country's national sovereignty and was fraught with military confrontation with Nicaragua, the statement said.

The statement called on the authorities to remove American military bases from Honduran territory and withdraw all American troops and forces of CIA mercenaries from the country.

FURTHER REPORTS ON BOLIVIAN COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

PRAVDA Cites CP's Reyes

PM291023 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Analysis of the Situation: Political Report of the PCB Central Committee"]

[Excerpts] La Paz, 27 Apr -- Simon Reyes, first secretary of the Communist Party of Bolivia (PCB) Central Committee, delivered the Political Report at the extraordinary PCB Congress which is taking place here.

Touching on the situation in Latin America, S. Reyes noted as a characteristic feature the fall of dictatorial regimes and the restoration of democratic freedoms in Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil. He also stressed that the Sandinist revolution in Nicaragua is an example of how even the people of a small country can stand firm in the struggle against the mightiest imperialist state, which seeks to overthrow a regime it does not like.

The Political Report gives a profound analysis of the domestic political situation in Bolivia and the government's so-called new economic policy, which meets the interests of imperialist circles. The PCB Central Committee first secretary pointed to the need to unite all the country's left-wing forces to oppose the onslaught of reaction and defend political and trade union freedoms and the Bolivian people's socioeconomic gains. He appealed to all Bolivia's democratic organizations and parties to form a united opposition front to thwart the plans of reactionaries.

Reportage on Chernobyl Accident Continues

Council of Ministers Message

PM010902 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 1 May 86 Second Edition p 3

["From the USSR Council of Ministers" — KRASNAYA ZVEZDA headline]

[Text] Work to eliminate the consequences of the accident continues at the Chernobyl atomic power station. As a result of the measures taken in the past 24 hours, the emanation of radioactive substances decreased, and the radiation levels in the area of the atomic power station and the settlement at the station lowered.

Measurements taken by specialists using control equipment show that the chain reaction of fission of nuclear fuel is not taking place, the reactor is shut down.

Work is under way to clean polluted sections of the adjoining locality. Specialized units supplied with the necessary up-to-date equipment and effective means are doing this work.

Some news agencies in the West are spreading the rumours that thousands of people, allegedly, perished during the accident at the atomic power station. It has already been reported that, in reality, two persons died. Only 197 people were hospitalized; 49 of them were discharged from the hospital after a medical examination. Enterprises, collective farms, and state farms and institutions are functioning normally.

[Moscow TASS in English at 1713 GMT on 30 April transmits a similar report adding the following paragraph:

x x x

The Council of Ministers of the Ukraine reported that according to the governmental commission the radiation situation at the Chernobyl atomic power station and in the adjoining locality is improving. The state of the air basin over the remaining territory of the Kiev region and the city of Kiev evokes no concern. The quality of the drinking water, as well as of the water in rivers and water reservoirs is in keeping with the standards. Constant observations are conducted over the status of the environment.]

Ukrainian Announcement

LD301630 Kiev Domestic Service in Ukrainian 1545 GMT 30 Apr 86

["Announcement by the Ukrainian SSR Council of Ministers" — announcer-read]

[Text] In connection with the accident [avariya] at the Chernobyl AES, party and local soviet bodies are [words indistinct] of the environment in the city of Kiev and Kiev Oblast.

The Ukrainian SSR Council of Ministers reports that according to data from the government commission the radiation situation at the power station and in the surrounding area is now improving. People living in the AES settlement and in neighboring populated areas have been evacuated to safety zones. Appropriate measures are being adopted to eliminate the consequences of the accident, and social and prophylactic measures are being carried out.

The state of the atmosphere in the rest of the oblast's territory and in the city of Kiev does not give cause for alarm. The quality of drinking water and that of water in rivers and reservoirs corresponds to the norms. The state of the environment is being constantly monitored.

Situation Updated

LD011138 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1123 GMT 1 May 86

["From the USSR Council of Ministers" — TASS heading]

[Text] Moscow, 1 May (TASS) — During 30 April, work continued at Chernobyl atomic power station in carrying out a series [kompleks] of technical measures. Radioactivity has fallen by one-third to one-half on the territory of the AES and the power station settlement.

Work is being carried out to deactivate contaminated sections adjacent to the territory of the AES.

Aid continues to be given to those who were affected, among whom 18 are in serious condition.

There are no foreign citizens among those affected.

TV Shows Photograph of Chernobyl

LD301745 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1700 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Commentator Aleksandr Galkin reports over still photograph of Chernobyl atomic power station — from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] We are now going to show you a photograph taken by one of the officials of Chernobyl atomic power station a short time after the accident. [Video shows still photograph of power station building with half of the building burnt out; the central chimney and other half of the building are intact.]

As you can see for yourself, there is no gigantic destruction or fires, as some Western agencies write. Similarly, there are not thousands of dead.

Indeed, the inhabitants in adjacent settlements have been evacuated. Although the radiation level has decreased over the past 24 hours, the norm has not yet been reached around the station. I would remind you that special units are cleansing radioactive pollution from the adjacent area and that the work of enterprises, collective farms, state farms, and institutions in the locality is proceeding normally.

An accident has happened, but to exaggerate its scale and spread ridiculous rumors, as some bourgeois mass information media are doing, is hardly the appropriate thing to do.

We shall continue to inform you about the state of affairs at Chernobyl atomic power station and about the progress of work on eliminating the consequences of the accident.

Follow-up Action Reported

LD010906 Vilnius in Lithuanian to North America 0001 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] In previous broadcasts we reported a statement by the Soviet Government that an accident had taken place at Chernobyl nuclear power station, 130 kilometers north of Kiev. Two people were killed.

According to preliminary data, because of the accident in one of the areas of the No 4 power generating unit, a part of the building housing the reactor was destroyed and radioactive substances escaped. The three other power generating units were not damaged. They have been shut down and are being kept in reserve.

A government commission is working at the site and priority measures have been taken to deal with the effects of the accident. The inhabitants of the nuclear power station's settlement and three nearby populated centers have been evacuated. Radiation at the power station and the surrounding areas has been stabilized. Victims are undergoing medical treatment.

Death Count Reiterated

LD301723 Kiev Domestic Service in Ukrainian 1545 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Summary from poor reception] Concerning the accident at the AES: "Some agencies in the West are spreading rumors that thousands of people were supposedly killed during the accident at the atomic power station. As has already been reported, in fact only two people died. (?197) were (?put under observation). Of those, 49 left the hospital following checkups. The work of enterprises, collective and state farms, and establishments is going on as normal."

'Unofficial Sources' Explanation

LD010824 Hamburg DPA in German 0524 GMT 1 May 86

[Excerpt] Moscow, 1 May (DPA) — A correspondent in the ARD [West German television] studio in Moscow reports he has learned the first details of the causes of the Chernobyl nuclear power disaster from unofficial sources in Moscow. According to them, there is said to have been a sudden, so far unexplained, loss of current. This put important sets of machinery out of action.

According to his information, an emergency electricity supply was switched on immediately, but failed. The central cooling pump failed as a result of this loss of current. It was not possible to start the replacement pump and overheating took place in the reactor in a very short time. This situation led to an overconcentration of hydrogen and caused an explosion. A fire, which is apparently not yet under control, broke out because of this.

According to the same sources, there was a core meltdown in one of the fuel rods in the block of reactors. The destruction to the building of the block of reactors stemmed from the explosion, while the radioactive radiation came from the core meltdown of the fuel element.

The government commission that has been set up is said to have informed the Soviet leadership that the consequences of the accident would be brought under control in the next few days. Supplies of drinking water for Kiev are not endangered as the melted fuel element did not penetrate underground.

Estimate of Possible Damage

LD301728 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Telephone interview with Mikhail Stern of Satellitbild (Satellite Pictures) company of Kiruna by Jan Magnerud on 30 April — recorded]

[Text] [Magnerud] It is just possible that there are two [word indistinct] reactors that suffered a melted core. We have just been in touch with the company Satellitbild in Kiruna, which has been taking (?pictures) of the nuclear powerplant at Chernobyl. All day long they have been processing the satellite pictures in a computer; what they can now clearly make out is two [word indistinct] red areas inside the power plant.

[Stern] The [word indistinct] we have picked out (?show) different pictures of the — or from the same point, we have picked out different [word indistinct] and combined them so that [word indistinct] is possible. If one shows the combination in its natural colors, so to speak, one could say there is (?clear) blue smoke from the nuclear power building itself. If one then goes over to (?medium-) infra-red and (?over-) infra-red pictures, one can clearly identify the buildings and one can still see the smoke. One sees a very intense point of light, which could be interpreted as a fire right inside the plume of smoke. In addition, we have [word indistinct] pictures [words indistinct], which means one can see the source of heat. That way the resolution is somewhat poorer, but one can see (?it is said) that there are two melted cores, and if this is so, one could interpret these. We have two points of light inside the nuclear power building itself — one slightly stronger and one slightly less strong — the one that is slightly less strong could be interpreted as partially covered by the (?works) itself.

[Magnerud] Are these red points clearly distinct from each other?

[Stern] Yes.

[Magnerud] So this might mean that two reactors were affected by core melt?

[Stern] Well, we are not experts on nuclear power and we cannot interpret the pictures that way, but with the help of the information we have obtained from some people who know a bit more about nuclear power, it can be interpreted as [words indistinct]

Information on Casualties

LD301623 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Excerpts] Philippe Realtien has finally managed to contact the French teacher who is in Kiev. He [not further identified] has managed to gather some information by meeting energy technicians in Kiev. The technicians first talked to him about the number of victims.

This French national has just told me that there were in fact 250 victims, who were the night shift working overnight between Friday and Saturday at the Chernobyl power station where the accident took place. It seems that it was these 250 people who perished when the building where they worked collapsed.

He gave more information on the fire. The fire which spread on the night of Friday to Saturday was only put out last night, according to the information he has. Naturally, he was unable to visit the spot, the zone is completely prohibited.

People have not been evacuated, as was first believed. It seems there are 200,000 inhabitants in the disaster area and the Russians have asked them to stay in place. Thus, these people are not being evacuated. The wounded, for example, and people closest to the power station are the only ones to have been evacuated to Kiev. Some of these 200,000 people have been invited to go to the hospitals closest to Chernobyl for decontamination tests. Some of them are being washed over internally and externally at these hospitals, and the hospital authorities have problems with the water. As you know, the water comes from the Dnieper, the river on which the power station stands and which is contaminated. Apparently, this water is being used for internal and external washing; the water is then recovered and put in tanks. Apparently, this is causing problems.

Another piece of information is that the Americans have apparently also been contacted to assess the extent of the damage on the spot.

As for the town of Kiev, which is the third largest town in the USSR, for the moment everything seems normal. People are chatting and preparing for May Day; the weather is good. People are out and about, buying milk in the dairies, drinking water — apparently, tap water has not been prohibited. However, certain people have been passing the word around and are not drinking the water anymore.

As for the French people there, and the university teacher to whom I spoke on the phone, they are leaving for Moscow this evening following a request from the French Embassy, but simply as a precaution. He has been told to leave his things because he will be able to go back.

It was explained to him that the wind blew the radioactive cloud northwards and the Kiev population is not at risk. There is one small detail — he saw lines of buses coming from the Chernobyl power station. So apparently, at the moment, there is no panic on the streets of Kiev.

500 Dead Reported

AU301748 Paris AFP in English 1735 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, April 30 (AFP) — French students recently in Kiev quoted a Soviet medical source Wednesday as saying more than 500 people were killed in the Chernobyl nuclear disaster. They also quoted the source as saying that an entire section of a hospital in Kiev, 133 kilometres (83 miles) south of the plant, had been turned into a sterile zone for the treatment of children exposed to radiation.

The students, including eight at Kiev University and a group of 23 on a tour from a college in Lyons, southeastern France, also quoted Soviet sources as saying the accident occurred Friday evening.

The situation in Kiev was normal, they said, and people could be seen swimming and fishing Wednesday in the Dnieper river, which flows through Kiev after joining the Pripyat river, which runs north of the Chernobyl reactor. Sophie Guillerm, a Russian language student at Kiev University, said, however, that some Soviet teachers had "asked their students not to swim or fish in the river."

She said that on Tuesday morning, Soviet students had been told to have their internal passports (identity cards) with them. "In the event of an alert," she said, "an evacuation into the city's bomb shelters and subway stations was planned."

Kiev Prepares for May Day

LD301928 [Editorial Report] Moscow Television Service in Russian at 1430 GMT on 30 April, in its "Vremya" program, carries a 2-and 1/2 minute Moscow television correspondent's report on how the city of Kiev, the capital of the Ukraine, is preparing for the celebrations marking May Day. Noting that the city is greeting the first of May with brilliant colors everywhere, she adds that the well-known Kiev chestnut trees have blossomed as if to order. She then points out the October Revolution Square and the city's main street, where the first ranks of May Day marchers and front-ranking collectives of light industry enterprises of Kiev will pass.

The correspondent then goes on to describe a 30 April visit to the Oktyabr sewing works, noting the elegant dresses made there. She also speaks about the above-plan production in other knitwear factories. The Moscow television correspondent then meets with one of the weaver's from a silk combine at the end of her working day — the weaver is also a deputy of the USSR Supreme Soviet. The weaver stresses that great attention is being given to consumer goods at the combine, and efforts are underway to improve the quality of their fabrics. The weaver then talks about her festive mood, because she feels they will be able to continue the work pace established before May Day and they will be able to meet their socialist obligations. The weaver goes on to express her wishes for peace and happiness, and congratulates everyone on the May Day holiday.

Construction Problems Noted

WA301640 Kiev PRAVDA UKRAINY in Russian 18 Mar 86 p 2

[Article by Z. Gurskaya entitiled: "Partners in Debt: the Discipline of Deliveries]

[Text] Pripyat, Kievskaya Oblast — The A. Ryazanov brigade got together for a serious talk during the lunch break. There was no cause for self-reproach. They took few breaks and worked hard during the day. But the schedule for assembly of the lid was not being met. Where was the time going?

The brigade leader calculated that about two man-hours were being spent just on adjusting the lid plates, closures, and collar beams. On the larger scale of the entire construction site, a lot of time is lost due to negligence by the suppliers and irresponsibility and untimely work on the part of other concerned parties upon whom the pace of work depends for this year's start-up site: the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant imeni V.I. Lenin.

Four of the thousand-megawatt units of the AES are currently supplying the country with electric power. The fifth power unit will be next. All the working strength and knowledge of the workers is now being expended on its construction.

By a decision of a commission of the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification, the fifth power unit of the Chernobyl nuclear plant will be ready for use in 1986. Large amounts of capital must still be invested in the complex. This is the first task put before the collective. Moreover, the project must be completed with the lowest construction stockpile ever, according to V. Kizim, the head of the construction administration for the Chernobyl AES and a Hero of Socialist Labor, at a meeting of the town's economic party activists. Thus, even a small setback can threaten the final product.

The real path to fulfilling the assignment on schedule is an increase in personal responsibility for everyone, production and labor discipline, and quick, timely deliveries of metal products, construction materials, equipment, and instruments. If the A. Ryazanov, S. Kosyanchuk, V. Bokov, and other brigades, exemplars of selfless labor who are now working on the instrument control section — the "hot point" of the unit — must do without the pneumatic and steam pipes and cables that they need, then further progress on the unit is impossible.

The construction site is very short of scale, an additive to heavy concrete — according to a worker in the material-technical supply division, R. Schmidt. It is essential for completing the unit. Assembly work has also been interrupted due to insufficient supplies of steel, from which the reinforcement bolts for the deck on the main body are made. Pipe deliveries have ceased. Some of the suppliers are: the Nikopolskiy Yuzhno-Trubnyy Plant, Zaporozhye Steel, the Pobeda Irpensk Combine, the Staykovskiy Construction Materials Plant, and the Pridneprovskiy Reinforced Concrete Products Plant.

We are not only talking about the supply of materials and products that are currently scheduled for delivery but about supplies that have not been delivered in the past. It is because of these debts that we are now so hard pressed to meet schedules. The question of timeliness of deliveries is still at issue. Unfortunately, it is not uncommon for workers to either "sit on bare soldering" or to be surrounded by too much material. This leads to damage, breakage, and consequently, disorder that is inadmissable on any site, let alone at a nuclear power station.

The party committee at the site has made working contacts with supply plants one of the main working points this year. However, these contacts are often one-sided. Not all of the construction workers' partners are strictly following their negotiated contracts. Therefore, the A. Ryazanov brigade and other collectives must while away minutes and hours instead of wholeheartedly devoting themselves to fulfilling the assignment.

Moscow Children Warned

LD010928 Hamburg DPA in German 0906 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Moscow, 1 May (DPA) — Children in Moscow schools have been told by their teachers to peel fruit and vegetables carefully before eating them. As was also heard from Soviet sources today, the girls and boys had been told that they should also tell their parents to do the same. The recommendation is explained with the remark that large quantities of rat poison had been discovered on fruits and vegetables in the fruit wholesale sector. This poison could cause illnesses.

Western observers in Moscow do not rule out the possibility that this safety measure is linked to the reactor disaster in the Ukranian town of Chernobyl.

Blackout Imposed on Western TV Satellites

LD301727 Hamburg DPA in German 1631 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow, 30 Apr (DPA) — The Soviet authorities today told Western television correspondents in Moscow that from 1-4 May they cannot transmit filmed reports from Moscow to their home networks. Even correspondents who days ago booked a line to carry television reports on the Red Square May Day parade and who had been promised facilities have now been refused.

Western circles in Moscow connect the suprise Soviet decision with the Charnobyl reactor disaster. They think that the USSR may want to make it more difficult to report on the accident. One of the correspondents said the State Committee for Television and Radio (Gosteleradio) merely told him that Soviet television will have no lines available until 4 May because they will be needed by the USSR's Central Television Service.

Observers in Moscow regard the Soviet decision as unusual, since in recent years television reporters have been able to transmit their reports on the May Day celebrations without Moscow's Ostankino television center causing any problems. In the USSR 1 May has been extended by three additional working days until

4 May. [as received]

'Technical Reasons' Cited

[Text] Moscow, May 1 (AFP) — Western TV satellite links from Moscow will be unavailable at least until next Monday, after being blacked out Wednesday, a reliable source said Thursday. Most TV correspondents suspected a Soviet wish to curtail reports following the Ukraine nuclear accident last Saturday. But the official explanation was "technical reasons."

No TV pictures have been sent by satellite from Moscow, either to the United States or Western Europe, since Wednesday. No immediate Western TV coverage was possible of Thursday's annual Soviet May Day ceremonies.

Traditional May Day Celebrations Begin in Red Square

LD010615 Moscow TASS in English 0606 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Moscow May 1 TASS — The traditional demonstration on the occasion of the May Day, the day of international solidarity of the working people, marked today, began at the Red Square in Moscow.

The demonstrators warmly greeted General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev, other party leaders and statesmen.

Celebration Described

LD010725 Moscow TASS in English 0715 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Moscow May 1 TASS — The May Day demonstration began at the Red Square in Moscow today.

The square is traditionally in a festive apparel, in proletarian red-letter day attributes. A glowing panel with "May Day", inscribed on it, is seen like a sheet from a calendar of history. The USSR's national flag is fluttering, framed with the flags of 15 union republics. Their emblems are on the Kremlin Wall.

From all parts of the square one can see portraits of the leaders of the proletariat — Marx, Engels, Lenin. They are framed by the main slogans of the day reaffirming the devotion of the Soviet people to the teaching of scientific communism.

These slogans run: "Forward by the Leninist course of the 27th CPSU Congress, along the lines of communist creation and peace", "Progress in science and technology is the call of time", "The social sphere should be developed at an accelerated rate", "For consolidation of peace and security of the peoples", "We shall prevent militarisation of outer space", and the word "Peace" is reiterated many times, in different languages.

The Muscovites and the guests of the capital greeted with applause the leaders of the Communist Party and statesmen.

The Kremlin chimes struck ten. Fanfares were played. Loudspeakers solemnly hailed the May Day.

"Long live the Communist Party of the Soviet Union". Thousands of voices joined in with a unanimous "Hurrah". Young Pioneers ran to the rostrum of the mausoleum. They presented to the leaders of the Communist Party and statesmen flowers and red bows.

The May Day celebrations are attended by delegations of the trade union movement from more than 100 countries, representatives of the World Federation of Trade Unions, other international organizations.

The hosts of the celebrations — thousands of the working people of Moscow are marching through the Red Square. Moscow narrates today about the first accomplishments in implementation of plans of the new five-year period.

It is exactly 100 years this day since May 1, 1886 when American workers marched in streets of Chicago with red banners to defend their rights. This holiday, which was won in struggle, which was paid for in blood, now belongs to all who are now upholding freedom, equality and fraternity.

The May Day demonstration continued for about two hours.

Zaykov Visits Tula Oblast; Meets With People

PM011126 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 1 May 86 Morning Edition p 2

[TASS report: "Stay in Tula Oblast"]

[Text] L.N. Zaykov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, was in Tula Oblast 28-29 April. During his stay the oblast party organization's tasks in implementing the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress were examined.

Questions linked with sharply increasing production volume in the 12th 5-Year Plan and improving output quality and labor productivity were discussed at the party obkom with the participation of bureau members, chiefs of obkom departments, leaders of local party and soviet organs, and senior officials from a number of ministries and departments. The need to step up the attention paid to social questions was stressed. Tula Oblast must make more efficient use of its immense economic potential in order to resolutely overcome lags and scale qualitatively new heights in implementing the tasks set by the party.

At the "Azot" Production Association in Shchekino the progress of the fulfillment of the party and government resolutions aimed at protecting the environment in the vicinity of the L.N. Tolstoy "Yasnaya Polyana" museum estate was examined. The fate of this national monument is of concern to the general public.

Reports were heard from Yu. Davydov and G. Vinokurov, general directors of the "Azot" Association and "Tulachermet" Scientific Production Association respectively, and from A. Meshcheryakov, director of the Shchekino GRES. Reporting on the work done, they gave assurances that the party and government resolutions aimed at saving pearls of Russian culture for future generations would undoubtedly be fulfilled.

The main ways of accelerating scientific and technical progress, automating plants, and equipping them with electronics were discussed at the Tula Firearms Plant and the Precision Machine-Building Plant. Great attention was devoted to increasing aid to group "B" industry machine-building enterprises. The need to increase output of jacquard looms and new-generation automated hosiery machines was particularly noted. The use of this equipment will make it possible to increase output of high-quality goods and to saturate the domestic market with them.

The enterprise workers and inhabitants of Tula and other cities in the oblast with whom L.N. Zaykov met spoke of their unanimous support for the party's domestic and foreign policy and the course of the 27th CPSU Congress, and their resolve to achieve an acceleration in the country's socioeconomic development through shock work. The questions of improving discipline and unity of words and deeds were acutely posed. The oblast's working people stated their desire to step up the struggle against negligence, parasitism, and drunkenness and to overcome everything hampering rapid progress.

Problems that must be urgently resolved in order to improve the efficiency of capital construction in Tula Oblast and to comprehensively solve social problems figured prominently in the conversations. The task was set of more actively building up capacities at existing construction organizations and developing housing construction by economic means using enterprises' efforts and means. Labor collectives were also oriented toward strengthening subsidiary farms, which will make it possible to improve food supplies to machine builders, chemical workers, and miners.

During the trip around the city wreaths were laid at the Vladimir Ilich Lenin Monument and the monument to the defenders of Tula in the Great Patriotic War years.

L.N. Zaykov was accompanied by Yu.I. Litvintsev, first secretary of Tula CPSU Obkom, and N.T. Sinegubov, chairman of Tula Oblispolkom.

Address at Chemical Plant

PM010903 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Apr 86 First Edition p 2

[TASS report: "The Masses' Living Creativity — the Decisive Force for Acceleration"]

[Text] Novomoskovsk (Tula Oblast), 29 Apr — L.N. Zaykov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, began his visit to Tula Oblast with a trip to one of the country's leading chemical enterprises — the V.I. Lenin Azot production association. He visited many production sectors, where he met with workers and specialists. In detailed conversations, questions of developing the enterprise on the basis of scientific and technical progress and ways of accelerating its modernization and the introduction of leading technologies were discussed. This will enable Azot to work more intensively and to increase the production of high quality mineral fertilizers and other output that the national economy needs at lower cost.

On 28 April L.N. Zaykov met with the working people of the Azot production association. Addressing those present, he said:

At our meeting today we are examining questions which profoundly affect the vital interests of literally every working person, every Soviet person. In essence we are continuing the discussion that began at the 27th party congress and discussing the ideas and problems that it raised in relation to the specific conditions and tasks of your oblast, city, and association.

The CPSU Central Committee attaches great significance to the organization of the development of all postcongress work. As was stressed in the Central Committee Political Report to the congress, "all our plans will remain hanging in the air if they leave people indifferent, if we do not know how to arouse the masses' labor and social activeness, their energy and initiative." To channel the creative potential of the people, of every labor collective, into the resolution of the new tasks — that is the main condition of the successful fulfillment of the congress' intentions today.

The crucial time that the country is now living through began with the Central Committee April (1985) Plenum, which elaborated the bases of the party's policy line and answered the vital questions posed by life itself. Many of these burning questions have accumulated.

It must be said that in the course of preparations for the Central Committee April Plenum, not only economic leaders but also certain theorists of the political economy of socialism expressed ideas to the effect that it is necessary to wait a while, to pull up the rearguard, to gather strength, to await a more favorable demographic situation, and only then to make a rapid spurt along the path of communist building.

As is known the party Central Committee did not support these sentiments. The decisions of the Central Committee April Plenum and the conference held in June (last year) at the CPSU Central Committee on questions of accelerating scientific and technical progress and the program documents with which the party approached its 27th congress substantiated and developed the concept of comprhensive intensification of the country's socioeconomic development and set a firm course of acceleration.

The creative, businesslike tone of the congress' work was set above all by the Central Committee Political Report delivered by M.S. Gorbachev.

Honesty and directness; the truth about our errors; sharp criticism of stagnation phenomena, inertia and bureaucracy, and ostentation and self-glorification; and the demand to resolutely and uncompromisingly eradicate negative phenomena in society's life and avoid the repetition of past mistakes — those are the characteristic features of the Political Report, features that determined the atmosphere at the party forum. That was precisely the kind of congress that our party and all the people needed during this complex, critical period. It is a response to the challenge of the times.

The center of the congress' attention and the core of all its documents was the strategic course of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development. This course permeates all the party's activity since the Central Committee April (1985) Plenum and has met with the unanimous approval and warm support of Soviet people.

The congress defined the main targets which our country must reach by the end of this century.

The main means of achieving these objectives, as was stressed at the 27th party congress, is scientific and technical progress. The task set is to carry out a profound modernization of the national economy and a renewal of the machinery part of fixed capital on the basis of the latest achievements of science and technology and to bring about a breakthrough in the vanguard avenues of scientific and technical progress and a restructuring of the economic machinery and the management system.

It is now necessary to understand clearly that we have no alternative, no option than to fulfill the congress decisions. We cannot avoid the urgent problems.

In a comparatively short time many practical steps have been taken to implement the decisions adopted. The essence of the changes is to switch our attention from quantitative indicators to quality and efficiency, from interim results to end results, from the expansion of fixed capital to its renewal, from the buildup of fuel and raw material resources to the improvement of their utilization and the rapid development of science-intensive sectors and of the production and social infrastructure. The speaker went on to dwell on the priority avenues of the concentration of material, financial, and labor resources. It is already possible, he noted, to speak of some results. Industry is largely going over to a two-tier management system. Links between science and production have strengthened.

At the present stage of development in the country's economy the role of the machine-building complex is increasing considerably and becoming a key factor. Machine building creates the machinery part of fixed production capital — the instruments of labor — and thereby determines to a decisive degree the potential for technical progress.

As you know, a special resolution of the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers on the development of machine building through the year 2000 has been adopted. The task set is to renounce the philosophy of following the lead of others and to go over to the path of creating and assimilating fundamentally new machinery, the best in the world.

The wide use of electronics and the comprehensive automation of production are coming to the fore. Specific targets have been set for the elaboration and assimilation of computer technology and the development of a component base.

Particular attention must be directed toward the retooling and updating of production on the basis of the introduction of progressive manufacturing equipment, automated production complexes, rotary lines, computer technology, and so forth. In this context particular significance is attached to the accelerated development in every sector of its own machine-building base and tool-building shops oriented toward the production of high productivity, high quality tools, rigs, and adaptations.

The congress decisions assign an important role to sector science and to increasing the efficiency and output of scientific research institutes and design bureaus.

Great hopes for accelerating and increasing the efficiency of the labor of scientists, engineers, and technicians are pinned on the experiment to provide incentives for the labor of designers and technologists and to increase their responsibility for the end result. A total of 48 machine-building enterprises and organizations took part in this experiment. Quite good results were obtained. It is regrettable that given such obvious positive results in the experiment, the expansion of its application has been unjustifiably delayed. This is largely explained by the fact that certain leaders of enterprises and organizations who were for a long time brought up on different demands and have gotten out of the habit are afraid to assume responsibility and are avoiding making decisions, trying to transfer the responsibility to a higher level of leadership. Some people cannot get rid of the corrosive, harmful habit of living according to the principle "lie low, or they will dump something else on you;" they say give me a target and I will fulfill it, but it is not worth taking any risks.

The party Central Committee requires ministries, departments, and local party organs to display the maximum initiative, seek nonstandard ways of solving urgent problems, and take a reasonable risk if necessary. The principled approaches are well known and were set forth in the Central Committee Political Report to the congress. They must be interpreted in relation to every sector and every enterprise.

The days are gone when no significance was attached to how much things cost, what the quality of output was, what the price was, and how progress was secured. Unfortunately, quality and the technical and economic standard of articles are still vulnerable points in our economy.

The question of improving product quality, the speaker went on, is not only economic, but political. It is ultimately a question of more fully satisfying public requirements. The problem of quality is a task for the whole people, and can only be resolved by the efforts of the whole people.

One tried and tested way of improving product quality and reliability is the wide application of new, high-durability composite materials. Here the role and responsibility of our chemical industry is increasing, perhaps, more than ever before. L.N. Zaykov went on to speak of the reserves that the sector and the national economy as a whole possess in this respect.

In a word, he said, the tasks facing us are large-scale and very complex. In order to fulfill them it is necessary, as the congress instructions demand, to resolutely restructure the work style and increase the responsibility of every component and every leader. There is no time to waste. We must put a stop to sluggishness.

It is necessary to wage a more energetic struggle against disorderliness, take strict administratieve and party proceedings against those guilty of thwarting the fulfillment of state plans, targets, and pledges for savings and thrift, and ensure the strictest observance of contract discipline.

I would like once again to draw your attention to the great significance of the Volga Motor Vehicle Plant association's initiative, approved by the party Central Committee, on amending the control figures for the 12th 5-Year Plan. This is an example of the combination of state interests and the labor collective's interests. The acceleration of the resolution of urgent economic and social problems presupposes precisely this approach. It opens up scope for the human factor, for people's creative activeness, and gives every working person the opportunity to display his knowledge, experience, and professional skill.

Today, as M.S. Gorbachev stressed, the masses' living creativity is the decisive force for acceleration. This meaningful, militant slogan of the day must be a firm law in the activity of every labor collective.

The revolutionary, combat, and labor history of Tula and Tula Oblast is rich in events. The motherland has assessed on their merits the combat and labor feats of the people of Tula. Tula City bears the lofty title of Hero City, while the oblast has been awarded the Order of Lenin.

The party Central Committee attaches great significance to the further development of the economy and the social sphere in Tula Oblast. Large-scale, developed industry is concentrated here — machine building, chemical and petrochemical industry, ferrous metallurgy, power. The Shchekino method was born on Tula's soil and gave rise to a mighty upsurge in labor productivity in many sectors of the economy. Your workers make such remarkable things that we have every right to say that the traditions of Tula's Lefty are alive and developing today [reference to Leskov's story "Lefty" ("Levsha") in which a lefthander from Tula makes a mechanical performing flea].

However, I think you will agree that we are not here to talk about achievements and successes. They are common knowledge. In assessing what has been achieved by the tough yardstick of the 27th congress requirements. it must be said frankly that the people of Tula must work, work, and work. However, as the results of work in the first quarter of this year show, things are improving only slowly, not as the times require.

Look what happens. In terms of volumne indicators. the plan targets for the quarter were fulfilled, but the rate of industrial output growth is below the union average. The plan for output sales taking delivery contracts into account was not fulfilled by one in three enterprises. The oblast's fuel and light industry worked unsatisfactorily.

I would particularly like to draw attention to the complex situation in capital construction, which, unfortunately, is not improving, despite every effort.

Housing construction is proceeding poorly. Even the reduced targets for the first quarter were not fulfilled: Only 5 percent of the annual plan for housing was built.

Why am I focusing your attention on this? The point is that in your oblast the situation in the social sphere is highly unfavorable. A large number of people at the enterprises need to improve their housing conditions.

Substantial work lies ahead to radically improve the ecological situation. The CPSU Central Committee dealt strictly with the leadership of ministries and oblast organizations for the shortcomings which occurred in the preservation of the country's national pride and monument of world culture — the Yasnaya Polyana estate-museum [Tolstoy's one-time home]. The oblast leaders tell me that this matter has now begun to be set to rights. Efforts must not be spared. The party obkom must display much greater exactingness toward economic leaders on this question.

Order must also be imposed in agriculture. It should be transferred to intensive techniques more rapidly. This is the lever that will make it possible to more successfully resolve the food problem. Measures must be taken. The oblast agro-industrial association, which has every right to become the full master in the countryside, must operate at full strength. You are receiving and will continue to receive help. But nobody is going to impose order on your behalf. This is the direct duty of party, soviet, trade union, and economic organs.

A major role in resolving the task of comprehensive intensification of production belongs to the chemical industry. It is among the most dynamic sectors and is notable for a rapid rate of development compared with industry as a whole and a high proportion of the overall volume of industrial output.

The CPSU Central Committee and the Soviet Government recently approved a comprehensive program for chemicalization of the national economy for the period through the year 2000. A major role in fulfilling this program is assigned to the labor collectives of Novomskovsk city, where major chemical industry enterprises are located. A leading place among them belongs to the Novomoskovsk Azot production association — one of the country's oldest centers of the chemical industry.

Unfortunately, the Azot association has recently begun to lose its leading position in the sector. Particular concern is aroused by the fact that again in 1986 it is not planned to increase the volume of industrial output. And very low rates of production development are planned for the 12th 5-Year Plan as a whole. This goes totally against the party congress' instructions on accelerating the country's socioeconomic development.

L.N. Zaykov analyzed in detail the tasks of accelerating the retooling of the association. He dwelt in detail on ways of increasing the efficiency of capital construction in Tula Oblast. This is of great significance for the successful fulfillment of socioeconomic plans for the 5-year plan. The Ministry of Industrial Construction was citicized.

We can resolve the task of acceleration, the speaker stressed, only by relying on the latest achievements of science.

But for some reason many leading achievements are not being introduced at your enterprise. I hope the Ministry for the Production of Mineral Fertilizers will finally succeed in overcoming passive attitudes to the utilization of scientific achievements in practice.

The speaker went on to talk about improving the utilization of equipment and the standard of production, linking these matters with product quality, and about the influence of the human factor on the resolution of the new tasks.

We are developing the economy not for the economy's own sake, he stressed, but in order to improve Soviet people's well-being in every way. At the same time, the tasks of social development and environmental conservation, housing construction, and questions of sanitation and living conditions are being resolved only poorly at the association. The lag in the construction of health care facilities is particularly alarming, since they are much needed, including in Novomoskovsk itself.

The state gives you great assistance. But in our country it is customary to respond to the party's concern with deeds. We await such deeds from you, L.N. Zaykov said.

It is important to organize in a businesslike way socialist competition for the fulfillment of plans for the 1st year of the current 5-year plan and to develop more widely the traditions of the Stakhanovite movement and shock labor.

Dwelling on questions of the implementation of the party's foreign policy strategy elaborated by the 27th CPSU Congress, L.N. Zaykov stressed that the priority goal is the struggle for the implementation of the three-stage program put forward in Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's 15 January statement. The Soviet Union has a clear idea of how to achieve this and a concrete program for work to preserve and establish peace.

In conclusion the speaker said:

The party Central Committee hopes and is confident that the Communists of the Tula party organization and the working people of the oblast and of Novomoskovsk city will do everything necessary to implement the course elaborated by the Leninist party's 27th congress.

In 2 days' time we will be marking the working people's festival of international solidarity — May Day — and later our own great day — Victory Day.

Please convey to your comrades and relatives good wishes for health and creative achievements for the motherland's sake.

The speakers at the meeting spoke of the collective's businesslike mood and its readiness to implement the course elaborated by the party of accelerating our society's socioeconomic development. In the struggle to achieve a major breakthrough, every working person in the country is aware of his personal responsibility, the speakers said. The masses' growing activeness and creativity are mighty factors for acceleration.

Uzbek Procuratorate Investigates False Reporting

GF211558 Tashkent Domestic Service in Uzbek 0115 GMT 6 Apr 86

[Text] An interadministration coordination meeting was held in the Uzbek SSR procurator's office yesterday dedicated to matters related to the effort made to consolidate the struggle waged against theft and false accounting during the process of procuring and registering cotton and against the violation of state discipline in any other form. The leading officials of the republic's law-enforcement and Komsomol organs and from various ministries and administrations participated in the convocation.

The speakers who addressed the meeting confirmed that the forms and methods applied in the work carried out by state organs and establishments in all the domains were being reorganized in accordance with the demands of the 27th CPSU Congress and the 21st Uzbek Communist Party Congress.

The organs affiliated to the procurator's office have put to task a large group of bribers, thieves, and tricksters for their various crimes. However, the useless practice of false accounting and misappropriation has been continuing in certain economic establishments. For example, there were violations of law in the Bukhara, Dzhizak, and Surkhan Darya Oblasts and in the Kara-Kalpak ASSR at the time of cotton procurement and registration in 1985. Leaders of kolkhozes and sovkhozes engaged in criminal collusion with cotton procuring (?centers) and with the employees of cotton factories to present the state plan as fulfilled. These employees drew up false reports claiming that large quantities of cotton had been procured.

The meeting drew up recommendations for the ministries and administrations for the removal of negative developments in the process of cotton cultivation and recording.

Lax Construction Standards at Rostov AES Criticized

PM241340 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 8 Apr 86 p 1

[Article by B. Gordeyev, leader of the State Committee for the Supervision of Safe Working Practices in the Atomic Power Industry inspectorate at the Rostov AES, and own correspondent L. Shamardina, under the rubric "Our Correspondents at the Construction Site": "Answer Does Not Tally"]

[Text] Volgodonsk — The slogan on the wall called for the first phase of the sealed reactor casing to be concreted over ahead of schedule. But hardly had the work begun when it had to be stopped: The USSR State Committee for the Supervision of Safe Working Practices in the Atomic Power Industry [Gosatomenergonadzor] inspectorate demanded that the shoddy workmanship that had been discovered — deviations from design plan and technological demands — be eradicated.

However, the report that the pledge had been fulfilled and concreting had begun had already been dispatched to all the authorities. The same thing was ceremonially reported at a conference to Ye. Kuzmichev, chief of the "Soyuzatomenergostroy" Association.

But why was the exceptional measure of halting work on a leading project at the construction site necessary? How could shoddy workmanship get through all the controls? Why did those empowered to stop it — the construction laboratory, the technical inspectors, or the acceptance commission — not stop it?

A. Romanishina, technical inspection leader at the Rostov AES construction administration, had tried beforehand to prevent the error. But in haste and for the sake of a "smooth" report, her indications were ignored. But to give a semblance of legitimacy to the violation, since the obstinate technical inspectorate chief, having discovered deviations, refused to accept the work of the installation workers, the document was signed by I. Shiryayev, the administration's chief engineer, instead of A. Romanishina.

Under a provision in force at the construction site, if the technical inspectors refuse to accept work carried out with violations, the chief engineer himself must personally participate in the repeat acceptance procedure, verify the execution of the work, and punish anyone at fault. But on this occasion there was no repeat acceptance procedure and the shoddy workmen were not brought to account. On the contrary, the chief engineer's signature on the dubious document was an attempt to support unsuitable work with the prestige of his position.

Prior to this, Gosatomenergonadzor inspectors had twice — in early and mid-February — warned the leadership and party committee at the administration that concreting should not be started until the defects in reinforcing certain main blocks had been eradicated. By sidestepping the "obstinate" technical inspection and by violating all quality control regulations the block acceptance document had been signed by the association's then leaders — former chief A. Trofimenko and former chief engineer A. Usov. Both have now been demoted. But the new leadership at the construction site is maintaining its former style: The warnings of the technical inspectors and the Gosatomenergonadzor have again been ignored. Even worse, they have literally attempted to heap shoddy work upon shoddy work. The very deviations which sparked the entire matter have been discovered in the reinforcing cage of the casing itself.

So stopping work at a most important project is an extreme and exceptional measure, but a necessary one. Now that they have stopped, the construction workers, the planners, and the client have been forced willy-nilly to approach the problem with businesslike rather than short-term considerations.

But this is not just an individual question. How much more important it would be, in our view, to grasp why this was possible and why the entire multifaceted quality control system at the construction site failed to work.

The Gosatomenergonadzor inspectorate monitors by no means all nuclear installations — only the most important ones. Nevertheless, the last 6 months of last year alone more than 50 blatant violations of the plan, regulations, and production techniques of work were revealed. Sixteen leaders were materially punished for this. The extreme measure of stopping work was used six times in 6 months. And now the February accident has opened accounts for 1986...

And it is the same old story each time: Shoddy workmanship and incomplete work are discovered at the last moment, during acceptance, when rectification requires considerable expenditure, additional time, and heroic efforts. In order to avoid this various "sidestep" maneuvers are undertaken and attempts are made to change the opinion of the acceptance commission and even of the State Inspectorate.

In its report "The Habit of Deviation" published 11 April last year, SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA criticized the building workers at Rostov AES on this very point. Almost a year has passed since the newspaper article but there have been no notable changes for the better. Why? If the documents and certificates are to be believed there is an across-the-board quality control system at the construction site: control of equipment lists, quality control of building materials and structures; the construction laboratory, in which there are 14 officials together with experts, foremen, and section chiefs, is responsible for operational control, which makes it possible to intervene in the progress of matters until "hidden" work is revealed; acceptance control of finished structures and stages of work is assigned to the technical inspectorate; and finally control to reveal the extent and effectiveness of all the preceding types of controls is carried out by the Gosatomenergonadzor inspectorate.

There are almost too many cooks.... And yet stoppages begin at the very first stage. The equipment list administration simply does not have the skilled cadres to carry out initial control and, moreover, is not interested in doing so. Being strict on this point would mean being wholly responsible for damage to materials caused by incorrect storage at the warehouse and during transportation through the fault of Production and Technological Equipment List Administration workers themselves.

As for the construction laboratory, it had hardly started functioning at the crucial stage which the construction project had reached. The laboratory staffers have no premises, equipment, or instruments. As a result it carries out no special checks or tests of the waterproofing of water conduits, the sealing of wall panel joints, anticorrosion measures, and many other things.

Just why does the client's technical inspectorate — the management of the Rostov AES that is under construction — and the inspectorate department of the planners — the Gorkiy department of "Atomteploelektroproyekt" — not show the proper demandingness and principledness? Because they fear that the same demandingness will be applied to them.

And they have reason to be afraid. There have long been dozens of mistakes, amendments, alterations, and adjustments in blueprints during construction. Are the "offended" construction workers suddenly introducing the proper initial control of the design estimates they are receiving? And the client, if he shows the proper demandingness toward the construction workers, has himself to be wholly responsible for the provision in complete sets, safekeeping, and quality of the equipment provided for installation. For such "delicate" reasons the planner, client, and subcontractor are mutually obliging on questions of quality. And in a difficult situation the traces can be covered up...in concrete.

For alongside the signature of administration Chief Engineer I. Shiryayev on the very document permitting the concreting of the casing that had been completed with violations, there are the signatures of AES management Chief Engineer D. Renev and project Chief Engineer V. Kasatkin. A most crucial decision has been based not on verification or on additional calculations, which were simply nonexistent, but just like that — on the basis of departmental solidarity. Indeed, the client, the subcontractor, and the design institute are the "offspring" of a single ministry...

Was this not why the reply of the Ministry of Power and Electrification to SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA's aforementioned critical article states: "The technical inspectorate created at the Rostov AES construction site and the control it carries out have made it possible to significantly improve the quality of the projects under construction and to streamline the control system in construction and installation subunits as a whole."

But there have been more, not less, alarming cases of project and equipment violations with the transfer to more complex and responsible work in the pressurized zone [germozona]. And as far as the "streamlining of the control system in subunits" is concerned, the real situation at the construction site does not tally with the reply.

We can only pin our hopes on the section of the ministerial reply which states: "The USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification is taking measures to strengthen the construction quality control services at nuclear power stations and plans to draw up and introduce regulations for a departmental construction quality control system defining the duties, rights, and responsibilities of subunits, services, and officials for the quality of the projects they are building..." Fine words. But they were written long ago and it is high time to get down to action.

Statistics Board Reports Spring Field Work Progress

LD301244 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1130 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] The USSR Central Statistical Administration today reported on progress of spring field work. Mass sowing of spring crops is being carried out by kolkhozes and sovkhozes of Belorussia, Lithuania, the Volga area, and many areas of the RSFSR non-Chernozem Zone. Altogether spring crops occupy 41.5 million hectares nationwide. In Siberia and the Kazakh virgin lands machine operators are mulching. On fields given over to intensive technology phosphate fertilizers are being applied; the soil is immediately packed so as to avoid moisture loss. In the European part of the country — in the Ukraine Moldavia and the North Caucasus — where winter crops are already blossoming, the second top-dressing of the crops is being carried out, as well as the fight against pests, disease, and weeds. In the south of the country harvesting of rape and alfalfa has started, while in other regions sowing of feed crops is in progress.

Specialists of Rosagroprom consider that in some farms this work is behind. Sowing of pulse crops is especially slow. At present, the higher authority does not permit unjustified, incompetent interference in the affairs of managers and agronomists of kolkhozes and sovkhozes. However, it is worth remembering that each one of them is responsible for observing scientifically based agrotechnical requirements. After all, non-observance of them may lead to losses in the harvest. Here is an example: In the south of the non-Chernozem Zone the optimum time for sowing peas is already running out, but in the Tula, Orel, and Ryazan oblasts the plan has only been fulfilled by 25-30 percent. The plan for sowing pulse crops has not been fulfilled by farms of the Kuban and Daghestan. Sowing of soya is slow in Rostov Oblast and Krasnodar Kray. How will the problem of enrichment of fodder with protein be solved there?

Agricultural Developments for 25-26 April Reported

LD270039 [Editorial Report] The following is a compilation of reports on agricultural developments in the USSR carried by Moscow Domestic Service in Russian, unless otherwise indicated, on 25-26 April. Times of broadcasts are given in parentheses at the end of each item.

25 April

The large-scale sowing of corn for grain is under way in the Stavropol Kray. The best land, seeds, and fertilizer have been assigned to the operation, which involves over 100,000 hectares. Intensive technology will be used. Seed processing employing the "incrustation" method before sowing will boost the yield. Last year a farm which tried out this method in some fields produced a yield of 124 quintals per hectare of corn. (0100 GMT)

Sowing has begun in the rice fields of Turmenistan's Tashauz Oblast. Specialized farms in the area were given more than 2,500 hectares of prepared land before sowing began. (0500 GMT)

North Ossetia farmers finished sowing sunflowers today. (1800 GMT)

Spring wheat is the main crop in the Volga Region. In Saratov Oblast alone it now occupies about 800,000 hectares. Farms in Krasnokutskiy, Engelskiy, and other rayons of the steppe Volga Region began sowing of wheat today. Local selection sorts are used here predominantly for their high yield and drought resistance qualities. (2230 GMT)

In Kostroma sowing units have begun work. Spring sowing will be carried out on 320,000 hectares. One hectare in 10 will be cultivated using intensive technology. (2230 GMT)

Planting of potatoes has been started up in south Amur Oblast. Potatoes will be cultivated according to an intensive technology on two-thirds of the total acreage in the oblast, which, incidentally, is 13,000 hectares. (2300 GMT)

26 April

Massive field work is under way in Omsk Oblast, where machine operators are conducting harrowing of the tracts of land and application of fertilizers. Perennial grasses, which are sown on 500,000 hectares, have already been top-dressed on almost 200,000 hectares, which is significantly more than in the same period last year. (0000 GMT)

Spring field work has started earlier than usual in Kokchetav Oblast of Kazakhstan. Farms of the southern rayons have commenced moisture retention. A correspondent's report informs that more than one-third of the total spring wheat fields in the oblast this spring were alotted to cultivation according to intensive technologies. (0200 GMT)

Farmers of Belorussia have started sowing spring grain crops on the second million hectares. Sowing is being conducted predominantly according to an intensive technology. (0204 GMT)

Spring sowing has begun in Kostroma Oblast. Some 320,000 hectares are to be sown with spring cereals. (0800 GMT)

The main concern of farmers in Altay, where spring work in the fields is under way, is the area being farmed intensively. This area will be the largest intensively farmed area in Siberia and should this year provide Altay with approximately 1 million metric tons of supplementary wheat. (1100 GMT)

Sowing of oats and corn for silage has started in Ivanovo Oblast. Each 10th hectare of plowed land in Kostroma Oblast is to be cultivated using industrial technology. Sowing of wheat has begun in Saratov Oblast; the area under the most valuable hard varieties has been expanded by 50,000 hectares. (Moscow Television 26 Apr 86 1430 GMT)

TASS Commentator Views Disposal of Radioactive Waste

LD301746 Moscow TASS in English 1730 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 30 TASS — TASS commentator Lev Chernenko writes:

Radioactive substances are applied in science and production on an ever larger scale from one year to the next. However, radioactive waste, though small in quantity and of low intensity, has to be removed and disposed of. To this end the USSR has established the Radon scientific and production amalgamation.

Everything at Radon has been built to stand for centuries. Concrete storage blocks are to keep their contents for hundreds of years before they become safe. Radioactive decay will continue for 300 or even 500 years within but deadly radiation will be contained at Radon and never do any harm.

Strong shielding minimizes the influence of radiation on the environment and sensitive instruments are continuously monitoring the environmental condition. Pickups in the workshops and laboratories of the amalgamation are linked to a radiation safety computer and there are alarms in the corridors of buildings and at every piece of equipment. All this makes it possible to obtain information instantaneously.

Every worker in the amalgamation has a personal code. When it is fed to the computer, it prints out the radiation doses received at work. We asked the computer about A. Pryakhina and got the answer that during 20 years of employment that laboratory assistant had not been exposed in total even to an annual, harmless dose. No occupational diseases have ever been recorded at Radon.

The charts drawn up at Radon show how the character of global radioactive fallout changes along with atmospheric precipitation. The peak was recorded in the early 1960s, when atmospheric nuclear tests were still conducted. Radioactive fallout began to decreased after 1963 when the treaty prohibiting nuclear weapon tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and under water had entered into force. The 1970s, the period of detente, saw a substantial drop in that figure.

Cosmonauts Complete 7th Week in Space; Rest Planned

LD301257 Moscow TASS in English 1225 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 30 TASS — Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovev are completing the seventh week of their flight in orbit.

In the past days, the crew of the manned complex was engaged in unloading the Progress-26 unmanned freighter and conducted operations to fit out the Mir station with new instruments and equipment. The cosmonauts also performed geophysical experiments under the programme for exploring the earth's natural resources and the environment.

Today, the cosmonauts will continue work with the cargo craft, carry out a series of visual observations, photograph individual regions of the earth's surface using hand-held cameras, and hold two-hour physical training sessions.

On May 1, the crew will have a day of rest. A video footage of the May Day demonstration of the working people from the Red Square is planned for the cosmonauts.

According to the telemetered information and reports from orbit, the flight of the manned Mir — Soyuz T-15 — Progress-26 comlex is proceeding normally. Leonid Kizim and Vladimir solovev are in good health.

'Mir' Station Uses Preprogrammed Operations

LD300904 [Editorial Report] Moscow Domestic Service in Russian at 1730 GMT on 29 April carries a report by Petr Pelekhov on the continuing activities of the Mir station cosmonauts.

Speaking about communications sessions with the Flight Control Center, he says that as soon as the Mir station gets out of the range of radio visibility, information is taken from the Salyut-7 station. The amount of information has sharply increased, all of it requiring attention and analysis. This is where the Mir station shows its obvious advantages over its predecessor.

For example, for the first time there is no need to carry out any kind of planned technical operation, to be forced to wait for the station to be in the zone of radio visibility at the necessary moment. The whole program is created in advance on Earth. It is transmitted to the computer complex, consisting of seven computers on board the station, so that everything is done by the computer. Much is already entrusted to the computers, because the station is being brought into permanent operating mode gradually, with thorough testing of all systems. For the first time, using the new technology, the crew has literally just executed one of the operations on orienting the station. This operation is one of so-called 'gravitational stabilization'. On the Salyut-6 and Salyut-7 stations this was carried out manually.

In a communications session Leonid Kizim speaks about how it felt to carry out this operation using computer technology. The digital computer complex on the Mir makes it possible for the crew to solve many complex tasks. Having given the digital machine the command on gravitational stabilization, it took the station out of the cosmonauts' hands into its own and continued to maintain the gravitational orientation.

NEW CHEMICAL WEAPONS PROPOSALS EXPECTED TO BOOST TALKS

LD221358 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1240 GMT 22 Apr 86

[Text] Geneva, 22 Apr (TASS) -- The new proposals of the Soviet Union on banning chemical weapons, announced by General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev in Berlin at the 11th SED Congress, were proposed in Geneva today at the disarmament conference.

These proposals allow an elimination of the differences so far existing at the talks and resolute progress forward in working out a convention that would ensure full and universal destruction of chemical weapons by the end of the present century.

The Soviet Union, as was said in the 15 January statement by M. Gorbachev, favors the speedy total elimination of chemical weapons and of the very industrial basis for their manufacture. Our country is prepared to provide an up-to-date declaration of the locations of enterprises for the production of chemical weapons and a cessation of their production; to start working out procedures for destroying the manufacturing basis; and also to begin, soon after the appropriate convention enters force, eliminating stocks of chemical weapons. And all of this would be carried out under strict supervision, including international on-site verification.

The new Soviet proposals proceed from the statement of 15 January. Their essence was set out by the USSR representative at the disarmament conference, Viktor Israelyan.

They envisage that the destruction of chemical weapon stocks be started by every state taking part in the convention no later than 6 months, and the destruction or dismantling of installations for their production no later than 1 year after the convention comes into force. Moreover, 30 days after that time, the participants will have to declare the exact location of every installation for the production of chemical weapons, including components for so-called binary weapons. This applies to any such installation, irrespective of whether they are state or privately owned.

The USSR proposals allow an effective, timely cessation of the production of chemical weapons. Every participant state, immediately the convention comes into force, will have to halt all activity at installations for the production of chemical weapons. For the period of 3 months after the convention comes into force, those taking part will be obliged to take national measures to close down installations, such as banning occupation of the buildings, cutting off and dismantling all communications serving the installation, and so on. The Soviet representative also set out specific considerations concerning the procedures for the destruction or dismantling of these objectives.

The new proposals of the USSR give special emphasis to questions of monitoring. The Soviet Union proposes the end of every functioning installation for the production of chemical weapons, including private enterprises, be ensured by means of strict monitoring, including systematic, international on-site verification. It is a question of verifying the correctness of declarations, of the application of seals by inspectors to a site that is being closed and periodic checking that these remain intact right up to the time that the destruction or dismantling of the site begins. For purposes of effective monitoring of this plan, the Soviet Union proposes there be provisions for carrying out systematic international on-site inspections and that a system for visits to sites by international inspectors be worked out that would enable them to be present at all important operations in the destruction or dismantling of the site. Final international verification would be carried out when the process of the elimination or dismantling the whole site was completed in full.

The Soviet representative also stated that the convention must provide for measures ensuring observation and implementation by every participant state, irrespective of whether one is dealing with state or private enterprises or transnational corporations; and ensuring in the first place that the use of the commercial chemical industry for the development and production of chemical weapons is not permitted.

V. Israelyan sharply criticized the U.S. plans for the production of binary chemical weapons and for the deployment of these in the countries of Western Europe. Implementation of these plans, he noted, threatens to transform the densely populated countries of Western Europe into a potential theater of destructive chemical warfare, the main victim of which would be the civilian population. As in the case of the Pershing-2 and long-range cruise missiles, the United States is clearly playing a dishonorable game, counting on deflecting a retaliatory strike from its own territory and exposing the territories in Western Europe to binary chemical weapons. This would be reflected in a most negative way on the talks currently taking place at the disarmament conference on an all-embracing ban on chemical weapons. The Soviet Union resolutely condemns plans for the production and deployment of binary chemical weapons and considers that the United States Government must realize the responsibility for the consequences of such a step.

On the same day, the Soviet delegation gave a press conference in Geneva devoted to the new steps the Soviet Union is taking at the talks on banning chemical weapons.

The USSR's proposals immediately gave rise to lively interest among the delegations at the disarmament conference. In conference circles it is considered that they will give a powerful impulse to the talks that have been dragged out excessively because of the unconstructive position of the United States and several of its allies. The delegates attach particular importance to the bold and constructive approach of the USSR to the problem of monitoring. Many stress that it refutes completely assertions that the USSR is supposedly not interested in working out effective means for verifying fulfillment of the convention on banning chemical weapons. In this connection, it is noted here that the USSR earlier favored establishing systematic international control over the limited production of the most dangerous chemicals, the so-called hypertoxic lethal chemicals, that will be permitted under the future convention. Those taking part in the talks assess the words of the Soviet Union do not differ from its practical deeds. It is now up to those who are holding back progress at the talks under various pretexts and primarily the United States to make their reply.

ZHOLKVER ENUMERATES COUNTERMEASURES TO SDI

PM011905 Moscow NEW TIMES in English No 15, 21 Apr 86 p 31

[Staff Writer Nikita Zholkver article: "Taking up a Point"; first paragraph is reader's letter]

[Text] "Despite all your arguments I still believe in the Strategic Defence Initiative put forward by the U.S. President, for it is practically impossible to break through space defences. All your threats to take effective and inexpensive countermeasures, somewhat vague, incidentally, are, in my opinion, no more than a bluff. In fact, the Soviet Union has nothing to counterpose to the Strategic Defence Initiative" -- Harald Kinsel, Dortmund, Federal Republic of Germany.

Since you are an earnest supporter of the Strategic Defence Initiative I shall not waste time attempting to prove that it is based on a false premise and should be abandoned.

I shall only try to explain what countermeasures the Soviet Union would be able to take were SDI put into effect. But let me first make two observations.

Implementation of the SDI project will clearly give a further twist to the arms race. But it should be quite plain that this is not of our choosing and that it is not the Soviet Union that will go down in history as the country which initiated the militarization of outer space. Furthermore, in my view, SDI is not a constant like, for instance, the standard metre or kilogramme, which never change regardless of who uses them. President Reagan believes, perhaps sincerely, that SDI will defuse the nuclear mine that could blow up our planet. For Defence Secretary Weinberger, SDI is a kind of big stick, a means of wrecking any agreement with the Soviet Union. The American "new right" see in SDI the possibility of draining the Soviet Union of its resources and ruining it economically in the course of the arms race. The corporations engaged in arms manufacture do not care much to know what is said about SDI, for they are only interested in profit. The Pentagon strategists hope that SDI will enable them to build a space umbrella for protection against a retaliatory blow. And, lastly, your chancellor probably hopes that with the aid of SDI, the Federal Republic will be able to overcome its "nuclear inferiority complex" and gain access to new types of strategic weapon. It is not clear from your short letter what variant of SDI you would choose. But I imagine you would like a combination of the last two.

And now about countermeasures the Soviet Union is likely to take. Laser stations in orbit for military purposes can be wrecked quite easily. Since they are intended chiefly for destroying strategic ballistic missiles, they will prove virtually ineffective against specially developed small-size missiles with different basing modes and high thrust loading. The Sprint missile, adopted for service in the United States some years ago, has similar properties.

Among other possible counter-measures are satellites filled with explosives, sent into parallel orbits and blown up on ground command, or ground-based lasers. It is cheaper and simpler to produce lasers on earth than in outer space. Besides, the targets -- stations put by the enemy into orbit for military purposes -- are larger than ballistic missiles. Space platforms are fewer, and they remain in the field of vision for quite a long time. This means that the beam need not be redirected quickly, and there will be enough time to aim carefully. The beam can therefore be less powerful.

Nor is it possible to protect a space platform from a cloud of small particles moving towards it at high speed. A particle weighing 30 grams and flying at a speed of 15 kilometres per second can pierce a steel shell 15 centimetres thick.

I have mentioned only a few of the means of destroying the components of a space-based anti-missile defence. It is not even necessary to annihilate all the components: A small breach in this defence will be enough to deal the enemy a crushing blow.

The upgrading and buildup of the strategic arsenal are other possible countermeasures. They would be in violation of existing strategic arms treaties, but, I stress, in forced violation. Such measures include, firstly, an increase in the number of intercontinental ballistic missiles and dummy missiles. This will create more difficulties for the detection systems of space-based anti-missile defence, lower the effectiveness of interception and, accordingly, enhance the penetrating capability of intercontinental ballistic missiles.

Another means of maintaining the possibility of delivering a retaliatory knock-out strike is to increase the potential of weapons which it is not yet possible to intercept.

I have in mind submarine-based ballistic missiles launched on flat trajectories, or cruise missiles with different modes of basing. None of the proposed variants of the space shield guarantees the detection and interception of these weapons.

I would also like to mention countermeasures that will protect intercontinental ballistic missiles from being hit by the laser beam. One of them is changing the intensity and configuation of the missile-engine flame, for this is the source of infrared radiation by which the laser beam is guided onto the rocket body. If the intensity and configuration of the flame are altered, and that can easily be done with the aid of propellant additives, it will become virtually impossible to guide the beam onto a rocket and fix it on the rocket body. There are also various methods of protecting the rocket body from the effect of the laser beam.

All this is fact, not fiction. The source is the report, "Large-Scale Anti-Missile System and International Security," compiled by the Soviet Scientists' Committee for Peace, Against Nuclear War Threat. I can assure you, that this report was prepared by competent, authoritative people.

Soviet scientists have concluded that space-based anti-missile defence is incapable of ensuring reliable protection from a retaliatory blow. The cost of countermeasures would amount to only a fraction of that of the SDI programme. Incidentally, a similar conclusion has been drawn by Dr Bernard Feld of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and many other American scientists.

I want to end my reply as I began it. An arms race in outer space, laser stations, anti-missiles, countermeasures are not of our choosing. As for the bluff you mentioned in your letter, it is Americans who are bluffing, as in poker. They have a poor hand but they are behaving as if they held a royal flush, oblivious of the fact that it is dangerous to play for high stakes in the nuclear age.

DUBININ: NO NEED FOR FOREIGN ASSISTANCE AT CHERNOBYL

LD011728 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1638 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] New York, 1 May (TASS) -- Yuriy Dubinin, the USSR's permanent representative at the United Nations, has expressed gratitude to the chairman of the 40th session of the General Assembly and to the delegations of the session who have expressed their sympathy to the Soviet Government and people in connection with the accident at the Chernobyl atomic power station. Speaking at today's plenary sitting of the session, he informed delegates about the accident that occurred and about the measures for overcoming its consequences. Radioactivity on the territory of the AES [Atomic Emission Spectioscopy] and in the power station settlement has fallen by 1. 5-2 times, he announced. Measurements carried out by specialists using monitoring apparatus show that there is no chain fission reaction in the nuclear fuel, and that the reactor is in a smothered [zaglushennyy] state. Specialized subunits equipped with the necessary modern technology and effective means have been called in to carry out work in cleaning contaminated areas in the adjacent locality, which is now under way. Assistance is still being rendered to the victims, who do not include foreign citizens.

No appeals have come in to competent Soviet organizations from foreign citizens in the Soviet Union (in particular, specialists or tourists) in connection with the accident. The Soviet Union has enough material at its disposal, and scientific and technical capabilities [vozmozhnosti] for the work on eliminating the consequences of the accident. There is no need for the assistance of other states at the present stage.

The USSR's permanent representative at the United Nations rejected the rumor being spread by some agencies in the West that allegedly thousands of people were killed in the accident. In fact: 2 people were killed, a total of 197 people were hospitalized, 49 of whom left the hospital after tests [obsledovaniye]. The work of enterprises, kolkhozes, sovkhozes, and establishments is proceeding as normal.

Yu. Dubinin reported that today he visited the UN secretary general and informed him about the state of affairs concerning the elimination of the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station.

[Moscow World Service in English at 2000 GMT on 1 May adds the following:

"The condition of the air and the quality of the drinking water in Kiev and the region are not alarming.

"After the meeting with the Soviet representative, the United Nations Secretary General Perez de Cuellar expressed satisfaction with the fact that the situation at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant was under control."]

Perez de Cuellar Informed

LD011759 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1710 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] New York, 1 May (TASS) -- After a meeting with the USSR's permanent UN representative, UN Secretary General J. Perez de Cuellar expressed satisfaction with the fact that the situation at the Chernobyl atomic power station is under control.

According to his official spokesman, Perez de Cuellar noted that the Soviet Government has informed a number of European states about the accident and the steps taken to eliminate its consequences so that the governments of countries that might be affected can take the necessary measures to ensure the health of the population and protection of the environment. The UN secretary general, his spokesman also pointed out, is maintaining contact with Yuriy Dubinin, the USSR's permanent UN representative, and has expressed sympathy and readiness to provide assistance, if necessary. He is also in constant touch with Hans Blix, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Ukrainian Envoy Updates UN

LD011424 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1403 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] New York, 1 May (TASS) — Speaking at a plenary session of the UN General Assembly 40th session, which has resumed, Gennadiy Udovenko, the permanent representative of the Ukrainian SSR at the United Nations Organization, expressed gratitude to J. Perez de Cuellar, UN secretary general, and the delegates who expressed sympathy in connection with the disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power station. At the same time, he rejected the sensationalized reporting in the Western press, especially in the United States, of this disaster and the consequences connected with it.

Thus, for example, the Ukrainian SSR representative stated, rumors are being circulated that, as a result of the disaster, thousands of people had been killed. In actual fact, two people were killed during the disaster, 197 were sent to the hospital, 49 of whom were discharged following medical tests.

According to the Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR, the speaker stressed, the radiation situation at the Chernobyl nuclear power station and in the adjacent area is improving. The state of the air basin in the remaining part of Kiev Oblast and the city of Kiev is not causing concern. The quality of drinking water and of water in rivers and reservoirs is in keeping with standards. Constant observation of the state of the environment is being implemented. Enterprises, collective and state farms, and institutions are functioning normally.

The representative of the Ukrainian SSR noted that the Soviet side had officially informed the IAEA about the accident and the measures that have been adopted.

PRAVDA WRITER PREVIEWS TOKYO MEETING OF 'BIG SEVEN'

PM011109 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[N. Bragin article: "Partners and Rivals: Before the Meeting of the 'Seven' in Tokyo"]

[Text] The latest round of talks on economic and political problems of the seven most industrially developed capitalist countries of Western Europe, North America, and Asia opens in Tokyo in a few days. The conference of heads of state and government of the United States, Britain, France, the FRG, Italy, Japan, and Canada will take place in the Japanese capital 4 through 6 May. These conferences of the "big seven" have been held annually since 1975. According to the organizers' intentions, they are supposed to help smooth over the "sharp corners" in relations among the leading countries of the capitalist world and to demonstrate "Western unity."

In practice these meetings have become an arena for frequently fierce fighting among the partners and rivals in the struggle to strengthen one country's economic positions at the expense of others. As was noted in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress, relations among the three main centers of present-day imperialism -- the United States, Western Europe, and Japan -- are full of overt and concealed contradictions. "The economic, financial, and technological superiority over the closest competitors which the United States had until the late sixties," the report says, "has been severely tested. Western Europe and Japan have managed to crowd out the American boss in some respects. They are also challenging the United States in that traditional sphere of American hegemony, high technology."

In turn, the United States is responding with tough countermeasures against its partners, using in economic relations the same strong-arm tactics that form the basis of its foreign policy.

This year's meeting in Tokyo is the 12th. It will take place in a complex international situation, in conditions of the increasingly acute battle in the trade, economic, currency, and financial spheres between the United States, the West European countries, and Japan. The United States is approaching the next meeting of the "seven" burdened with an unprecedented trade deficit which amounts to $150 billion. To force its competitors to hold back at all costs the incursion of their goods onto the American markets while at the same time weakening those countries' protectionist measures against goods from the United States -- that is one of the goals Washington intends to achieve at the Tokyo meeting. Otherwise, according to leading American newspapers the United States could resort to retaliatory measures to limit access for goods from West European countries and Japan to its domestic market. "The United States," the French newspaper LE QUOTIDIEN DE PARIS writes, "is in the position of an executioner asking whether the condemned man would prefer to die in the electric chair of the guillotine."

The West European countries' trade balance with Japan is also extremely unfavorable. The Common Market countries' trade deficit with Japan is already in excess of $11 billion. And if Washington was recently able to secure from Japanese Prime Minister Nakasone another promise to reduce exports to the United States, Tokyo's West European partners do not have even such verbal guarantees.

It is expected that at the Tokyo meeting there will be a clash of interests between the United States and the West European countries in the sphere of currency and financial policy too. The U.S. partners are making it clear that they do not intend to submissively accept a situation where extremely high interest rates have led to an intensified influx of foreign capital investments into the United States. The American economy has gained, but production growth rates have slowed down in the other members of the "seven," and the number of unemployed has grown. On average in the West European countries more than 10 percent of the total numbers capable of work are unemployed. So, the question of unemployment is bound to feature at the Tokyo meeting.

"The developed industrial states," West Germany's WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE writes, "are seeking a way out of the financial crisis." It is expected that a clash of interests between the United States and the other members of the "seven" will take place in Tokyo on this question too. The West European partners of the United States, as well as Japan and Canada, are becoming increasingly convinced that the White House line on this question basically amounts to guaranteeing a dollar exchange rate that would meet U.S. interests above all and promote the expansion of American exports and increase the competitiveness of American goods. Otherwise, the U.S. partners will have to face American protectionism.

Washington, while twisting its allies' and partners' arms, declares their attempts to protect the domestic market against American expansion "the most negative factor in the world trade system."

The "seven" will also have to deal in Tokyo with the question of the developing countries' debt to the highly developed capitalist states. According to World Bank estimates, the total sum of the developing countries' foreign debts will exceed $1 trillion this year. These debts are the direct result of the predatory policy of monopoly capital, unequal trade, the artificially low level of raw materials prices, and the desire of transnational corportations to continue to maintain the developing countries in the position of raw materials tributaries. It would be naive to suppose that the members of the "seven" will in any way seriously change their course in relations to the developing countries' debts. Washington is publicizing the so-called "Baker plan," named for the U.S. Treasury secretary, who has called for the commercial banks to allocate an additional $20 billion for the 15 countries with the biggest debts. However, these appropriations, far from solving the debt problem, could become another link in the chain of economic fetters binding many countries.

Washington has officially announced that in Tokyo the United States will seek "closer, more effective cooperation on a wide range of not only economic, but also political issues." Among these issues, they mention the problem of East-West relations, the situation in individual regions, and so forth.

By all appearances, Washington will seek its allies' approval for its adventurist, militarist course, and in particular support for the SDI program. The United States would like to force the participants in the meeting to consent to Washington's policy of "neoglobalism," which was manifested in the bloody brigandage in Libya and other acts of U.S. state terrorism in various parts of the world. Washington does not conceal its annoyance that, except for Britain, no other West European country supported the piratical American air attack on a sovereign state and UN member -- Libya. On the basis on their own economic interests, the West European members of the "seven" and Japan refused to apply economic sanctions against that country. At the same time the United States is counting on the inconsistent position of the West European partners.

Washington, in preparing for the Tokyo meeting, makes no secret of the fact that it is relying on the class solidarity of the ruling circles of the three main centers of world imperialism in the struggle against the forces of progress, freedom, and the peoples' independence. This gamble is extremely dangerous to the future of the world. To what extent the other members of the "seven" are aware of this will be revealed by the results of the Tokyo meeting.

PRAVDA EDITORIAL ON WORLDWIDE MAY DAY CELEBRATIONS

[Editorial: "Under the Banners of May Day"]

[Text] The red flags and calico banners of May Day are fluttering over the planet. This festival of the working people's unity was born 100 years ago. Today the peoples of the world are greeting International Working People's Solidarity Day under the banner of strengthening determination to defend peace and augment successes in the struggle for Social progress.

Inspired by the historic decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, the Soviet people are marking this year's May Day with new labor achievements.

With an energy merging word and deed, they are putting into practice the party's call for the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development, the attainment of a qualitatively new condition of society, and the triumph of communist ideals. The working people of the Soviet Union are devoting their efforts and knowledge to fulfilling the Communist Party Program and are asserting and developing the innovative spirit of the 27 CPSU Congress.

The working people of the other socialist community countries are marching in one formation with Soviet people. With their selfless labor the peoples of the fraternal countries are augmenting the potential of world socialism -- a powerful influential force of the present day. It is this force that acts as a mighty barrier in the path of imperialism's aggressive aspirations. The congresses held recently -- those of the CPSU and a number of fraternal parties -- and the meetings between top state and party figures from the Warsaw Pact countries have demonstrated the unity of action of the members of the socialist community in the international arena and their determination to defend socialism's gains and safeguard world peace.

Working People's International Solidarity Day is widely marked by working people on all continents. The communist and workers parties that are now active in nearly 100 countries are a force on a truly worldwide scale, capable of firmly defending their peoples' vital interests. Communists are consistent fighters for peace and international security. For them and for all progressive mankind, the living revolutionary teaching of Marxism-Leninism is the true guide. This international teaching has withstood the test of time. It inspires the working class in the capitalist countries in their struggle against the monopolies' oppression and for their rights and democratic freedoms. On May Day the Soviet people send fraternal greetings to the communist and workers parties, declare their solidarity with the courageous fighters for social progress, and demand the liberation of those who languish in the prisons and torture chambers of imperialism and reaction.

The peoples who have thrown off colonial fetters and are defending their freedom and their states' independence in a staunch struggle against imperialism's onslaught are celebrating the holiday under the banners of May Day. The just struggle of the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America against imperialist exploitation and oppression and for an independent, progressive path of development rests on the solidarity of the socialist countries and all today's progressive forces with them. This solidarity is clearly manifested in the support for the revolutionary gains of the people of Nicaragua in the face of the aggressive intrigues of Washington and its hirelings, in the condemnation of the "undeclared wars" against Angola, Afghanistan, and other countries, and in the angry protests against the bloody piracy perpetrated by the American military in Libya and the crimes of the Israeli aggressors on Arab lands.

The May Day slogans of the CPSU Central Committee contain an appeal to the peoples of all countries to actively oppose the danger of nuclear war emanating from imperialism, to seek a total end to nuclear tests, and to prevent the militarization of space. There is now no more important task than to prevent the world from slipping toward nuclear catastrophe.

The Soviet Union has advanced the fundamentally new concept of an all-embracing system of international security and mankind's deliverance from the threat of thermonuclear catastrophe. It is set forth in M. S. Gorbachev's 15 January statement and in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the party congress. Our country has proposed solutions that would lead to a stable peace and the elimination of the threat of nuclear war. To greet the 21st century without nuclear weapons -- what more attractive prospect could there be for all mankind!

The Soviet state, while actively opposing imperialism's aggressive course in the international arena, seeks the curtailment of the arms race on earth and its prevention in space. This goal is served by the Soviet Union's concrete proposals on ending and banning nuclear explosions, creating nuclear-free zones in various parts of the world, and reducing and eliminating nuclear and chemical weapons and other means of mass destruction. These are now supplemented by the USSR's new initiative -- the proposal to reduce conventional arms on the European Continent. On the eve of May Day the Soviet Government issued a statement on ways of strengthening the security, good-neighborliness, and cooperation among the states of Asia and the Pacific.

Our country is doing everything possible to stop the nuclear train, improve the situation in the world, and ensure the political settlement of disputes and conflicts. However, U.S. and Nato imperialist circles are continuing their dangerous playing with fire, stepping up the arms race, retarding and thwarting on various pretexts the practical implementation of proposals aimed at strengthening peace both in individual regions and on the planet as a whole. The peoples are rising resolutely in the struggle against the imperialist policy of aggression and violence and for detent and the creation of reliable security on all continents.

On greeting May Day -- the festival of spring and labor -- Soviet people feel legitimate pride that the Land of the Soviets, the world's first socialist state, acts as a bulwark of peace, friendship, and cooperation among peoples.

The words of the CPSU Central Committee slogans for 1 May ring out all over the world:

Long live the Soviet Union's Leninist foreign policy -- the policy of strengthening peace and the peoples' security, of broad international cooperation!

May a world without weapons or wars triumph on the planet!

MOSCOW DAILIES PROTEST U.S. NEOGLOBALIST DOCTRINE

Far East 'Defense Initiative' Hit

PM011545 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 29 Apr 86 First Edition p 3

[Boris Barakhta "Commentator's Column": "Disguise Will Not Help"]

[Text] The Washington administration, the Japanese newspaper MAINICHI reports, intends to put forth a plan for a so-called "regional defense initiative" in the Far East. In the opinion of Pentagon strategists, realization of this intention will help draw Japan and South Korea into "star wars" preparations and activate cooperation between U.S., Japanese, and South Korean militarists in Northeast Asia.

Recently the United States has noticeably increased its pressure on Japan to involve it in R. Reagan's so-called "Strategic Defense Initiative." This question was one of the main issues, as evidenced by the press, during Pentagon chief C. Weinberger's recent visit to Tokyo. A great deal of attention was also devoted to this subject during the last meeting between the U.S. President and Prime Minister Nakasone. A delegation of leading companies from the Land of the Rising Sun, which was familiarized with the aims and tasks of the "star wars" program across the ocean in April, was "worked on" in this direction. Washington also wants to draw into this dangerous orbit the Seoul regime, which is well-known for its desire to strengthen its military cooperation with the United States and to obtain the latest American weapons. C. Weinberger also visited Seoul, incidentally.

Analyzing the facts available, the Japanese newspaper ASAHI with total justification reaches the conclusion that the foundations are now being laid for creating the mechanism for the participation in SDI of U.S. allies in the Far East.

Optical fibers, supercomputers of the next generation, lasers, the latest communications equipment, and missile guidance systems -- this is far from a complete list of the developments by Japanese firms in which the Pentagon is showing heightened interest. As a result of official Tokyo lifting the ban on supplies of dual-purpose technology and equipment to the United States, for many years now across the ocean they have been forging weapons with the help of the Land of the Rising Sun. Thus, according to figures in THE WASHINGTON POST, 80 percent of silicon chips now used in complex U.S. military equipment are Japanese-produced. "Tomahawk" cruise missiles are equipped with them, in particular. In the event of Tokyo's official involvement in realization of the "star wars" plan, Japan could rapidly become one of its main contractors.

The Pentagon's particular interest within the framework of "star wars" preparations is also aroused by South Korea's electronic engineering, metallurgical, and chemical industry. What is more, Washington evidently supposes that participation in SDI together with Seoul under the sign of the "regional defense initiative" will make the venture to involve Tokyo in the "star wars" program more attractive to the local public, because the U.S. leading role in attempts at "regional" militarization of space will thereby be slightly disguised.

No disguise, however, can hide the obvious fact that implementation of the "regional defense initiative," like implementation of the purely American SDI, can only serve to increase international tension and provoke a new spiral in the arms race.

ASEAN 'Anti-U.S.' Feelings Noted

PM300845 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[IZVESTIYA "Press Service" report: "In an Atmosphere of Contradictions"]

[Text] Before leaving for what will be his longest overseas trip, during which he will visit Indonesia and Japan, U.S. President Reagan has stopped over in Honolulu. Reagan has liaised by telephone from his residence with former Philippines President Marcos who, as is well know, was taken by U.S. aircraft from the Philippines to Honolulu. The content of Reagan's talk with Marcos has not been revealed, but REUTER stresses that Marcos has called it "frank, friendly, cordial, and prolonged." White House spokesman Larry Speakes has stressed that Marcos is "a long-standing friend and ally of the United States." The foreign press, commenting on Reagan's talks with Marcos, notes at the same time that the U.S. President has invited President of the Philippines C. Aquino to visit the United States.

Reagan is expected to leave Honolulu Tuesday for Indonesia where he will meet on the Island of Bali with the foreign ministers of the ASEAN countries. The main aim of this meeting is to step up U.S. influence in Southeast Asia. The press notes that Reagan has a difficult task. THE NEW YORK TIMES in particular acknowledges: "The White House predicts that President Reagan's meeting with the foreign ministers of a number of ASEAN countries will, to all appearances, not be a friendly one. That is borne out by officials in the region, who assert that anti-American feelings there are now stronger than ever since the end of the Vietnam war. Reagan is to meet with the foreign ministers of Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia, Brunei, and the Philippines... More than anything, economic problems serve as the source of anti-American feelings. At the end of last year, the U.S. Congress approved the bill on aid to farmers, and recently the United States decided to dump U.S. rice, prices for which are subsidized, on the world market."

These actions, the newspaper continues, have undermined the positions of the traditional rice exporters and have angered many ASEAN countries. Anti-American feelings are also growing in other parts of the region.

Ethiopian 'Secret War' Rapped

PM301317 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 28 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 1

[Own correspondent A. Palladin dispatch: "The Reagan Doctrine in Action -- The CIA's African Front"]

[Text] Washington -- THE WASHINGTON POST has reported on yet another front in the Reagan administration's undeclared war against the people of developing countries.

It emerges from an article just published by the newspaper that the CIA has for 5 years in succession now, with White House approval, spent $500,000 annually on subversive activity against the Ethiopian Government. Among other things, the CIA forwards slanderous and provocative material to Addis Ababa in the diplomatic pouch, then distributes it through its agents, the newspaper writes. Moreover, the newspaper reports that in recent months "a high-ranking administration official has begun devising covert operations to train rebels." THE WASHINGTON POST stresses that CIA staffers working in Ethiopia under diplomatic or trade representative cover are also engaged in illegal activity on the territory of a sovereign state.

Nor has their ardor been cooled by the fact that 2 years ago the local authorities exposed and expelled from the country a group of "cloak and dagger" merchants, including the head of the CIA station and his deputy. Moreover, THE WASHINGTON POST believes that this activity is becoming increasingly blatant as a result of the White House's increasing belligerence.

Reagan declared the secret war against Ethiopia in 1981, THE WASHINGTON POST continues, directing the CIA to launch a struggle against the people's government through the London-based "Democratic Ethiopian People's Alliance." Since then, the paper adds, the imposters have punctually received their pieces of silver from their masters at Langley, although they still lack any support in the homeland that they have betrayed. But, on the other hand, they are honored with respect in the White House. One of them, (Yonas Deressa), was recently accorded an audience by Reagan, who promised to take up the "Ethiopian problem" in earnest as soon as he had managed to push through Congress the bill to expand the undeclared war against Nicaragua.

Nicaragua Linked to Libya

PM300944 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 26 Apr 86 Second Edition p 5

[KRASNAYA ZVEZDA Press Service article: "Another 'Clear Signal'?"]

[Text] The facts irrefutably attest that Washington intends to use the experience of the piratical raid on the Libyan Jamahiriyah for armed interference in the affairs of other independent countries pursuing a policy that for some reason does not suit the United States.

Holding forth to representatives of the ultrareactionary Heritage Foundation organization a few days ago, the head of the White House himself not only expressed frank satisfaction with the results of the banditlike attack on Libya, but also did not try to hide the fact that the United States regards the bombing of that country as a kind of "object lesson" for other states and people. According to Reagan, that raid is a "clear signal" to the whole world concerning the intentions of the U.S. leadership.

Addressing a gathering of "hawks," the U.S. President chose Nicaragua as the next target of his threats. He laid against the Sandinist government just as absurd charges of "supporting international terrorism" as official Washington had long been making against Libya before subjecting its peaceful cities to brutal bombing. However, just as in the case of Tripoli, Reagan was unable to cite a single concrete fact to corroborate his groundless charges of "terrorims" against Managua.

U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Whitehead has also expressed himself in a similar spirit recently. He declared at hearings in the House Foreign Affairs Committee that "the United States reserves the right" to undertake punitive actions like the recent attack on Libya against any other country in the future. Whitehead made it clear that the next "lesson" might be taught precisely to Nicaragua.

U.S. CRITICIZED FOR NUCLEAR ACCIDENTS

Three Mile Island Viewed

LD011229 Moscow TASS in English 1155 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Paris May 1 TASS -- According to an AFP report from Washington, the American and international public was kept in the dark for a long time about the true scale of the 1979 accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power station in the United States and about its hazardous effects for the environment and the people.

A report prepared later by a panel of inquiry into the accident, the worst at the U.S. nuclear power stations, said that Metropolitan Edison Company which owned the station had been spreading optimistic statements for a long time in a bid to reassure the public that there was no threat to the population. The company employees falsified a big number of documents to avoid the closure of the plant.

At the time when Three Mile Island installations were still spewing radiation and dumping contaminated water into the neighboring river, AFP went on, an official spokesman for the U.S. Government maintained that the situation was under control and that there were no danger at all.

Navy 'Incidents' Recalled

PM010926 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 1 May 86 Second Edition p 3

[TASS report: "Sinister Incidents"]

[Text] San Francisco, 30 Apr -- About 30 incidents [intsidenty] involving nuclear weapons occurred in the U.S. Navy on average between 1965 and 1972. The Pentagon admits that there were 381 incidents between 1965 and 1977. According to data cited in official documents, one-third of such incidents occurred on surface ships, with 10 percent of them taking place while the ships were in port.

These figures were cited at a press conference in Seal Beach (California) by (V. Grgas), member of the city's municipal authority. He emphasized that U.S. Navy ships carrying nuclear weapons pose a serious threat for the residents of port cities and demanded that such ships no longer call at Seal Beach.

Such occurrences are now so widespread that they have even been codenamed by the U.S. Navy. For example, a particularly dangerous incident is classed as "Broken Spear," a less significant one as "Bent Spear," while all others -- "capable of posing a serious threat," according to UPI -- are codenamed "Dull Sword."

Toxic Waste Dumps Cited

LD011013 Moscow TASS in English 0945 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] New York May 1 TASS -- TASS correspondent Igor Makurin reporting:

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is conducting a seven-month-old inquiry into operations of Hooker Chemical and Plastic Corp., one of the Pentagon's contractors, which has turned the town of Niagara Falls, not far from the famed falls which gave the town its name, into a toxic dump.

Last year a highly toxic chemical -- dioxin -- was discovered in one of the central streets of the town where, in keeping with tradition, thousands of American newlyweds spend their honeymoons and where hundreds of thousands of foreign tourists come.

The content of the chemical in the samples taken was found to be 200 times the maximum permissible level. Such a content constitutes a serious health hazard.

The American public demands an early publication of the inquiry findings, but the authorities have so far refused to announce even the date when the probe will be completed.

Some eight years ago the whole of America was shocked to learn that the same Hooker Chemical and Plastic Corp. had organized 20 unsanctioned toxic waste dumps inside the town. The discovery caused a major scandal and one of the town's neighborhoods was announced a national distress site.

At approximately the same time it was discovered that back in the 1940s the company had built a chemical waste escape canal that was later filled with earth. Residential buildings went up in the area as time went on.

However, with time the toxic waste time bomb went off. By the end of the 1970s the number of different allergic, skin and other diseases has grown sharply in that neighborhood. Other disorders were detected in pregnant women and in the development of children.

Studies conducted by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the National Environmental Protection Agency revealed the presence of more than 80 toxic chemicals of which 11 were cancerogenic. [as received]

However, the troubles of Niagara Falls are not an exception in the United States. About 200 illegal sites where noxious subtances are dumped are discovered in the country every month. 90 percent of all toxic wastes are buried by companies in violation of the existing safety regulations.

There is no wonder therefore, as the NBC television company said, that almost one-half of all bodies of fresh water in the United States are fouled with industrial wastes which leads to a steady increase in the number of serious diseases.

ARTICLE ATTACKS PENTAGON PAMPHLET ON USSR MILITARY

PM011253 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Article by Yu. Viktorov: "Again a Lie in Large Circulation"]

[Text] A malicious anti-Soviet campaign has been launched across the ocean, a campaign saturated in all kinds of fabrications and insults addressed to the Soviet Union. One of the links in this unseemly activity is the new (fifth) edition of the brochure "Soviet Military Power," recently published by the Pentagon.

Like the previous editions, this unscrupulous concoction from the Pentagon kitchen abounds in false allegations and conjectures regarding the Soviet Union's policies. Vile accusations of preparing to carry out preemptive nuclear strikes and launch massive nuclear offensives are hurled at our country, which has made a unilateral pledge not to be the first to use nuclear weapons. Soviet defense countermeasures are presented to the reader as the reason compelling the United States to build up its own weapons. The authors of the brochure even try to ascribe regional conflicts to the Soviet Union when, as has long been well known, it is experts from the Pentagon and the U.S. CIA who stir up such conflicts. The reader is also "informed" that the USSR is supposedly violating obligations assumed under treaties and agreements. In the end, the authors of the libel, to quote the chief of the Pentagon himself, "staggered" even themselves with the "Soviet military threat" they had invented. And what can be said of American readers after this? They are frightened? Of course. This, after all, is the aim of the Pentagon-published brochure, whose popularizer is none other than the U.S. secretary of defense.

Publicizing the brochure at press conferences and briefings, C. Weinberger has fanatically laid the blame for everything at someone else's door. In saying that the United States supposedly lags behind the USSR in military respects, C. Weinberger has evidently forgotten his own words from the report to Congress for fiscal 1987: "We now have the most effective Armed Forces the United States has ever had at its disposal in peacetime."

Balking at nothing, the authors of "Soviet Military Power" and their chief likewise gamble on discrediting Soviet peace initiatives and on presenting USSR foreign policy in a distorted light. Every possible attribute is drawn from the arsenal of U.S. propaganda so that, having depicted the Soviet Union as a "threat to international peace," chauvinist attitudes in the country can be raised.

The lie, spread over the 156 glossy pages of the brochure "Soviet Military Power," cannot fail to promot the question: Who needs this, and why? Who needs this now, when the realities of the nuclear space age demand that we rise above national egoism and tactical calculations, disputes, and discord for the sake of preserving the main benefit of peace and a safe future? Well, such forces do exist in the United States -- forces connected with military business, which personify the military-industrial complex and make billions out of the arms race. These forces look for any occasion to crush the beginnings of hope for an improvement in the international situation.

Right-wing U.S. circles have not given up their illusory hopes of gaining military superiority over the USSR. They continue to load the U.S. military-industrial conveyor belt with more and more new types of weapons. They cherish the dream of fabulous profits from the production of space-based weapons and hope to return to the situation when the United States enjoyed a monopoly on nuclear weapons. But these times have slipped irrevocably into the past. Today you will not gain security for yourself through force of arms. Security can only be ensured for everyone and only through detente, disarmament, and political solutions to international issues. And this sickens the champions of war.

In order to justify U.S. militarist aspirations and deceive the world public and the American people, in the brochure "Soviet Military Power" Washington propaganda attempts to reanimate the myth of the "Soviet military threat." It is no accident that the publication of this opus coincides with the period when the debate on financing U.S. military programs is heating up in the United States. By pressuring Congress and intimidating it with imaginary "dangers," the U.S. Defense Department is counting on once again securing a substantial sum for implementing its strategic and other military programs. Using various false arguments, Washington would like to whitewash its policy of state terrorism and so-called "neoglobalism," which has found its most brutal practical embodiment in the U.S. aggression against Libya. This policy of disregarding the interests of small states and people provokes indignation throughout the world. Under these conditions the U.S. Administration is trying its utmost to shift responsibility for the continuing arms race and for the appearance of deadlock situations in negoitations to the Soviet Union. At the same time the ground is being prepared for justifying actions tending to shake the foundations of an ultimately undermine existing Soviet-American accords. This is the real meaning of the new Pentagon brochure.

BOVIN QUESTIONS REPERCUSSIONS OF LIBYA RADIO ON SUMMIT

PM011031 [Editorial Report] Moscow KOMSOMOLSKAYA PRAVDA in Russian on 25 April carries on page 3 under the rubric "Direct Line" and the headline "Politics Are More Complicated Than The Weather... "A 3,000-word telephone interview with "the well-known journalist and international expert Aleksandr Yevgenyevich Bovin" organized by Yu. Popov and A. Svistunov.

The date and place are not given. In the interview, Bovin briefly answers numerous readers' telephoned questions about various international issues and his own life as a journalist. In conclusion, Bovin gives his opinion of the U.S. bomb raids on Libya and comments:

"Every Soviet person is asking: How will the White House's criminal adventure affect the forthcoming summit meeting? We should obviously be in no hurry to answer. But the question must be put."

U.S. OFFICIALS VIOLATING HELSINKI FINAL ACT

LD012038 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1603 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Bern, 1 May, (TASS) -- TASS correspondent Yu. Vykhodtsev reports:

At the conference of experts on contacts between people, institutions, and organizations that is being held here fresh facts are emerging about the gross violation of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act by the U.S. authorities. While arguing bombastically about the entitlement of "ordinary" people to meetings and contacts, the Reagan administration has nevertheless refused entry visas to a further group of representatives of Soviet trade unions, which was due to visit the United States for May Day celebrations. "The supporters of human rights" in Washington have cynically stated in this connection their intention to continue this in the future by not permitting Soviet workers into the United States on the grounds that there is allegedly no freedom for the trade-union movement in the USSR.

It is noteworthy that precisely over the past few days the head of the U.S. delegation at the Bern conference has repeatedly been advocating the broadest contacts between "ordinary people." At the same time he has been speaking profusely about "violations" in this sphere in the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, "forgetting" to mention the state of affairs in his own country. He also "forgot" about the fact that there is indeed in Moscow at the present time a group of American workers who arrived in the USSR under the accord on exchanges. However, as attested by facts, an exchange has not taken place, and this is by no means through the fault of the Soviet side.

Such actions by the U.S. Administration are a challenge to the work public. This is the way that the U.S. behavior is being characterized by many of those participating in the Bern conference.

CANADA REBUKED FOR 'SECRET' SDI AGREEMENTS

PM301549 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 29 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Article by V. Mikheyev: "Canada and SDI: Shotgun Wedding"]

[Text] "We have constant fears with respect to the United States, but the majority of Americans know little about us and take even less account of us." This opinion, with which many inhabitants of the Land of the Maple Leaf would agree, is that of (Tam Dichmen), who wrote the book "What Every American Should Know About Canada" ["Chto Kazhdyy Amerikanets Dolzhen znat o Kanade"]. The author was prompted by a desire to dispel as far as possible the rigid prejudices of some of Canada's southern neighbors, the anecdotal culmination of which to this day is the story of the American who appeared in Montreal in mid-July dressed in full ski rig. A readily understandable desire. Although the common border between the two countries is over 5,500 miles long and they are separated by neither a language barrier nor a diplomatic "vow of silence," finding a common language, more so understanding each other, is an eternal problem for them.

The seething political passions around the recent visit to Washington by Canadian Prime Minister B. Mulroney are all the more natural. The result of the talks in the White House was the extension for a further 5 years of the U.S.-Canadian agreement on North American Aerospace Defense -- NORAD. Ottawa regularly swears an oath of loyalty to military-strategic ties with its powerful suzerain. This has become an unpleasant tradition. This time the "test" of loyalty set up every 5 years took place against the background of tougher demands from the Reagan administration that Canada be turned into a junior partner in the implementation of the "star wars" program. They intend to recruit the Canadians to the campaign for shock space armaments with the aid of the existing mechanism of military cooperation -- through the NORAD Joint Command.

In 1981, a brief but fundamentally important thesis stipulating that the commitments assumed by Ottawa did not include the undertaking "to take part in active measures to ensure ABM defense" was removed from the NORAD agreement. The vague formulation put into the documents concealed the fear that the Americans would be inclined to continue to assign their northern neighbor the undemanding role of the Pentagon's testing ground. By citing the existing 1972 ABM Treaty, pro-American politicians succeeded 5 years ago in removing this point from the text of the agreement. Before B. Mulroney's trip to Washington, those opposed to vying with the United States in the military-strategic respect pointed to the "star wars" plans as a time bomb under the foundation of the bilateral Soviet-U.S. ABM Treaty and demanded that the omitted point be restored. But the leader of the Canadian Tories followed the lead of his "big brother."

Sensitive to any encroachments by the "southerners" on its sovereignty, Canada did not take well to the announcement that there is a secret list of agreements providing for the deployment of U.S. Navy nuclear depth charges, the entry of U.S. submarines carrying nuclear weapons into its ports, the possible use of the new radar warning line in the Canadian Arctic for SDI purposes, and so forth. It has emerged that the National Defense Department has not considered it necessary to provide notification of 44 (!) secret accords even for the Canadian Parliament deputies, deliberately providing them with an "abbreviated version" of the list of bilateral agreements.

Although Defense Minister E. Nielsen's efforts at justification had something in common with the election slogans and arguments of the Conservatives (claiming that participation in the "star wars" program will strengthen "special relations" with the United states, create jobs, and so forth), they fell on unfavorable ground.

Canadian public opinion is rejecting more resolutely than ever behind the scenes deals fraught with the danger of the country's involvement in Washington's confrontation course, for which there are at least two reasons.

First, since the seventies the Land of the Maple Leaf has sought an opportunity to win as much "freedom to manuever" as possible within the framework of the military-political alliance with the United States. It has been pushed onto this path by the interest of Canada's own business, which is seeking to strengthen its international positions. The genuinely independent foreign policy developed in the spirit of detente and good-neighborliness with the USSR served as a condition for this. In this policy was seen an alternative to the hard-line subordination and "bloc discipline" of the "cold war" times, in other words, unquestioning obedience to the Americans, which reduced Canada to the status of a third-rate ally whose voice was scarcely audible.

Since then, Ottawa has formed the conviction that nuclear weapons cannot be deployed on Canadian soil in peace time, there followed the decision to abolish the bases existing in the country for the nuclear-capable (Bomark-v) air defense missiles, while defense strategy should be aimed primarily at safeguarding national sovereignty.

Second, despite the persistent billing of the "star wars" program, Canadians have rightly seen in it a new twist in the spiral of the arms race. The Liberal; New Democratic; and Communist Parties and the Canadian Workers congress, which speaks for 2 million citizens; and antiwar organizations, particularly the Canadian alliance for peace, formed in November 1985; have opposed and continue to oppose vigorously connivance in the "crusade" into space.

On 7 September 1985, the broad opposition front forced B. Mulroney's cabinet to decline Washington's "invitation" to joint the program to militarize outer space. At the same time, in order to avoid an access of great-power anger, Ottawa gave its blessing to private companies to seek contracts from the Pentagon as "star wars" subcontractors. Nonetheless "no diplomatic eulogizing can soften the blow that Canada has inflicted by refusing to take part in a program so dear to President Reagan's heart," the TORONTO STAR wrote.

The Canadian public welcomed this year's Soviet peace initiatives as signals of good-will and as a specific, realistic program of action in the struggle for a world without wars and weapons. This was a mobilizing factor for the antiwar movement in Canada, which the ruling circles are increasingly having to reckon with. And this is not to the liking of the guardians of Canada's "political reliability" from Washington.

After President Reagan's revelations during talks with the Canadian premier it is becoming clear that the United States has not abandoned its plans. And the tractability displayed by Ottawa only reinforces the suspicion that the conservatives are also considering pushing SDI through by the "back door," believing that their refusal to accept it with open arms in September last year has already taken the steam out of the champions of a nuclear freeze and disarmament.

The specific plans for the "betrothal" of Canada and SDI are becoming public. The report by (DZH. Payk) from the Federation of American Scientists, discusses the tests scheduled for 1988 for a carrier-based optical aviation system designed to detect and identify targets and guide missiles to them. Individual components of this system, (Dzh. Payk) points out, together with other important elements of the ABM system like radar stations and interceptor missiles, could be deployed on Canadian territory.

If this were to happen, Canada would assume a substantial share of responsibility for the violation of military-stragetic equilibrium in the world and the transfer of the arms race into outer space.

PRAVDA REPORTS UNEN CRITICISM OF MPRP ORGANIZATIONS

PM011539 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Apr 86 First Edition p 5

[Own correspondent Yu. Shpakova dispatch: "Leaders' Duty"]

[Text] Ulaanbaatar, 29 Apr -- The Mongolian capital has a major party organization. It constitures a cohesive and efficient detachment of the MPRP, UNEN writes today. Party members are in the vanguard of socialist competition to provide a worthy greeting to the 19th MPRP Congress.

The newpaper describes in detail the successes achieved by the city's party organizations in the struggle to enhance the efficiency of social production. The last 5-year plan's targets were met ahead of schedule, 200 million tugriks-worth of industrial output was produced in excess of the plan, and output quality was markedly improved. However, UNEN also points out that existing reserves are far from being fully utilized and results could be considerably better.

Delegates at an MPRP city report and election conference held here, the newpaper writes, drew attention to serious shortcomings in the activity of a number of party organizations and fundamentally criticized outmoded forms and methods of leadership. They cited instances of a lack of discipline and erratic work on the part of some enterprises and construction sites and considerable errors in educating working people. These shortcomings, the publication says, must be removed in the very near future.

TASS CITES DPRK PAPERS ON NEVADA TESTS

PM011107 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 1 May 86 Second Edition p 1

[TASS report: "Source of Tension"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 30 Apr -- The DPRK press assesses the U.S. continuation of the nuclear tests in Nevada as an attempt to achieve military superiority over the USSR. While the Soviet Union is putting forward constructive proposals aimed at preventing the arms race in space and halting it on earth, U.S. imperialism, in activating militariat preparations, has in fact embarked on the path of undermining the Soviet-U.S. accords reached at summit level in Geneva, MINJU CHOSON notes. Under these conditions the USSR has been compelled to repeal the unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions previously introduced.

Washinton's actions are generating the legitimate anger of all peace-loving peoples of the world who are demanding the abolition of nuclear weapons, NODONG SINMUN stresses. The buildup of U.S. nuclear armaments together with the piratical aggression against Libya and the intrigues against Nicaragua are evidence that U.S. imperialism is the main source of international tension.

PRAVDA REPORTS ON SOVIET-INDIAN ECONOMIC TALKS

Arkhipov, Bhagat Give Speeches

PM011303 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 29 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "An Important Landmark"]

[Text] Delhi, 28 Apr -- The 10th session of the Soviet-Indian Intergovernmental Commission for Economic and Scientific-Technical Cooperation opened today in the Indian capital. The two countries' delegations are headed by commission cochairmen I.V. Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and Bali Ram Bhagat, Indian foreign minister.

Opening the session, B.R. Bhagat expressed confidence that it would be an important landmark in the development of bilateral economic ties, which began more than 3 decades ago. Cooperation between India and the Soviet Union has great significance for India in view of the still unequal economic relations between leading capitalist states and developing countries, the minister noted. This cooperation has played a significant role in the Republic's economic development and has helped India to deal with its difficult economic situation in recent years. We consider the Soviet people to be our friend — a friend who has always come to our assistance when times are difficult for us.

The world today is faced with terrible danger, B.R. Bhagat went on to point out. India is firmly in favor of nuclear disarmament and the adoption of urgent measures to prevent a nuclear war. This is precisely the aim of the joint initiatives of the authors of the Delhi Declaration -- India, Greece, Sweden, Tanzania, Mexico, and Argentina. In this connection the Indian government welcomed the all-embracing program of stage-by-stage nuclear disarmament put forward by the Soviet Union with the aim of completely eliminating nuclear weapons by the end of the century and also preventing the militarization of space.

In his speech I.V. Arkhipov stated that the multifaceted nature of Soviet-Indian relations greatly pleases Soviet people. Cooperation between the USSR and India, he noted, is an example of the new type of relations between states with different social systems, based on the principles of full equality, mutual respect, sovereignty, and noninterference in one another's internal affairs.

Details on Cooperation Plans

PM011233 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 May 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report under general headline "USSR-Indian Borders of Cooperation"]

[Text] Delhi, 30 Apr -- The 10th session of the intergovernmental Soviet-Indian Commission for Economic and Scientific-Technical Cooperation has completed its work in the Indian capital. The two countries' delegations were headed by commission co-chairmen I.V. Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and B.R. Bhagat, Indian foreign minister.

Questions connected with the state of and prospects for the further development of cooperation within the framework of implementing the agreements signed during the official friendly visit to the USSR by Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in May 1985 were the subject of discussion at the session.

The commission expressed satisfaction with the state of development in Soviet-Indian trade, economic, scientific, and technical ties, particularly in the fuel and energy industry sectors. The successful construction, with USSR assistance, of India's largest heating and power plant, the "Vindhyachal", and the metallurgical plant at Visakhapatnam; and also the completion of work to increase the output of the metallurgical combine at Bokarao to 4 million metric tons of steel per year, the geological exploration for oil, and the overhaul of oil and gas boreholes were noted. Steps taken to organize production cooperation in machine building and other industrial sectors were approved. The sides expressed interest in establishing production cooperation, and in this connection they reached agreement on preparing programs for long-term production cooperation.

It is planned to complete in the near future the drawing up of long-term sector programs for cooperation, including the spheres of ferrous metallurgy, communications, irrigation, and agriculture, and to begin preparation of a new long-term program of economic, trade, and scientific-technical cooperation for the period through 2000. An accord was reached on more extensive cooperation in building hydroelectric power installations in India, in the chemical and petrochemical industry, and in the sphere of electronics, computer equipment, and communications. The commission outlined measures to develop new forms of cooperation, including joint production and the construction of industrial and civil projects in third countries. Organizations in the two countries have been instructed to prepare proposals on further improving the structure of Soviet-Indian trade and substantially enlarging the itemized list of commodities available with the aim of contributing to the development of stable trade in the long term. The commission noted the successful development of scientific and technical cooperation between the two countries.

I.V. Arkhipov and B.R. Bhagat signed a protocol on the results of the 10th session. Addressing the signing ceremony, the Indian foreign minister stressed that the work of the commission had proceeded in the spirit of friendship, sincereity, and cordiality characteristic of relations between the two countries. He expressed confidence that in the years to come Indian-Soviet cooperation will increase and grow stronger.

IZVESTIYA REPORTS KESHTMAND DINNER SPEECH IN MOSCOW

PM011507 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 22 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report on speech delivered at 21 April Kremlin dinner by Soltan 'Ali Keshtmand, member of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the DRA Council of Ministers, under general headline: "In a Friendly Atmosphere"]

[Text] Comrade S.A. Keshtmand's speech

Allow me, he said, to express heartfelt gratitude to the Soviet Government, the Soviet people, and to you personally, Nikolay Ivanovich [Ryzhkov], for the hospitality and warm welcome shown our delegation in the capital of the great Soviet Union and for the frank, businesslike talks which have proceeded in a spirit of great mutual understanding and true friendship. The results of these talks and the decisions made during them have great significance for the comprehensive and fruitful development of Afghan-Soviet friendship and economic cooperation and for the realization of the socioeconomic aims proclaimed and in the process of being implemented by the PDPA.

Our visit to the Soviet Union is taking place soon after the completion of the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, which I was fortunate enough to attend as part of the PDPA delegation. The Afghan people followed the work of the congress with unflagging attention. They took the decisions of the Soviet Communists' forum very much to heart, the pivot of this forum being the Political Report of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. His report is a document of great historical importance and a clear example of a revolutionary and class-based evaluation of reality and the development of a long-term program to execute practical tasks in domestic and foreign policy.

The participation of our delegation was, as Comrade B. Karmal, our party's general secretary, said, "invaluable training in true patriotism and internationalism and in building a new society." The spirit of renewal, hope, and revolutionary enthusiasm and determination with which the historic decisions of your congress are imbued attests to the dynamism and great vital force of socialist society and to the nobility of the CPSU's aspirations.

At the 17th PDPA Central Committee plenum our party ardently approved and supported the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the great contribution of the CPSU and the Soviet state to the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and strengthening of peace on earth.

The Afghan people enthusiastically welcomed the program to eliminate mass destruction weapons put forward in the statement by M.S. Gorbachev on 15 January 1986, and, as the first step -- the total cessation of all nuclear tests, and also the concept of an all-embracing international security system approved by the 27th CPSU Congress. A recent example of this policy is M.S. Gorbachev's proposal to considerably reduce conventional arms and armed forces in Europe. Like all peace-loving people on earth, we want the colossal wealth accumulated by mankind to be used exclusively for the purpose of improving man's life and for satisfying his material and spiritual needs, and not for the purpose of death and destruction.

Unfortunately, facts attest that the United States is not only failing to take positive steps in response to the Soviet Union's constructive proposals, but is also striving in every way possible to further increase international tension. The latest aggressive actions of the American military against independent Libya are criminal and adventurist. The Afghan people, together with all peace-loving forces on earth, decisively condemn such actions and demand an end to them.

Our delegation's visit to the Soviet Union is taking place at a time when people are celebrating the 116th anniversary of the birth of V.I. Lenin -- the great leader of the proletariat and all the world's working people. All progressive mankind is marking this important date at a time when the 27th CPSU Congress once again confirmed the correctness of the Leninist course -- a course of peace, social progress, and freedom.

The name of the great Lenin, the founder of the first socialist state in the world, is written in the history of the revolutionary movement. V.I. Lenin laid the foundations of Afghan-Soviet friendship, which has triumphantly come through all the tests of time and has today risen to the higher level of revolutionary solidarity. We will never forget the prominent role played by V.I. Lenin in formulating the theory of the revolutionary and national liberation movement, of which the April Revolution in our country is a part.

We highly value Afghan-Soviet friendship and the international aid given by the Soviet Union to the revolutionary Afghan people, whose first inspirer and organizer was the great Lenin.

In a few days it will be 8 years since the victory of the April Revolution in our country, which initiated a fundamental restructuring of the Afghan people's political and economic life and the building of a new democratic society based on the principles of social justice and equality for all of our motherland's nationalities, ethnic groups, and tribes. And for all these years Afghanistan has had to rebuff large-scale aggression unleashed by international imperialism headed by the United States, regional reaction, and the overthrown exploitative classes. The struggle for national sovereignty and independence compels us to divert considerable efforts and means from peaceful, creative work. In past years the Afghan people have suffered great human loss and material damage in the range of $1 billion.

Despite the difficult war conditions, the PDPA consistently pursues a course aimed at making important changes in the political, economic, and social spheres. The new political system engendered by the revolution is operating increasingly efficiently. Elections of people's representatives to local organs of power are gradually being held throughout the country. The ranks of mass sociopolitical organizations, and primarily those of the National Fatherland Front which unites all of Afghanistan's patriotic forces within its ranks, are growing. With every passing day the revolution's social base is expanding and further steps are being taken to democratize the state apparatus. Equal rights are granted to all of the country's citizens irrespective of their social status, nationality, sex, or religious beliefs. General elections to the supreme organs of power will soon be held and the new constitution of Afghanistan established. The broadest popular masses fervently support the revolution's aims, which is attested to by the results of the Loya Jirga and the Supreme Jirga of border tribes, which totally and fully approved our domestic and foreign policy and the policy of Afghan-Soviet friendship.

A jirga was recently held in Kabul at the request of free tribes. A jirga decision noted that tribe representatives and leaders have discussed the questions of ending Pakistan's aggression and the criminal activities of counterrevolutionary groups in regions in which tribes live and also on Afghan territory. What is more, decisions were taken on strengthening the unity of the Pashtun and Baluchi tribes and also on the Afghan nationalities in their joint struggle against imperialism and reaction.

Our party and the DRA Government conduct purposeful work to overcome the country's economic and social backwardness -- the legacy of former exploitative regimes.

Socialist states and primarily our great neighbor -- the Soviet Union -- give great, quite invaluable assistance in the implementation of our economic and social programs.

With all-around assistance from the USSR, more than 100 projects have been built in Afghanistan which play a decisive role in strengthening the country's economy. This assistance is given in virtually every sector of our economy -- in the formation and development of its energy, fuel, mining, machine building, and transport base; in light industry and the food industry, agriculture and irrigation, the construction and restoration of roads; in housing construction, the building of public health care and education establishments, and in the training of national cadres. Enterprises built and put into operation with the help of the Soviet Union provide approximately 45 percent of the state budget revenue from domestic sources and produce 75 percent of industrial products in the state sector.

The successes achieved in recent years have allowed us to switch over to the long-term planning of our economy. The Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the DRA for 1986-1991 were recently worked out and approved at the 17th PDPA Central Committee plenum.

The Basic Guidelines envisage speeding up the country's economic and social development, increasing the volume of industrial and agricultural production, continuing the democratic land and water reform, improving the people's material and cultural living standards, strengthening our defense capability, and broadening the revolution's social base by strengthening the alliance between the workers and the peasantry and ensuring extensive participation by national businessmen in the country's economic development and the involvement of all patriotic forces in resolving state matters. By the end of the 5-year plan we intend to increase the total national income by 25 percent, industrial production by 38 percent, and gross agricultural output by 14-16 percent.

With economic and technical assistance from the USSR, it is planned to create more than 130 very important projects in virtually every sector of the national economy over the 5-year period. We are sure that with the fraternal assistance and support of our Soviet friends, the DRA will be able to successfully fulfill the great tasks facing us.

Being an Asian country, nonaligned and revolutionary Afghanistan has a particular interest in the problem of ensuring security in Asia.

I should like to stress in this connection that the well-known proposals of the DRA Government and the steps it has taken to reach a political settlement of the situation surrounding Afghanistan completely fit in with the Soviet Union's concept of peace on the Asian Continent. Graphic confirmation of the sincere desire of the DRA and the USSR to reach a political solution to the problem was provided by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's statement at the 27th CPSU Congress on our countries coordinating a gradual withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan "as soon as a political settlement is reached which will ensure a real end to external armed interference in the DRA's internal affairs and reliably guarantee that this interference will not be resumed."

We also have a right to expect the same responsible, realistic approach from the other side. Unfortunately, while it says it is in favor of normalizing relations with the DRA, at the same time Pakistan is stepping up interference in Afghanistan's internal affairs from its own territory, this interference being directed by the United States, its Western allies, and regional reactionaries.

But every attempt by enemies of the April Revolution to return Afghanistan to the grim past is doomed to fail. The vigilant and revolutionary Afghan people will not allow this to happen. In our struggle we can feel the loyal, reliable support of the great Soviet Union, the socialist countries, and the world revolutionary movement. Their wealth of revolutionary experience and all-round fraternal help and assistance augmented by the efforts of our party and people are a guarantee of the ultimate victory and triumph of the April Revolution's ideas.

Allow me once again to thank the Government of the Soviet Union and all Soviet people for the great international assistance they are giving revolutionary Afghanistan, which is defending its independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, and a better future.

We are deeply convinced that the inviolable friendship and cooperation between our countries and peoples will strengthen and develop.

We wish the fraternal people of the Land of the Soviets, the CPSU, the CPSU Central Committee, and its general secretary, Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, great success in executing the tasks of communist building in your country!

We wish you personally, Nikolay Ivanovich, and the entire Soviet Government great success in resolving the tasks of your country's economic and social development! Long live inviolable Afghan-Soviet friendship! Long live peace throughout the world!

AFGHANISTAN SUMMONS IRANIAN CHARGE D'AFFAIRES

LD011419 Moscow TASS in English 1234 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Kabul May 1 TASS -- As was reported by the BAKHTAR news agency, the charge d'affaires ad interim of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Afghanistan has been summonned to the Foreign Ministry of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. It was stated to him that on April 21 Iranian television transmitted a programme involving two Afghan counterrevolutionaries. They grossly attacked the Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, the Afghan-Pakistani negotiations in Geneva and tried to present in a false light the historical goodneighbourly relations between the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan and the USSR.

The Government of Iran encourages activities of Afghan counterrevolutionary gangs, assists in carrying out malicious anti-Afghan propaganda campaigns and staging aggression against Afghanistan. This, as is noted in the statement, is contrary to the Afghan Government's constructive efforts aimed at ensuring compliance with the principles of peaceful coexistence and goodneighbourliness, non-interference into internal affairs of other states, and provides evidence that the Iranian authorities conduct an irresponsible and unfriendly policy towards the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. The Democratic Republic of Afghanistan firmly denounces these hostile actions and demands an immediate end to these actions.

REPORT FROM CAPTURED 'DUSHMAN LAIR' IN DRA

PM011006 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 27 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Report by TASS correspondent O. Kuzmin "specially for KRASNAYA ZVEZDA": "Dushman Lair Destroyed"]

[Text] Kabul, 26 Apr -- Zhawar -- the area that bears this name is in Khowst district, near the border with Pakistan. Until recently there was a large Afghan gang base there, including fortified positions, fire positions, weapons, ammunition, and food dumps. Imperialist propaganda called Zhawar a "freedom-fighters' unassailable citadel." At the invitation of the DRA Armed Forces command, a group of Soviet and Afghan journalists visited the area which had already been completely cleared of bandits. We saw camouflaged antiaircraft gun positions, rows of trenches, minefields, and caves used for storing Western-made weapons delivered from Pakistan. The base used to supply marauding gangs in a number of provinces in the Republic. The wish here was to set up some kind of "free territory of Afghanistan" and form a government acceptable to the West. The base was a training center for dushmans and their leaders used to go there from Pakistan.

The captured weapons plainly show who the counterrevolutionaries' patrons are and who is fueling the undeclared war against the DRA. "Made in the USA", "Britain", "FRG", "China" -- this is the sort of thing one saw at the improvished exhibition of trophies.

"The destruction of the base," Abdul Gafur, who led the combat actions, said, "was a big event in the district's life. Now the population can have a quite life -- we will make sure their tranquillity and peaceful labor are not disturbed again." The destruction of another bandit nest -- Ilmarkhavzay -- is almost complete. With its elimination the district will be rid of dushmans.

REAGAN MEETS WITH ASEAN MEMBERS ON BALI

LD011328 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0908 GMT 1 May 86

[Text] Washington, 1 May (TASS) -- President Reagan, who is on the Indonesian island of Bali, is having a meeting there today with foreign affairs ministers of member-countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), of which Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, and Brunei are members.

Great significance is attached to the meeting by official Washington, which has for a number of years been trying to achieve a regeneration of the association into a military-political group obediently following the lead of U.S. imperialist policy. In imposing a course of confrontation with their neighbours on ASEAN members, the U.S. Administration is striving to portray as the original reason for the tension in Southeast Asia the presence in Cambodia of Vietnamese volunteers who are carrying out their internationalist duty there by rendering aid and safeguarding the security of the People's Republic of Kampuchea. The paper, THE WASHINGTON POST, notes that at his meeting with ASEAN member-country ministers, R. Reagan will stress "concern at the Vietnamese presence."

The aim of such a maneuver is to deflect attention from the real reasons for the continuing acute situation in the region, the peace and stability of which is threatened by the endless attempts of exterior forces to hamper the process of national rebirth in Cambodia. Using the so-called "Cambodia question," Washington would like to alienate and set against each other the countries of Indochina and ASEAN, and to "legalize" foreign interference in the international affairs of the PRK. In frightening ASEAN with a false "Vietnamese threat," Washington is particularly not concealing its calculations that the formation of a kind of "second front" in the region will enable the United States to restore its own military presence there.

U.S. PRESSURE ON ASEAN STATES SCORED

PM011447 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 30 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[Candidate of Historical Sciences G. Grammatchikov article under the rubric "Imperialism -- Generator of Aggression and Adventurism": "Where ASEAN Is Being Pushed"]

[Text] The facts convincingly attest that the United States, whose military adventures in Southeast Asia suffered total failure in the recent past, is once again regarding that region as a sphere of its "vital interests." And its schemes allocate a special role to the ASEAN countries (Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, and Brunei). Ignoring the will of the majority of those countries, Washington is not abandoning its attempts to give their political and economic grouping the nature of a military alliance which would be obedient to the Pentagon and hold the "forward line of defense in the Pacific." For, as the recent Soviet Government statement emphasized, "Certain U.S. and Japanese political circles picture the future of the Asian and Pacific region only in the form of confrontation among various countries." It is significant that Washington also regards the ASEAN states as future members of a so-called "Pacific community" which could in the long term be transformed into an exclusive regional grouping and into yet another militarist bloc.

The United States has not yet been able to turn ASEAN into a military bloc. Confronted with the ASEAN leaders' overt reluctance to try on the military uniform made in Washington, American strategists have decided to act little by little, drawing the countries of the region into their nets one by one.

And Thailand -- a country linked to the United States by agreements in the military sphere and a country where American military bases were located in the past -- has been chosen as the chief target. Washington has spared no efforts to fan confrontation between Thailand and the countries of Indochina: It is for just this purpose that the United States openly supplies gangs of Khmer reactionaries with weapons. It is for this purpose that the Thai Army is supplied with huge quantities of very sophisticated arms. The United States is preparing to supply Bangkok with F-16 fighter-bombers, and is supplying armored carriers and artillery pieces. Two Thai F-5E fighter squadrons are being equipped with systems which increase the fire power of these aircraft and their bombing accuracy. The Thai air defense system is being modernized.

The sinister purport of these deliveries is obvious. A Thai-American agreement on "emergency military deliveries" was signed at the end of last year, permitting the Pentagon to use Thai military installations. The next step was taken during Weinberger's visit: It was decided to hold consultations on creating huge arms dumps in Thailand for the American Rapid Deployment Force. It is impossible to disagree with the opinion of those Bangkok newspapers which believe that the siting of these dumps not only poses a threat to Thailand's sovereignty and security but will also lead to the exacerbation of regional conflicts.

There has recently been a significant increase also in so-called "military aid" to all the ASEAN states. Last year the U.S. Congress allocated to military programs $180 million for the Philippines, $100 million for Thailand, $43 million for Indonesia, and $11 million for Malaysia. For comparison, we will point out that the United States appropriated just $4.8 million for all technical cooperation programs for ASEAN.

It should be borne in mind here that the United States is imposing on the ASEAN countries arms worth more than the sums allocated by the United States as "military aid." In point of fact, it is this very "aid" that is the yeast that is causing the ASEAN states' military spending to grow.

By drawing the association's member-states into the channel of militarist preparations, the United States is doing considerable harm to their economies, forcing them to divert increasingly sizable resources away from the solution of acute socioeconomic problems. Thus, Thailand's military budget has increased 200 percent in recent years and reached the impressive sum of $1.7 billion. This year military spending will amount to one-fifth of the national budget. Military appropriations are also growing rapidly in the other ASEAN countries.

Forecasts by specialists regarding the ASEAN countries' economic development are rather gloomy. A considerable slump is expected in export sectors of the economy. "Hard times," Britain's FINANCIAL TIMES writes, "lie ahead for the Southeast Asian countries." ASEAN is being involved in the arms race process simultaneously with the growth in the immediate U.S. military presence in the region. The U.S. flag flies over several bases and other military installations in the Philippines. They include two bases of special significance -- the Clark Field Air Base and the Subic Bay Naval Base, where 12 ships of the U.S. Navy and 9,000 sailors and marines are permanently stationed. "Everything is there -- from barrels for shipboard guns to cans of dog food," the weekly WALL STREET JOURNAL writes.

The Subic Bay Base has recently begun to be enlarged in accordance with a Pentagon instruction on stepping up the U.S. Navy's combat readiness in the Asia and Pacific region. Clark Field is also being modernized. Its new runway is designed for aircraft carrying nuclear weapons.

The presence of nuclear weapons at these bases represents a special danger. Some 90 percent of all the ships of the U.S. 7th Fleet which call regularly at Subic Bay have nuclear charges on board.

It has become known that the United States intends to deploy at least 200 more nuclear bombs in dumps at the base. The Philippine METRO MANILA TIMES had every reason to write: "The creation of large stocks of nuclear weapons on our country's territory means turning the archipelago into a hostage, a target in the event of a nuclear conflict." There is no doubt that it is precisely the existence of the American military bases in Southeast Asia that is the chief obstacle to the achievement of the ASEAN states' noble aim of turning the region into a nuclear-free zone.

The American military presence in the region is a subject of profound concern to the public of the ASEAN countries. "U.S. strategy," the FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW writes with good reason, "makes it virtually impossible to realize the ASEAN countries' desire to create a zone of peace, freedom, and neutrality in Southeast Asia." In imposing its military presence on the ASEAN countries' peoples, the United States substantiates these actions with the help of a favorite ploy — the "Soviet threat" myth. The ASEAN countries are also being intimidated with "Vietnamese expansion." Both historical facts and the true state of affairs nowadays are ignored here.

The efforts which the USSR is making in an endeavor to ease tension in the region are well known. The USSR supports the idea now being discussed of creating a nuclear-free zone in Southeast Asia. The states of Indochina pursue a constructive policy of setting up a dialogue with the ASEAN countries.

As for the U.S. militarist course, it is in flagrant contradiction with the fundamental interests of the peoples of the region.

TASS VIEWS U.S. 'MILITARIZATION' OF GUAM

LD281022 Moscow TASS in English 0958 GMT 28 Apr 86

[Text] New York April 28 TASS -- The U.N. Secretariat has characterised Guam Island, which is central to the U.S. war preparations in the Pacific, as an important U.S. military base in the western Pacific. It points out in a paper that 368 nuclear munitions, including artillery shells, air bombs and depth charges, have already been deployed on the island.

According to U.N. figures, the American military are controlling one-third of the territory of the island. The largest facilities are those of the U.S. Air Force and Navy. The Andersen Air Force Base, for instance, accomodates the 43rd Wing of the U.S. strategic Air Force, including B-52 nuclear-capable strategic bombers. It was announced in July 1983 that five B-52's were deployed on Guam and that nine more would be added to them. The 3rd Air Force Division operates in the Pacific to the west of the date line and also in the Far East and in Southeast Asia.

The Andersen base, according to the paper of the U.N. Secretariat, also is a satellite and submarine tracking centre.

The U.S. Navy also has major facilities on Guam, including ports, repair and servicing facilities for the U.S. 7th Fleet, communication centres, ammunition depots and oil storages.

The militarization of Guam is making very fast progress. Spending on military development projects during the last U.S. fiscal year reached $85 million and this year $86 million. The Pentagon is planned to spend more than 250 million dollars on the construction of new military facilities on Guam over the next five years.

Shevardnadze Speech

PM281404 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 27 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Friendship That Has Stood the Test of Time"]

[Text] E.A. Shevardnadze gave a luncheon in B. Chnoupek's honor. The luncheon was attended by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of culture; K. Antonov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; USSR ministers and other officials; those accompanying B. Chnoupek; and CSSR Ambassador to the USSR M. Zavadil.

Addressing the guest, E.A. Shevardnadze said: Your official friendly visit to the Soviet Union, Comrade B. Chnoupek, is taking place during an important period in the life of our countries. The 27th CPSU Congress and the 17th CPCZ Congress have outlined impressive programs for accelerating the social and economic development of our countries. Their fulfillment will strengthen still further the positions of socialism, its prestige, and influence in the international arena.

Our talks, Comrade Chnoupek, are intended to fill with specific content the principled accords reached during M.S. Gorbachev's meetings with G. Husak and to put into day-to-day practice the foreign policy decisions of the CPSU and CPCZ congresses.

We are glad that they have confirmed the friendly nature of Soviet-Czechoslovak relations, the strengthening interaction of our countries in the international arena, and have been useful to both sides.

The complete mutual understanding and common views and assessments of all the matters under discussion are natural. After all, the fraternal alliance between the CPSU and the CPCZ, the Soviet and Czechoslovak peoples, is the life-giving source of our cooperation.

We are at one in assessing the present international situation and the causes of its deterioration.

Through the fault of American imperialism and its allies, the world has approached a dangerous line, the crossing of which would mean destruction for mankind.

Certain circles in Washington are behaving like the militarist maniacs who were caustically ridiculed by Karel Capek 50 years ago. They said that they would rather have the whole of mankind die of the White Plague than agree to disarmament and the conclusion of a treaty on peace among all peoples for all time.

Some 50 years have passed. During that period the world has been through a war of unprecedented scale and consequences. Mankind has learned a lot. But, unfortunately, there are still plenty of people who are fond of military adventures and who are prepared to trample on the peoples' freedom and independence for the sake of selfish imperialist interests.

The whole world is watching with alarm the development of the situation in the Mediterranean that has been aggravated to the utmost by American imperialism's new criminal actions. How else can one qualify the U.S. banditlike attack on Libya, a sovereign country and a member of the United Nations Organization, than mockery of international law and an act of undisguised brigandage. The Soviet Union, together with its allies, together with the overwhelming majority of states and peoples, wrathfully condemned this lawlessness and arbitrariness of the American Administration. We openly stated that Washington's reckless actions damage Soviet-American relations, and East-West relations as a whole.

In these conditions -- and we have every reason to say this, the defensive alliance of states of the Warsaw Treaty is the most important factor for preserving peace and security in Europe, and also in the whole world. The combined might of the Warsaw Treaty members is a real, insurmountable barrier to those harboring aggressive plans in respect of the states of the socialist community.

At the same time, it is the hope and support of all peace-loving countries and peoples in the struggle for independence and social progress.

Being aware of its historic responsibility for the fate of the world and socialism, for the future of the peoples on earth, the socialist community is firmly holding the initiative in the cause of averting nuclear war, achieving progress in the field of disarmament, easing international tension, and developing extensive and mutually advantageous cooperation between states with different social systems.

Real prospects of ridding Europe of the mountains of nuclear and chemical arms are opened up by the Soviet proposals contained in the 15 January statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The proposal for a considerable reduction of armed forces and armaments in Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals, set forth recently in Mikhail Gorbachev's speech in Berlin, is a serious supplement to the program of nuclear disarmament, further developing it and making it more concrete.

It is our view that the process of reducing conventional armaments and armed forces in Europe -- that could be started with the armed forces of the two alliances, while constantly preserving the existing balance in this field, and subsequently joined by other European states -- should be carried out in combination with and with due account for our program of nuclear disarmament. In specific terms, the intention would be to reduce operational-tactical nuclear armaments deployed in the European zone, as well as conventional armaments.

The implementation of these proposals would considerably lower the level of military confrontation in Europe and strengthen peace and the security of all states on the European Continent.

Czechoslovakia's vigorous foreign policy activities, its weighty contribution to strengthening the unity and cohesion of the socialist community, to the pursuance of the coordinated course of the fraternal countries in the international arena are highly appreciated in the Soviet Union. It gives us special satisfaction to note Czechoslovakia's growing prestige in the international community, the growing support for its foreign policy initiatives, in particular for the proposal made by it jointly with the GDR to create a zone free of chemical weapons in central Europe.

Initiatives in international matters, and I want to emphasize this particularly, come into being as a result of a collective exchange of views with our allies. Here a special role belongs to the now regular meetings of the top party and state leaders of the fraternal countries. So there is a comradely and actually continuous exchange of views on how to merge the forces of socialist countries more effectively in the efforts to achieve a radical restructuring of international relations on the basis of just democratic principles and turn the idea of an all-embracing system of international security, set forth by the 27th CPSU Congress, into a reality.

We say again and again: We are not lacking in determination to work patiently, perseveringly, and persistently for an all-round development of international cooperation, for civilized relations with all countries, for the solution of the most complex problems. We say: Let not even the slightest chance be lost in achieving disarmament, strengthening the security of peoples, and ensuring the peaceful cohabitation and cooperation of states with different social systems.

The Soviet Union, together with Czechoslovakia and all the fraternal socialist countries, has done and will continue to ensure the continuation of the human race.

Chnoupek Speech

PM281420 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 27 Apr 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report on CSSR Foreign Minister B. Chnoupek speech at 25 April Moscow luncheon in his honor under the general headline: "Friendship That Has Stood the Test of Time"]

[Text] B. Chnoupek noted in his speech that the Czechoslovak people are impressed by the bold aims set by the 27th CPSU Congress, which provided clear answers to current vitally important questions. The congress documents contain a tremendous wealth of theoretical ideas and a scientifically substantiated realistic program for the dynamic development of Soviet society, and they clearly outline the prospect of accelerated advancement during the current historical period of radical change in the USSR.

The congress decisions provide an inspiring example also for our party. We have stated this with utmost emphasis at the recent 17th congress of our Communist Party, which called for a struggle for a new way of thinking and a new style in tackling pressing problems and reaffirmed our immutable foreign policy orientation whose cornerstone is the unswerving strengthening of friendship and development of cooperation with the fraternal Soviet Union.

The close collaboration between our parties, their Central Committees, and their general secretaries, Comrades Gustav Husak and M.S. Gorbachev, greatly influences the content of our relations. We take pride in the fact that they are characterized by complete trust, unity of views, and extensive cooperation in all spheres and that -- in the words of the Soviet delegation at the 17th CPCZ Congress -- they serve as an example of socialist internationalism.

We welcome all the positive elements that have emerged so clearly in our mutual relations since the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum, and not only in our relations. They include, first and foremost, the strengthening of the principle of democracy which manifests itself noticeably in the attentive approach to the experience of the fraternal parties and countries based on their history and distinctive features, and also in the passing on of the unique and in many respects universal experience of the first socialist country. All this makes for a high degree of unity and close coordination of foreign policy steps within the framework of the Warsaw Pact. We especially value the proposals put forward at our congresses for the further improvement of international socialist division of labor.

Referring to socialist Czechoslovakia's successes, the minister noted that the nationwide discussion which is under way in the country in connection with the general election is showing that the country's working people understand the demand of the time. They are not afraid of restructuring; they want to work in the new way.

I would like to emphasize once again that our party and the entire Czechoslovak people fully support the peace program of the Soviet Communists, he said. We intend to use every means at our disposal to contribute more effectively to its translation into reality, to seek to achieve peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems, the establishment of the groundwork for a system of comprehensive international security, and the complete elimination of all arsenals of nuclear and chemical weapons, and primarily Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles in the European zone.

Judging by appearances, the anti-Geneva syndrome which expressed the egoistic interests of the military-industrial complex is building up across the ocean. Preparations are under way to implement the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative and measures to create a European option of this program are being studied. All this is creating difficulties not just in Soviet-American relations, it is poisoning the international atmosphere as a whole. However, we believe that even at the current complex stage there is no room for pessimism. We seek to strengthen stability and trust between European states.

The minister noted further that Czechoslovakia will continue to develop friendly relations and multifaceted cooperation with the countries that have embarked on the path of independent development. He resolutely denounced the aggressive U.S. imperialist policy of neoglobalism in all its manifestations. This applies also to the barbaric U.S. attack on Libya, whose consequences go far beyond the Mediterranean. We seek a peaceful and just settlement in all seats of tension.

The luncheon was held in a cordial, comradely atmosphere.

Ligachev, Medvedev Receive

LD251851 Moscow TASS in English 1750 GMT 25 Apr 86

[Text] Moscow April 25 TASS -- Yegor Ligachev, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Vadim Medvedev, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, have received today Bohuslav Chnoupek, member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, Czechoslovak foreign minister, who is currently on an official friendly visit in the Soviet Union.

Views were exchanged on topical international issues. It was pointed out that the situation in the world remains tense and acute. The continuing nuclear explosions, the aggressive actions of the United States against Libya have further aggravated the international situation. Under those conditions the countries of the socialist community are consistently pursuing their principled and responsible foreign policy directed at ensuring a change for the better in the situation in Europe and the world.

Bohuslav Chnoupek pointed out that the Czechoslovak leadership actively supports the new Soviet initiatives, which were put forward by Mikhail Gorbachev in Berlin. The implementation of the proposals concerning a considerable cut in all components of land forces and the tactical aviation of the European states and the corresponding forces of the USA and Canada deployed in Europe, as well as the initiative in the field of a ban on chemical weapons will make it possible to lower the level of military confrontation. An important prerequisite for improving the atmosphere in Europe is the renunciation of any attempts at calling in question the fundamental of the postwar set-up and the existing borders, the overcoming of the revanchist tendencies manifesting themselves in the FRG's policy.

It was stressed in the course of the meeting that the decisions of the 27th Congress of the CPSU and the 17th Congress of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia open prospects for a deepening of all-round cooperation between the two fraternal countries, their close cooperation in the international arena. The striving was expressed to perfect further the practices of coordinating the foreign policy actions of the allied states in the name of ensuring peace and security of the peoples.

The meeting proceeded in a cordial, friendly atmosphere.

Chnoupek Comments on Talks

AU291307 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 26 Apr p 7

[CTK Moscow report on an interview given by Bohuslav Chnoupek, CSSR minister of foreign affairs, on 25 April to Czechoslovak journalists accredited in Moscow, on his 24-25 April talks with Eduard Shevardnadze, USSR minister of foreign affairs]

[Text] B. Chnoupek said that the talks conducted with Eduard Shevardnadze as well as the receptions by Yegor Ligachev and Vadim Medvedev were held in a cordial comradely atmosphere, an atmosphere that was strongly influenced by the historically important 27th CPSU Congress. Its Leninist adherence to principles, great exactingness, and philosophy of innovation also became a powerful source of inspiration for the 17th CPCZ Congress. This fact alone determined the highly constructive course and very productive results of the meetings in Moscow.

We proceeded with basic invariables, from the fact that the entire modern history of our country conclusively demonstrates that friendhsip, alliance, and all-round cooperation with the Soviet Union on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism fully correspond to the vital interests of our nations. We have always been able to rely on the Soviet Union, be it in questions of our country's security or in questions of building a developed socialist society. The treaty of alliance of 6 May 1970 provides the foundation of these ties; its conclusion has been followed by a number of bilateral contracts, agreements, and plans.

The systematic coordination between the CPCZ and the CPSU, their Central Committees, and their general secretaries, Gustav Husak and Mikhail Gorbachev, provides the guarantee for a successful future development of these ties.

As we jointly stated during the talks with Minister Shevardnadze, we regard as the main task in promoting Czechoslovak-Soviet relations the interlinking in the most efficient manner of the two countries' economies and scientific-technical potentials and the setting up of good conditions and incentives for the development of higher forms of cooperation such as production sharing, specialization, and direct ties in manufacturing and research and development. We drew attention to the growing importance of close cooperation between ideological and scientific institutions, mass information media, and trade union, youth, and other social organizations. This also applies to an area of such importance as the exchange of cultural values, an area that is utilized by the broad public, B. Chnoupek said.

Our talks confirmed our absolute unanimity of views on all problems of international life. We proceeded from the profound analysis of the current complex international situation that was carried out by the 27th CPSU Congress. We exchanged views on how to efficiently translate into practice by joint coordinated efforts the specific, comprehensive, and realistic peace program of Soviet Communists, with which our party and our people full identify. We want to make use of all means and possibilities to contribute the best we can to building the foundations of an all-embracing system of international security, in the interest of enforcing permanent peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems. We described as the optimal path toward this end the important Soviet proposals of 15 January, aimed at the complete liquidation of all arsenals of nuclear and chemical weapons by the year 2000, and of 18 April, aimed at concluding an agreement on substantially limiting all segments of ground forces and tactical air forces in Europe and simultaneously reducing the number of nuclear weapons of operational-tactical designation.

We expressed concern over the policy of imperialism, be it the continuing pursuit of the project of militarizing space and the fact that the NATO path indulges in speculation about its European variant, the continuing deployment of new American intermediate-range missiles in Western Europe, or the revival of revanchism. These are all very serious signals. The nuclear age and, as we might add today, the space age, as well as a number of negative manifestations in the West and particularly in the United States, that constitute a breach of the spirit of Geneva, require a new method of political thought, however. Its outcome must be the realization that the traditional notions about the possibility of acquiring military supremacy are no longer valid.

We also exchanged views on the further development of the Helsinki process. We expressed the conviction that, with good will on the part of all Final Act signatories, it is possible to achieve positive results at all forums of negotiations -- from Stockholm to Vienna. We also discussed the situation in areas regarded as hotbeds of tension, which the most reactionary forces are fomenting from the Middle East, across the south of Africa, up to Central America. We resolutely condemned the policy of imperialism and neoglobalism in all its forms -- from the exploitation of the economic dependence of developing countries down to the policy of state terrorism. We particularly condemned the brutal U.S. attack against Libya, to which innocent people fell victim.

In concluding, I would like to stress that we preceive our talks with Eduard Shevardnadze as an important part of informal, businesslike contacts between representatives of the two fraternal countries, which at the same time constitute a manifestation of new qualities in relations among states of the socialist community in the spirit of the conclusions of the congresses of our Communist Parties, B. Chnoupek said.

Discusses Results of Visit

[CSSR Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek discusses results of visit "prior to his departure" from USSR; remarks in Slovak with superimposed translation; from the "Vremya" newscast -- recorded]

[Text] We can note with satisfaction that our mutual relations have now reached a level for which it is difficult to find historical parallel. That applies to all areas, including the political, economic, and cultural spheres, as well as others. But there are still reserves; and we note that in the area of economic cooperation there is in fact a need to proceed along new paths and to seek new trends -- primarily, direct contacts between our economic units.

As for foreign policy issues, we said clearly that we fully support the initiatives of the fraternal socialist countries, primarily the plans of the Soviet Union, which are aimed at strengthening peace and disarmament and returning to the mature phase of the policy of detente. We also fully support the recent proposals which were made in Berlin.

I would like to say that on all these issues we found full understanding and full agreement. This, I would say, is already a tradition which has come about between our people and parties.

Joint Communique

PM301435 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 27 Apr 86 First Edition p 4

["Soviet-Czechoslovak Joint Communique" -- PRAVDA headline]

[Text] B Chnoupek, member of the CPCZ Central Committee and Czechoslovak foreign minister, was in the Soviet Union 24-26 April 1986 on an official friendly visit at the invitation of the Soviet Government.

Ye.K. Ligachev, member of the Politburo and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and V.A. Medvedev, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, received B. Chnoupek and in the course of a cordial, comradely conversation briefed him on the multifaceted work that is under way in the USSR in connection with the implementation of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. In turn, B. Chnoupek reported on the results of the 17th CPCZ Congress and on progress in the implementation of its objectives.

Talks were held between E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR foreign minister, and B. Chnoupek, during which questions of further strengthening bilateral relations and topical problems of the international situation were discussed.

The ministers expressed satisfaction with the dynamic development of relations between the USSR and the CSSR, which are based ont he unshakable principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism and are developing fully in accordance with the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance of 6 May 1970. They noted the special importance of the meetings between M.S. Gorbachev and G. Husak for further deepening fraternal Soviet-Czechoslovak friendship and improving comprehensive cooperation.

The consistent and complete implementation of bilateral agreements and accords and of reciprocal commitments within the CEMA framework meets the vital interests of the fraternal peoples, promotes the further development of the two countries' cooperation, and contributes to the acceleration of the soicoeconomic development of the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia.

The sides declared that in the present complex international situation the constant strengthening of the Warsaw Pact states' unity and cohesion on the basis of the concerted foreign policy course elaborated at the Political Consultative Committee conference in Sofia and at other meetings of the leaders of the fraternal parties and allied socialist states is of special importance for consolidating peace in Europe and throughout the world. Satisfaction was expressed with the results of the recent session of the Foreign Ministers Committee in Warsaw, which was described as an important forum for the practical coordination of the Warsaw Pact countries' foreign policy stances and actions.

It was noted during the talks that the main source of tension in the present complex international situation is the aggressive militarist policy of the United States which, relying on the support of its closest NATO allies, is escalating the arms race in an attempt to achieve military superiority so as to be able to dictate its will to other countries and peoples. Involving the U.S. allies in the Strategic Defense Initiative program and complementing it with a European variant of the "star wars" program pursues the aim of destroying the strategic equilibrium and undermining international security.

The ministers emphasized that it is necessary to take vigorous steps in order to stop the arms race that is being fueled by the United states, prevent it from spreading to space, eliminate the nuclear threat, and move on to disarmament. B. Chnoupak, on behalf of the Czechoslovak Government, expressed himself in favor of the implementation of the program for the elimination of nuclear and other mass destruction weapons by the end of this century as set forth in the 15 January 1986 statement of the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and in support of the fundamental principles for the creation of a comprehensive international security system put forward at the 27th CPSU Congress.

The participants in the talks believe that the complete elimination of Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe would be an important step toward eliminating the threat of nuclear war and strengthening security in Europe and throughout the world, and that this would simultaneously resolve the question of the operational-tactical means deployed as a countermeasure to the deployment of the Pershing and cruise missiles in Western Europe.

Expressing the conviction that a total nuclear weapons test ban would be an effective practical step toward the elimination of these weapons, the USSR and the CSSR resolutely denounced the irresponsible policy of the U.S ruling circles which have passed up a unique opportunity to end Soviet and U.S. nuclear explosions right now and thereby create a real basis for the disarmament process.

The new Soviet proposals for the implementation, subject to appropriate verification [kontrol], of large-scale reductions in conventional arms and armed forces in Europe, including all components of the ground forces and tactical aviation of the European states and the United States and Canada deployed on the European Continent, accord with the fundamental interests of all European countries. The USSR's constructive proposals for the complete and general elimination fo chemical weapons and the industrial base for their production, put forward at the Geneva Disarmament Conference, pursue the same aim. The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia share the view that these far-reaching new Soviet initiatives make it possible to accelerate the conclusion of an appropriate interational convention. The USSR declared its full support for the initiatives put forward by the CSSR and the GDR and also Bulgaria and Romania to create chemical weapon-free zones in central Europe and the Balkans. respectively, as an important step toward this aim.

The conviction was expressed that the implementation of the proposal of the allied socialist states to create nuclear-free zones in Europe would contribute to improving the international climate and ensure greater stability and mutual trust.

Attaching fundamental importance to the development and strengthening of the all-European process, the ministers expressed the view that substantial accords that strengthen trust and security in Europe should be sought at the Stockholm conference prior to the all-European meeting in Vienna. They noted that this meeting must be thoroughly prepared for and held in a positive tone so as to impart a strong new impetus to the continuation and development of the Helsinki spirit.

The USSR and CSSR resolutely denounced the barbarous bombings of peaceful Libyan cities by U.S. aircraft. They emphasized that this act of direct U.S. aggression against Libya -- a soveriegn state and UN member -- creates a real threat to peace not just in the southern Mediterranean but also beyond. Expressing full solidarity with the Libyan people in their efforts to rebuff the imperialist aggression, the sides demanded an end to the U.S. adventurist policy in the Mediterranean and emphasized again the vital necessity for the swiftest transformation of this region into a zone of stable peace and cooperation.

The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia expressed concern in connection with the continuing escalation of tension in Central America. They denounced U.S. encroachments on Nicaragua's sovereignty, expressed solidarity with the heroic struggle of the Nicaraguan people, and expressed themselves in favor of a just political settlement in Central America. Here it was stressed that the main precondition for achieving such a settlement was the end of the hostile U.S. actions against Nicaragua and of U.S. interference in the affairs of Central American states.

The Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia reaffirmed their resolve to strenthen their collaboration in the foreign policy sphere with a view to forestalling a further exacerbation of the international situation and ensuring the continuation of a constructive East-West dialogue and a return to detente in world affairs.

The talks were held in an atmosphere of fraternal friendship, complete mutual understanding, and unity of views on all the questions discussed.

On behalf of the Czechoslovak Government, B. Chnoupek extended an invitation to E.A. Shevardnadze to pay an official friendly visit to the CSSR. The invitation was gratefully accepted.

[TASS report: "Supporting Soviet Initiatives"]

[Text] Bucharest, 24 Apr -- Romania wholly supports the program put forward by the Soviet Union for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons and believes it necessary to reach agreement at the earliest opportunity on ending the siting of medium-range missiles in Europe and subsequently worldwide, N. Ceausescu, general secretary of the RCP and Romanian president, stated at the opening here today of the General Union of Trade Unions Congress.

The ending of nuclear tests as the first step in banning nuclear weapons and eliminating them everywhere is of immense importance, he stressed. We urge the United States to end nuclear tests and join the USSR's test moratorium. It is also necessary for the program for universal disarmament to envisage conventional arms and armed forces reductions.

Romania resolutely condemns the aggressive U.S. actions against independent and sovereign Libya and the bombing of Libyan cities by U.S. aircraft.

TRADE UNION FESTIVAL CONCLUDES IN POLAND

PM301526 Moscow TRUD in Russian 27 Apr 86 p 3

[Special correspondents Yu. Vasilkov and V. Yermolayev dispatch: "The Warmth of Friendly Meetings. Soviet Trade Union Festival in Poland Concluded"]

[Text] Warsaw, 26 Apr -- Today Warsaw saw off the participants in the USSR Trade Union Festival in Poland. Emissaries of Soviet working people met people from Poland's enterprise collectives and trade union aktivs all over the country during the week.

The initial results of the festival were summed up at a meeting between the leadership of the National Trade Union Accord [OPZZ] and the Soviet trade union delegation. OPZZ Deputy Chairman R. Sosnowski and AUCCTU Secretary K.Yu. Matskyavichyus primarily emphasized the great usefulness of the event that took place. During their meetings, Polish and Soviet trade union aktiv members spoke not only about achievements but also about unsolved problems, the serious tasks concerning the implementation of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, and preparations for the forthcoming 10th PZPR Congress. The Soviet and Polish trade unions have quite a few concerns in common: participation in the process of the acceleration of their countries' economic development and in the solution of problems, like the provision of housing for working people, the organization of active leisure, and many others. Therefore, mutual ties acquire particular importance. The Soviet Trade Union Festival in Poland marked the beginning of a qualitatively new stage in cooperation. It displayed yet again the desire of the two countries' working people to develop their friendly ties.

The festival was distinguished by the fact that the conversations were of an exceptionally frank and lively nature. Both Polish and Soviet trade union aktiv members expressed the desire to continue the building tradition and to at last overcome the elements of officialdom in bilateral trade union meetings, in order to focus their attention on the specific study of experience in all spheres.

Polish journalists asked the Soviet comrades to share their impressions of today's situation within the Polish trade union movement. The head of the Soviet trade union delegation noted the gratifying fact that the positions of Polish trade unions are being consolidated and that they display a more active desire to participate in the solution of topical economic problems.

"We attach particular attention," K.Yu. Matskyavichyus said, "to the development of direct contacts at labor collective level. It is important for workers in both countries to have an opportunity to spend some time at a related plant or factory and share front-line experience directly at the workplace. A start has already been made in this type of cooperation, and it will be actively developed." Mention was made at the final meeting of the need to make socialist international competition and the cooperation of working people in border regions more active and broader in the near future. The "first swallows" have also appeared in this sphere.

Specific examples were cited by Soviet trade union delegation members I.A. Shinkevich, chairman of the Railway Transport and Transport Construction Workers Union Central Committee and member of the CPSU Central Auditing Commission, and V.K. Dvurechenskiy, chairman of the Kaliningrad Oblast Trade Union Council.

Meetings between representatives of the Soviet trade union press with journalists from Polish trade union publications took place within the framework of the USSR Trade Union Festival in Poland.

TASS REPORTS SED-SPD TALKS ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

LD302231 Moscow TASS in English 1152 GMT 30 Apr 86

[Text] Berlin April 30 TASS -- A joint working group of the Political leadership of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany (SED) and the faction of the Socialist Democratic Party of Germany (SPD) in the West German Bundestag has held its regular meeting here centering on the issue of setting up a zone free of battlefield nuclear weapons in central Europe, ADN news agency has reported.

The working group welcomed the Soviet proposals on mutual reduction of conventional weapons and armed forces in Europe, including all components of land forces and tactical aviation, of the European states and also of the United States and Canada stationed in Europe. These proposals were put forward in the speech made by the general secretary of the 11th SED Congress.

In conjuncture with the production of new types of binary chemical weapons planned by NATO to be begun in the United States and their possible deployment in Europe, the working group holds that this should be avoided. This step would inflict an irreparable damage on the Geneva talks on outlawing chemical weapons. Therefore, the initiative for setting up a zone free of chemical arms in Europe is exceptionally urgent today.

It was decided to hold the next meeting of the working group in Bonn on May 30. The Berlin meeting was attended by Hermann Axen, member of the Political Bureau and secretary of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany Central Committee, and Egon Bahr, member of the Social Democratic Party of Germany Presidium, chairman of the Subcommission on Disarmament and Arms Control of the West German Bundestag.

FINNISH OFFICIALS FAVOR ORDERING ANOTHER AES

LD011153 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0830 GMT 1 May 86

[By TASS Correspondent Nikolay Gorbunov]

[Text] Helsinki, 1 May (TASS) -- The small town on the coast of the Gulf of Finland, bearing the beautiful name Loviisa, was destined to contributed a glorious page to the history of not just its own country, but of the friendly, mutually advantageous relations between the USSR and Finland. An AES [Atomic Emission Spectroscopy] -- the first in Finland's nuclear energy industry -- was built here with cooperation between Soviet and Finnish design and construction organizations. Its first unit, with the capacity of 440 megawatts, was made operational in 1977; the second, similar one, in 1979. These yield in excess of 10 percent of the total electricity generated in the country. Moreover, the station's potential, especially that of its reactors and turbines, has made it possible to increase the station's capacity to between 460 and 465 megawatts each. [as received]

Ever since the station became operational -- it is the first station built in a capitalist country with the USSR's assistance -- public and experts alike have focused increased attention on it. And it has withstood this test of time. The most respectable scientific journals, scrupulously taking stock of all the aspects of the AES' operation, emphasize that the Loviisa AES is one of the world's best in its class.

This was emphasized by (Anders Palmgren) at a Helsinki press conference. He made this statement for numerous representatives of the Finnish press, being fully aware of all the ins and outs in this area. [as received] A. Palmgren, since the commissioning of the Loviisa AES, worked as an engineer. Subsequently he became its director and is currently the managing director of the "Perusvoima" joint-stock company, set up in order to build and subsequently operate a new AES in Finland. A. Palmgren regards further development of cooperation with the USSR in the field of nuclear energy as essential.

Sigurd Slaetis, the mayor of the town, likewise has a high opinion of the Loviisa AES. In an interview for SUOMENMAA he emphasized that following the commissioning of such a major industrial project as this, not just the town, but also the neighboring regions had gained in strength. The construction of the AES makes it possible to improve considerably the situation in the region, S. Slaetis said. And this is of great importance. I do not want to speculate on the accident that has taken place at an AES in the USSR.

Naturally, it is a serious matter and it, too, must be seriously studied. We, however, are of the view that it would be natural to order a new AES from the USSR.

KRASNAYA ZVEZDA WRITER ASSESSES FRENCH DEFENSE SYSTEMS

PM011048 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 30 Apr 86 Second Edition p 3

[V. Pustov article: "Changes Expected"]

[Text] In connection with the new correlation of political forces in France and the creation of a government of representatives of right-wing parties, questions connected with building up and improving the might of the French Armed Forces are being discussed widely inside and outside the country. The prevailing opinion among observers is that France's stance with regard to the creation and targeting of nuclear arms, the so-called "European defense community," and the NATO bloc will not undergo any substantial changes.

It is expected that questions will be decided more promptly in favor of building a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier and creating a new Hades missile with a nuclear warhead and a range of more than 300 km. The present French Government, the American weekly DEFENSE NEWS writes, advocates replacing the single-charge, silo-housed S3 missiles and obsolescent Mirage IV bombers with a medium-range mobile Mirved ballistic missile.

According to a report in the newspaper L'HUMANITE, in May French strategic aircraft will be armed with the new ASMP missile that has a nuclear charge with a yield several times greater than that of the atom bomb which the Americans dropped on Hiroshima. This missile can also be equipped with a neutron or a chemical charge.

It is believed that more substantial changes will affect conventional arms and the funding of the military program. According to press data, the government is promising to adopt a new military program and increase appropriations for military purposes, bringing them up to the level of four or more percent of the total value of the gross national product.

The 47,000-strong French rapid action force modeled on the U.S. interventionist Rapid Deployment Force is now being criticized. "The point is," the weekly DEFENSE NEWS maintains, "that France has neither the rear support nor the airlift ability to deploy and support five divisions in the event of military operations." In this connection the weekly recalls that when French troops were transferred to Chad several years ago, C-5 Galaxy and C-141 Starlifter transport aircraft of the U.S. Air Force were used to deliver heavy weapons and combat hardware there.

Observers do not rule out changes in other spheres of French military policy as well.
